SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 11, 1916.

Rev. Boyd V. Switzer, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee with a grateful sense of appreciation for Thy wondrous providence over us throughout all the years of our national life. Do Thou, we beseech Thee, guide us still in the solution of the difficult problems of the present day, fraught with such tremendous issues for all the world. Give to Thy servants whom Thou hast called to such high positions of responsibility and trust wisdom, discernment, and courage, that they may be indeed servants of the Lord God Almighty, in the highest, truest, divinest sense colaborers together with Thee in the fulfillment of Thine own eternal plans for the human race. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2409) to authorize the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at the city of Steubenville, Jefferson County, Ohio, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 320. An act to authorize the county of Bonner, Idaho, to construct a bridge across Pend Oreille River; and

H. R. 775. An act granting the consent of Congress to J. P. Jones and others to construct one or more bridges across the Chattahooche River between the counties of Coweta and Carroll, in the State of Georgia.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 9) providing for the printing of 100,000 additional copies of the final report of the Commission on Industrial Relations, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

DEVELOPMENT OF WATERWAYS.

Mr. SHIELDS. From the Committee on Commerce I report back with amendments the bill (S. 3331) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on the disposition of the bill now under consideration known as the Philippine government bill I shall move that this bill be made the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, MINNESOTA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 2497) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between Anoka and Hennepin Counties, State of Minnesota, and I submit a report (No. 38) thereon. I direct the attention of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to the bill and report.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT M. M'CORMICK.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2999) granting a pension claim to Robert M. McCormick, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GERTRUDE KELLEY GILBERT.

During the delivery of Mr. NEWLANDS's speech,

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator permit me, out of order, to introduce a bill?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Out of order, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is going to make the statement that there is a rule of the Senate that no Senator while on the floor shall be interrupted for the purpose of introducing a bill or making a report. The Chair having made that statement, the bill will be received and referred.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I was going to say that I think that is a wise rule, and I withdraw the bill. I think the suggestion of the Vice President is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But it is never obeyed. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 3404) for the relief of Gertrude Kelley Gilbert was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I offer an amendment to the pending Philippine government bill, which I send to the desk. I ask that the Secretary may read it and that it be printed and lie on the table until it can be reached for consideration in regular order.

The amendment was read and ordered to be printed and to lie on the table, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas to the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, viz: Insert at the end of the bill the following:

"SEC. —. The President is hereby authorized and directed to withdraw and surrender all the supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty now possessed or exercised by the United States in or over the people and territory of the said Philippines, and he shall on behalf of the United States fully recognize the independence thereof as a separate and self-governing nation and the sovereignty and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof. This transfer of possession, sovereignty, and governmental control shall be completed and become absolute within two years from the date of the approval of this act, under the terms and in the manner hereinafter prescribed. For the purpose of a complete and prompt compliance with this direction, the President is hereby invested with full power and authority to make such orders and regulations and to enter into such negotiations with the authorities of said Philippines or others as may be necessary to finally settle and adjust all property rights and other relations as between the United States and the said Philippines, and to cause to be acknowledged, respected, and safeguarded all of the personal and property rights of citizens or corporations of the United States resident or engaged in business in said Philippines or having property interests therein. In any such settlement or adjustment so made in respect to the rights and property of the United States as against the said Philippines the President shall reserve or acquire such lands and rights and privileges appurtenant thereto as may, in his judgment, be required by the United States for naval bases and coaling stations within the territory of said Philippines.

"Immediately upon the passage of the act, the President shall invite the cooperation of the principal nations interested in the affairs of that part of the world in which the Philippines are located, in the form of a treaty or other character of binding agreement, whereby the cooperating nations shall mutually pledge themselves to recognize and respect the sovereignty and independence of the said Philippines, and likewise mutually obligating themselves, equally and not one primarily nor to any greater extent than another, to maintain as against external force the sovereignty of said Philippines for the period of five years from the taking effect of such treaty or agreement. If any of the nations so invited to join in such undertaking shall decline to do so, then the President shall include as parties to such convention or agreement such nations as may be willing to join therein and to assume such obligations; and if none are willing to so unite therein, then, the President is authorized to give such guaranty on behalf of the United States alone."

Mr. LEWIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, which was read and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Amend Senate bill 381 by adding as a new section at the end of the bill the following:

"SEC. —. That there shall be vested in the President and by this act he is authorized to enter into any convention or agreement with the administration in power in the government of the Philippines for payment to the United States of such sum of money, and by such method of installment as may return to the United States the sums of money heretofore paid for and for the purposes and government of the Philippine Islands or such part of said sum expended by the Government of the United States as to the President of the United States shall under all the circumstances appear equitable."

FEDERAL JUDGES.

Mr. CUMMINS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 66), which was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate be directed to make inquiry and report: First, as to the number of Federal judges now holding office who are unable to discharge substantially the duties of a judge; second, whether, under the Constitution, such judges, if any, can be removed from office; third, if they can be so removed, what is the proper procedure.

COMMERCIAL FERTILIZERS AND COTTON PRODUCTION.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I submit a resolution which I ask may be read, and I will ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 65) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain as nearly as possible, and to report to the Senate as soon as practicable, the following: The amount of commercial potash, nitrogen, and phosphoric acid available for fertilizer purposes, and the price of each of these articles as compared with the prices for 1913; and to furnish any suggestions as to relieving the situation in case the amount of any or all of these is insufficient or the price prohibitive.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I think that my colleagues from a portion of the cotton-growing States at least will agree with me that the situation which confronts the cotton outlook for this year is perhaps the most serious that has been known since the Civil War. The extraordinary yield per acre and the amount that we have been producing have been almost entirely dependent upon the use of commercial fertilizers. That is particularly true of all the coastal plains of the South Atlantic States. Some investigation on my part has revealed a situation which shows not only in my opinion but in the opinion of those to whom I sent communications that, regardless of an increase in yield, the yield per acre next year will possibly be reduced one-half.

I have before me now telegrams in response to a telegram sent by me to bankers, merchants, farmers, and millmen, asking what, in their opinion, would be the effect upon the yield per acre if the present fertilizer situation is not relieved. In response to that telegram I have a few here that I desire to read and place in the RECORD. Here is a telegram from one of the largest cotton producers in my State:

WEDGEFIELD, S. C., January 10, 1916.

Senator E. D. SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

Lack of potash will have disastrous effect on yield of cotton in this State following a year of depletion like last year. Conservative estimate of loss in productiveness will be 25 to 33⅓ per cent.

EUGENE E. AYCOCK.

I also have one from the secretary of the Commission of Agriculture of North Carolina. He estimates that without relief from this situation the yield per acre in North Carolina will be reduced to 250 pounds per acre.

From Alabama the ex-commissioner of agriculture telegraphs:

MONTGOMERY, ALA., January 8.

Senator E. D. SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

Situation here gloomy on account boll weevil; fertilizers high; little credit; farmers demoralized. These conditions greater factor, in my judgment, than price of potash.

W. H. SEYMOUR.

Here is one from a banker in North Carolina:

CHADBOURNE, N. C., January 8, 1916.

Hon. E. D. SMITH,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Your wire this date. Unless potash is used in growing cotton I think yield will be reduced 20 per cent in this State. In addition to this, the high prices of phosphoric acid and ammoniates will largely reduce by use, and probably another 20 per cent reduction in yield will result.

J. A. BROWN.

I ask that the remainder of the telegrams which I have received may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

The telegrams are as follows:

NORFOLK, VA., January 11, 1916.

Senator E. D. SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

Your telegram to our Columbia, S. C., office referred to us here. Due to uncertainty in getting nitrate soda from west coast of South America, we are not quoting. We quote muriate potash containing 50 units at $475 per ton. Our price for muriate in 1913 was $42 at port. Our price on 8-2-2 goods in 1913 was $20; our present price, $32. Sixteen per cent acid phosphate in 1913, price $13.25; 1916, price $18. These prices are delivered to interior railroad stations. Advance in ammoniated goods, due to increased price of potash to extent of $9.20 and increased cost of manufacturing sulphuric acid incident to very high freight rates on pyrites. If we were to charge for potash on the basis of present market price, the 2 per cent or potash alone would be $19. We are not quoting goods containing more than 1 per cent potash, except in bright tobacco belt. Entire stock of potash in this country is not sufficient to supply even 1 per cent to all the cotton territory, and our investigations would indicate it exceedingly doubtful if planters can afford to use potash at prevailing prices. We are advocating the use for cotton of fertilizer without potash.

F. S. ROYSTER GUANO CO.

CHARLESTON, S. C., January 10, 1916.

E. D. SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Telegram received. Can not quote nitrate of soda nor potash, as we have none to offer and, having no potash, can not offer complete fertilizers mentioned. Quote to-day acid phosphate, 16 per cent bulk, at $13.25 cash f. o. b. our factory. Have already sold at both higher and lower price than this during 1913. Our price averaged about $8.50.

ETIWAN FERTILIZER CO.

CHARLESTON, S. C., January 10, 1916.

Hon. E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Telegram received. If present fertilizer situation, especially as to potash, is not improved, the yield of cotton in 1916 should be below normal.

H. H. FICKEN.

COLUMBIA, S. C., January 10, 1916.

Hon. ELLISON D. SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

Your wire. Lack of potash will materially reduce yield of cotton on all lands in South Carolina except the red-clay soils. To state percentage would be a guess, but with normal season advance of potash would reduce yield probably 15 per cent, in my judgment.

RICHARD I. MANNING, Governor.

COLUMBIA, S. C., January 10, 1916.

E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Replying to yours of 8th, lack of potash will not seriously affect production on red lands of Piedmont and foothill country. On lighter soils in that section will probably affect yield per acre 15 per cent. Average reduction and yield per acre without potash for rest of State might, perhaps, be 25 to 30 per cent. If potash is not secured, in my opinion, there would be a reduction of 20 per cent for whole State, or falling off of 300,000 bales from an acreage normally producing 1,600,000 bales.

E. J. WATSON, Commissioner.

SUMTER, S. C., January 10, 1916.

E. D. SMITH,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Wire received. My opinion is that on account of present potash-kainit situation cotton yield will be reduced 50 per cent.

W. B. BOYLE.

SUMTER, S. C., January 8, 1916.

Senator E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Answering yours, would say yield would be cut 50 per cent.

NEILL O'DONNELL.

GREENVILLE, S. C., January 9, 1916.

Senator E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

The present fertilizer situation looks very bad for cotton. The yield will be forced 35 per cent per acre in this State.

H. B. TINDAL.

GREENVILLE, S. C., January 8, 1916.

Hon. E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Your telegram received. The yield of cotton will be greatly reduced if the fertilizer situation is not improved.

JOHN T. WOODSIDE.

LYNCHBURG, S. C., January 8, 1916.

Senator E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Without potash our crop will be 40 per cent short.

T. N. GRIFFIN.

BENNETTSVILLE, S. C., January 8, 1916.

Senator E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Our opinion is impossible to make anything like average crop without potash. Possible production, two-thirds average crop.

C. E. BREEDEN.

RALEIGH, N. C., January 8, 1916.

Senator E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Two hundred and fifty per acre.

W. A. GRAHAM.

ATLANTA, GA., January 10, 1916.

Senator E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Scarcity of high-grade ingredients for fertilizers, in my opinion, will affect materially production of cotton in Georgia in 1916.

J. D. PRICE,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. These telegrams are all of the same tenor, Mr. President. I consider that the situation which confronts not only the South in the production of cotton but the world at large in the use of it demands that the present Congress shall take some action looking to the relief of the situation which promises to seriously cripple one of the great, if not the greatest, agricultural industries from the export standpoint and from the standpoint of our supremacy in the textile world.

I hope that the resolution will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

STATISTICS RELATING TO WAGE EARNERS.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 67), which was read and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to investigate and report, as far as it is practicable, upon the mortality and the disability by accident or by disease incident to or resulting from the various occupations in which the wage earners of the United States are engaged.

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD—BANK CLERKS' PAY.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask for the consideration of two resolutions heretofore submitted by me. The first resolution for which I ask consideration is resolution No. 62, which is addressed to the Federal Reserve Board.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution for which consideration is asked by the Senator from Illinois. The resolution will be read.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 62) submitted by Mr. LEWIS on the 8th instant, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board of the United States be requested to enter upon investigation of the amounts paid as salaries to the employees and subordinate officers of all such banks of the United States as are under the jurisdiction of the board, with the object of suggesting an increase of compensation to the employees consistent with the service done and the increased cost of living expenses.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the resolution requests that the Federal Reserve Board shall examine into the question of the compensation of the bank clerks under the jurisdiction of that board and ascertain whether they are being paid in proportion to the work they are doing and consistent with the cost of their living.

I desire to inform the Senate that I have received very many complaints—and I dare say many of my colleagues in the Senate have received the same—from many bank clerks from Illinois and throughout the country employed in banks that are within the general Federal reserve system, complaining of the compensation they are obtaining, the long hours of work, the increased burdens that are put upon them by the new conditions, and further complaining that their compensation is so small and the increased cost of living is so great that they can not with dignity or comfort exist.

I merely ask by this resolution that we request the Federal Reserve Board to make an examination into the subject for themselves, with a view of ascertaining what would be just respecting such employees to make appropriate suggestions to the employers, confident as I am that these employers will do full justice to such employees. I respectfully ask that the resolution be put upon its passage.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like to say for myself that I shall vote for a measure of the kind proposed by the Senator from Illinois with all the heart and earnestness that I have. It might, however, be extended to almost every department of our service. I feel that this is a proposition against which none will contend, that the average clerk or Government employee is paid a most miserable stipend, and, with the expenses that surround the average clerk, his situation is quite as bad as is that of the bank clerk. I would broaden the scope of such a proposition to include all the departments of our Government.

Mr. LEWIS. Of course, Mr. President, this particular resolution being addressed to the single object of the bank employees, and being directed to the Federal Reserve Board, could hardly cover the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I understand that.

Mr. LEWIS. But an amendment on his part, of course, can not be avoided, and would be supported by me. I submit the resolution, and ask unanimous consent that it be adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator what is the exact purport of this resolution? Is it sought by the action of the Senate to compel the banks to increase the pay of their clerks? Do I understand that to be the proposition?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, there is no object whatever on the part of the resolution for the Senate to interfere with the banks. It is to request the Federal Reserve Board to have examinations made of the banks under their jurisdiction, so far as they can consistent with their official duties, respecting the salaries and compensation of bank employees, and then to make such recommendations to the different banks which are members of the Federal Reserve System as would appear to be just under the circumstances. I confide in the spirit of fairness and justice of the bank officials and proprietors to feel that they would cooperate in the suggestions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I see no harm in that, but I can not see what earthly good the resolution will do.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois if this resolution is so broad in its scope—I have not read it—as to include in the examination the employees of all banks or only those of national banks?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator that the object of the resolution is to comprehend any banks that are within the system of the Federal reserve, any bank that is either part of the system now or may under the law come within the system.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a question only of the Senator from Illinois: What authority has the United States to determine the compensation of employees in either the Federal reserve banks or in the national banks?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator from Iowa by saying: No more than the Industrial Commission had power to investigate and ascertain the facts of wages and pay of industrial institutions and make recommendations concerning the wages and conditions of labor of these industrial employees. The public sentiment of justice would have to be relied upon, and that has invariably operated with success; for we have no power, answering the Senator from Iowa, to enforce upon any bank what wages it shall pay, and we would have no way of executing by any form of process either the figures that might be arrived at by this examination or the suggestions which might be made as a result of it. It must be left to the sense of justice on the part of the banks themselves after the suggestions have been made by the Federal Reserve Board, which has jurisdiction of the banks.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, Mr. President, may I ask one more question? Ought not the resolution be broad enough so that the Federal Reserve Board could report the comparative compensation paid to these employees, taking into account the compensation paid to other people who work just as hard?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, there is a great deal to be said in favor of the suggestion of the Senator; but this was in my mind, and I submit it to him, that it was not as wise nor just to tender a resolution that authorized publicity as to the compensation which men were obtaining, or as to private matters touching their relation with their employers, or of the private business of the banks and their aids. I felt it would be better to leave the matter in the hands of the board, to use their own judgment as to the method they would employ and the suggestions they would make to the banks; but I will consider any amendment which the Senator from Iowa desires to tender upon that subject after I see its purport.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I desire to inquire whether the Senator has made any investigation as to the authority of the Federal Reserve Board to inquire of the banks as to the compensation they pay their clerks. Have they that authority? I am not familiar with any provision of law which gives it to them. I understand that they have certain powers with reference to the banks, but whether they have power to ask them what is the compensation or salaries of their employees I am not informed.

Mr. LEWIS. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that the suggestion made by him does raise one of the doubtful questions in connection with this resolution or any other of its nature. I invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Federal Reserve Board assumed the right to suggest the rates of interest for borrowers when they are too high or when they are too low. Under this power the board lately came to the rescue of the cotton people of the South and the grain farmers of the West. Upon the assumption that the board has complete jurisdiction to suggest, and in some degree direct, the rates to be paid to the bank by borrowers, or the rates to be asked by the bank—under that general supervisory clause, I assume, I answer the Senator from New Jersey, that the Federal Reserve Board has a right to investigate the compensation the employees of the institutions are receiving from that same profit obtained by the banks from their borrowers. I assume, I also may say, that they would probably report the fact if they found a legal obstruction. Assuming that that power is with them under the general law, I tender the resolution with a view of reaching the desired result without embarrassment to banks or the employers.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Illinois whether he would not be satisfied to have this resolution referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, in view of the fact there is some doubt as to the power of the Federal Reserve Board, and also in view of the fact that the board is already overburdened with new duties?

The Committee on Banking and Currency will meet this week, and I can promise the Senator an early report.

Mr. LEWIS. I will not object to that, if it is desired by the Banking and Currency Committee to have the resolution go there, so that any Senator might present any views connected with it. Therefore, if it is desired by the Committee on Banking and Currency that this resolution go before it, so that anyone who so desires may be heard, I move that it be sent to the Committee on Banking and Currency for a speedy hearing on its merits.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What action does the Senator desire to have taken in regard to Senate resolution 61, which the Secretary will read?

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 61) submitted by Mr. LEWIS on January 8, as follows:

Resolved, That the Board of Federal Trade Commission report at its earliest convenience to the Senate whether the duties of the commission imposed upon it by the law and demand of the provisions of the act creating the said commission render inconvenient or embarrassing the assuming the duties and offices of a tariff board, as provided in the terms of that certain tariff-board authorization of Congress of the period of 1909 and 1910 contained in appropriation bills of the Congress of 1910 and 1911.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, upon the request of a brother Senator, I have consented to have that resolution go over for a while. I ask that it may lie over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over. Morning business is closed.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2409) to authorize the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at the city of Steubenville, Jefferson County, Ohio, which were, on page 1, line 5, after "Virginia," to insert "its successors and assigns," and, on page 1, line 7, after "River," to insert ", at a point suitable to the interests of navigation."

Mr. CHILTON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (No. 9) of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the final report of the Commission on Industrial Relations be printed as a House document and that 100,000 additional copies be printed and bound in cloth, of which 70,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 30,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have just observed the reading of the House concurrent resolution providing for the printing of the final report of the Commission on Industrial Relations as a House document; also 100,000 additional copies to be printed for distribution to the public, 70,000 of which shall be for the use of the House and 30,000 for the Senate. On December 7, 1915, I introduced a resolution similar to the one which has passed the House, and on the same day the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] introduced a resolution somewhat similar, but his resolution provided for the printing of the testimony also.

Mr. President, during the past month and a half I have received several hundred requests for copies of the final report of the Commission on Industrial Relations. A large number of these requests have come from the State of Arizona, but many have come from other States. I urge at this time upon the Committee on Printing that they give the concurrent resolution which has been passed by the House prompt, speedy, and careful consideration, with a view of reporting it back favorably, so that the public in general may have a sufficient number of these reports to satisfy the demand. I am anxious to see the report and testimony printed, so that the information contained therein may be available to the general public.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 320. An act to authorize the county of Bonner, Idaho, to construct a bridge across Pend Oreille River; and

H. R. 775. An act granting the consent of Congress to J. P. Jones and others to construct one or more bridges across the Chattahoochee River between the counties of Coweta and Carroll, in the State of Georgia.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. NEWLANDS obtained the floor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nevada will yield to me, I should like to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Philippine bill; and then, under that order, the Senator from Nevada can take the floor and address the Senate on the subject he has in mind.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That will be perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 381.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

A DEMOCRATIC LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the Democratic Party, after nearly three years of power, is about to enter upon a presidential campaign, in which its acts of legislation and administration will be up for criticism or commendation. The Democratic Party is within a year of an election which will determine whether its lease of power shall continue or end. We have the time and the power before the next election to do every beneficial thing we ought to do and to undo every mistaken thing we ought not to have done. It is a time for mutual candor and counsel and for efficiency of methods in devising and carrying out a definite legislative program.

Prior to the last presidential election I wrote for The Independent an article entitled "Possibilities of a Democratic Administration," in which, after stating that the Democratic Party was opposed to radical readjustments and would feel its way gradually and prudently toward needed reforms, I expressed myself as follows:

By pursuing this policy we will avoid the hysterical outcry against needed economic changes, which has so often beaten us; we will pacify labor, the manufacturer, and law-abiding wealth, and we will steer clear of business depression and panic, than which nothing could be more prejudicial to our success either at the election or in subsequent control and administration of the Government. We must break up the habit of swinging like a pendulum from reform to reaction through the intermediate process of panic.

My purpose in this article was to do what I could to diminish the apprehension, which a political and congressional experience of many years convinced me existed among those engaged in manufacture, trade, banking, transportation, and enterprise generally, that somehow Democratic success meant such radical action regarding so-called business interests as to produce industrial paralysis and accompanying unemployment and want.

I believed that the divisions in the adversary party offered an opportunity for success and I was desirous that we should not only by our campaign utterances allay unreasonable apprehension, but also by our subsequent legislation and administration proceed to our ultimate goal by such reasonable and moderate stages as would command the confidence of the business interests generally of the country and insure a renewal of power.

The wisdom of this policy seemed all the more apparent in contemplation of the historical fact that since the commencement of the Civil War, a period of 55 years, the Democratic Party has been in power nationally only 11 years, and of that period only 4 years consecutively, in every instance losing power as the result of the fear or the resentment of the business classes with their accompanying conditions of unemployment, which made most potent with the workingman "the full-dinner-pail" argument and caused them to reluctantly yield to the persuasion and coercion of our opponents.

THE RECENT ELECTIONS.

We were in similar danger at the congressional election of 1914; a danger only averted by the European war, which brought into sudden contrast the President's policy of watchful waiting regarding Mexico with the mad haste of the European nations as they rushed into war, and which made that policy as popular as it had theretofore been unpopular. The realization that similar prudence would keep us out of European complications saved the Democratic Party at the last election from the defeat which would have surely come as the result of the general prostration of business, popularly attributed to our economic legislation.

It is true that the "intervening process of panic" alluded to in my article has not been experienced, but an industrial and commercial depression has been experienced and has been coterminous with Democratic control of legislation. It would not do to charge this to the European war, first, because that war though injurious to our production and trade in its inception has since become a stimulant to production and export, and, second, because the commencement of this depression antedates the European war and was contemporaneous with our legislation regarding the tariff, banking, and trade.

The recent elections indicate that we will be in similar danger at the coming presidential election, unless the European war continues, and makes the President's sagacious and firm handling of our foreign affairs the overshadowing issue. But if that war soon comes to a close, and the manufacture of munitions ends, and added to this source of unemployment our markets now protected by the war from invasion are overwhelmed by the cheap products of the nations just emerging from war and eager to get back their gold, we may have not only an aggravated industrial depression to meet, but a financial condition fruitful of paralyzing caution. Such conditions may make the election turn not upon our foreign policy, but upon domestic economic conditions, and the "Full-dinner-pail" argument may again be potential.

We are about to face a united Republican Party, chastened by adversity and eager to persuade, and the question is whether the Democratic Party, having done much under this administration in the interest of genuine reform, is again to be thrown out of power and deprived of the opportunity of continued usefulness, simply because an intervening period of depression subjects us again to the charge of "Democratic hard times," with its accompanying loss of votes.

All this is possible, although the general trend of Democratic legislation has been most commendable. We have revised the tariff downward, and have lopped off its excesses. We have given the country a better financial system, one which in time will do much to correct the spasmodic expansions and contractions which in the past have drifted us to unemployment and distress. We have taken hold of the trusts and through a Trade Commission have opened the way for the peaceful correction of abuses by investigation, publicity, and regulation, thus making the commission a friendly guide to business instead of a relentless prosecutor. And yet the course of this legislation has seriously alarmed the interests affected, and has caused them to exercise caution in enterprise restrictive of employment and productive of want and suffering. It is safe to say that the manufacturing, the banking, and the large corporate interests are hostile to the Democratic Party, and that their employees are also preparing to throw their weight against it simply because its administration has not brought good times, but on the contrary has, in their judgment, brought bad times.

ANALYSIS OF DEMOCRATIC LEGISLATION.

It seems to me that it will be profitable, therefore, to analyze our legislation and the causes of this depression before we proceed to consider what can be done to relieve it.

And here let me say that little criticism can be made of the general character of our action. It was distinctively in the line of needed reforms. Much of it probably fell somewhat short of the goal we should ultimately reach, but it may be that in the limited period we went too far and too fast and thus endangered the vehicle which carried these reforms. There was no necessity for this, for the opposing party was not willing to go a tithe of the distance we contemplated and could never reproach us with not going far enough.

A considerable experience in public life covering a period of 23 years, and commencing with the second Cleveland administration, has convinced me that no political party can hope to remain in power which adopts radical instead of evolutionary methods of reform. This is due to the fact that radical methods involve the alarm of the beneficiaries of existing abuses, and their consequent caution and timidity so arrest activity in industry as to produce unemployment and the attendant dissatisfaction of the workers. Thus their vote finally falling in line with the vote of the employing interests, overthrows all plans for needed reforms and puts reaction again in power.

This experience has impelled me, not only in Congress by the presentation of various legislative programs but in the national conventions by platform declarations, to endeavor to secure assurance from the Democratic Party that while it had in view the ultimate triumph of correct principles in production, trade, banking, and transportation, and had its goal clearly in view, it would approach that goal by a gradual process which would not prove unduly disturbing.

THE TARIFF.

Regarding the tariff, my view was that our undertaking was not to immediately adopt a theoretically correct tariff system, but simply to climb gradually down from the protective heights upon which the Republican Party had placed the manufacturing interests of the country; not to jump down at the risk of destruction, but to climb down slowly and laboriously with a view to preserving, as far as practicable, every American industry and injuring none.

In the Denver platform, after a long struggle in the committee on platform, my amendment inserting the word "gradual" before "reduction" was put in the platform on the tariff, and at Baltimore this action was put in different phrase by declaring that in making tariff reductions the Democratic Party would not injure or destroy any legitimate American industry. I felt that in these two planks we were giving peace bonds to the country which would assure the interests affected that the process of reform would be so gradual as to avoid sudden reversals.

When we came to a practical realization of what we had promised by legislation, we were inclined, I thought, to go too fast and too far. It is not necessary to allude to our action regarding sugar, the basic agricultural product of all our insular possessions as well as the arid and semiarid States. It is conceded, I believe, that the need of revenue necessitates the repeal of the further reduction determined upon. Nor will I refer to other special reductions. My general view was that the reduction on dutiable articles from an average of over 42 per cent to an average of less than 25 per cent was too great, taking away possibly the entire margin of profit and even more. I also felt that whatever might be our view as to the reductions ultimately attainable under a perfect tariff system, we should not seek to make them completely operative immediately; that as we had been a hundred years in creating tariff abuses we could safely take 10 or 20 years in correcting them, and so I proposed that the reductions called for by our bill should be apportioned over a period of years instead of putting them into immediate effect. I held out upon this issue until the very day of the final vote and only surrendered to the party judgment as the result of action in caucus, which put upon me a responsibility I was unwilling to assume, of making the party will ineffective.

The effect of the tariff legislation was what I feared it would be. The tying up of production in this country was the result not of a malicious effort of the manufacturers to teach the country a lesson, but of the caution and timidity which can in many cases be proved to be without reason, but which nevertheless always exist under like conditions.

While I accept my full share of responsibility for the tariff bill, which I with apprehension of immediate ill effect voted for, candor will not permit me to assert, as many of its supporters do, that world-wide causes were at the bottom of the general contraction of production following its agitation and passage. It is an indisputable fact that the paralysis came before the European war was inaugurated, and that its causes were mainly domestic.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM.

So also with banking legislation. Instead of providing some simple method for mobilizing the banking reserves of State and National banks under the control of a nonpartisan board or commission resembling the Interstate Commerce Commission, which would gradually through powers of investigation, publicity, correction, and recommendations to Congress, work out further reforms, we were intent upon legislation which alarmed the banks by the largeness of our proposals. Hence the immediate effect of the movement which had in view the loosening of credit, with a view to aiding our manufacturing institutions in an economic crisis resulting from tariff reductions, was a restriction of credit, prejudicial to the entire business of the country, both manufacturing and commercial. I believe that a more moderate course would have secured the cooperation and support of the banks instead of their hostility. The essentials required were mobilization under Federal direction of a part of the reserves of both National and State banks for use at the point of financial danger or stringency, and the creation of a Federal board for such direction. As persuasion (not force under the interstate-commerce power) was to be applied to the State banks, it was necessary to make the scheme of legislation simple and attractive.

The State and National banks being once unionized under such a scheme, it would have been easy later on to enlarge and perfect such legislation under the guidance of experience. The State banks would have been willing, in consideration of the advantages of such a protective union, to allow a part of their capital in the shape of reserves lying in their vaults to be mobilized under Federal direction, but they were unwilling to subscribe more capital and turn it over to Federal direction and control. They also hesitated to turn themselves over to the inquisitorial and correctional powers of the comptroller's office.

As it was we failed to make the Reserve Board nonpartisan, tied it to an executive department through the membership of the Secretary of the Treasury and the comptroller, subjected the member banks to the investigating and correctional powers of a single partisan comptroller instead of the composite judgment of a quasi judicial nonpartisan board, and exacted additional and unnecessary capital from member banks, thus organizing the reserve associations into profit-making institutions, a purpose entirely foreign to their nature as protective organizations. The result is that the union of banks is incomplete, the State half being outside and the National half inside the reserve organization, with the prospect that those outside will remain so unless the law is modified.

Had we simply provided for the union and membership of State and National banks in Federal reserve associations without exacting further contributions of capital than a certain percentage of their existing reserves and then federalized all these associations under the direction of an independent, nonpartisan Federal Reserve Board with power of investigation and correction similar to those of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Trade Commission, and had we merged in this board the comptroller and all his powers, functions, and employees, as we did with the Bureau of Corporations and the Trade Commission, and provided for the gradual adaptation of the State banks to Federal requirements and practices, thus avoiding radical and immediate changes in conditions, little opposition would, I believe, have been encountered in the State banks. I think it would be wise to shape the way for legislation on the above lines during this session by making the Reserve Board nonpartisan, merging the comptroller's office with all the powers and duties in the Reserve Board, and doing away with all capital requirements beyond the percentage of reserves of member banks now required.

THE TRUSTS.

So also with the trusts. I have believed for years that we should proceed in trade as we have in transportation to correct abuses through a regulating trade commission with limited powers at first, which could be gradually extended through the experience of the commission itself and as a result of their recommendations regarding needed legislation. Had we confined our legislation to this we would not have experienced the alarm and apprehension created in commercial and productive business generally by the Clayton bill, which even if entirely defensible in its principles, was regarded as producing changes in business innocently conducted and not subject to the charge of abuse as were many of the large interests aimed at.

We have this in production, in banking, and in trade, brought about changes in legislation which have had a restrictive effect upon the production and commerce of the country, an effect clearly experienced before the European war broke out and not at all chargeable to it.

It is unnecessary to demonstrate that any of these changes were in essence of principle wrong. All I contend is that ignorance, timidity, and alarm should always be taken into consideration in framing reform legislation, and that the party that does not take them into consideration is likely to be swept out of power before the full benefits of its policies, radical perhaps at the start, but containing the seed of a proper evolution, are realized, and this I fear will be our situation at the next election unless meanwhile we apply ourselves to conciliatory measures that will abate and diminish this apprehension.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSES.

What, then, are the problems before us? First, preparedness, the problem which the President wisely presents first for our consideration. Without taking up minutely his proposals, I will say that there is no need of hysteria upon this subject. Force, both civil and military, is needed for the maintenance of public peace and order, whether domestic or international. Whether this force shall be employed for aggression or defense, for conquest or the maintenance of the public peace and order, is a mere matter of training, and I have no doubt our legislation will be in the latter direction.

We must of course provide a rational scheme of national defense. I do not see why this should involve a very large increase in the total expenditure. The difficulty with us has been not so much the extent of our preparations as the inefficiency of our administration. The national defense is a unit. The Army and Navy should be brought into coordination through some governing board or council of national defense which will bring them into teamwork instead of encouraging competition between the War and the Navy Departments as to which shall get the larger appropriations. The experience of other countries, such as Australia and Switzerland, points the way toward both efficient and economical administration. The cooperation of sovereignties should be secured, both national and State, in this work, and a system should be devised under which more officers shall be trained, for each officer in time of emergency will become the organizing force of a hundred men, whereas the single private soldier becomes only individually useful in time of war. Our military system should not involve the maintenance of a large standing army, but the training of our youth in everything that relates to military discipline and the use of arms, such training to be developed under a system of education which will instill in the mind of every boy soldier that he is being trained not for conquest but for national defense and the maintenance of order and peace under laws and tribunals, both domestic and international, created for that purpose. Thus the military instinct will develop not upon the lines of aggression and conquest but upon the lines of the maintenance of civil order.

AN AUXILIARY NAVY.

Next comes the question of an auxiliary navy. It is indisputable that if war comes our fighting ships would be derelict in the ocean without the carrying and supply ships necessary to support them. Thirty or forty million dollars should be immediately provided for this purpose, as we have no adequate merchant marine. While I supported the administration shipping bill which failed at the last session owing to Democratic defection, I felt that it would have been wiser to shape the legislation on the lines which I have been urging for years, and which would have passed almost unanimously if substituted for that measure. It provided for the construction of auxiliary ships of the Navy, to be used in time of war to support the fighting ships, and in time of peace manned in part by the Naval Reserves for opening up new routes of commerce and mail service, under lease to operating companies upon terms fixed by a commission consisting of the Secretaries of the Navy and Commerce and the Postmaster General. Such a proposal would have had the support of Democrats who were devoted to the traditional individualism of the Democratic Party and who had not yielded to the doctrine of collectivism supported by many Democrats but not yet adopted as a party tenet. I think it unwise to put such men under condemnation by the party and believe it would be wiser to shape the legislation in such a way as to make it meet directly the demands of the Navy and only incidentally the requirements of foreign commerce. Later on, the needed ships having been acquired, the scheme could be enlarged if deemed advisable, so as to cover the purpose of the administration bill.

A TARIFF BOARD.

The newspapers state that the administration is considering the danger arising from a dumping process which is likely to be used by foreign nations after the war. It is possible that our fears in this respect may be exaggerated, but it is clear that the warring countries will make an immense effort to get back some of the gold which has drifted to this country, and the best method of doing so will be to sell us their goods at low prices. Their wage level will be probably lower than ever, and this country may feel the effects of a flood of merchandise which will not only displace the products of domestic labor but also, by withdrawal of a large portion of our stock of gold, create alarm. The effect of this can be imagined, particularly when the large force now employed in munition making is released from work. It is doubtful whether such a process of cheap sales unaccompanied by proof of conspiracy to depress and control our markets can be antagonized by the exercise of the powers of the Trade Commission regarding fair competition. It possibly can be met by slowing down the entry of such goods, either by taxation or by limited exclusion. A tariff board could be organized with power to act in either way under a definite rule fixed by Congress or the Trade Commission could be authorized to exercise such power. I believe in a tariff board and have for years advocated its creation, but it will be difficult to harmonize such legislation with the traditions of the Democratic Party or the phrases which it has canonized, such as "Protection is robbery," although the Democrats of the Senate united with the Progressive-Republicans to provide a tariff board in the Payne-Aldrich bill. So far as I am concerned, I decline to yield to the tyranny of a phrase and am willing to restrict invading forces, whether of goods or men, if the interests of the country require, but much counsel within the party will have to be taken on this subject.

PUBLIC WORKS AND RIVER DEVELOPMENT.

We should not in my judgment halt in the constructive work of the country. On the contrary, having thus far devoted ourselves to correctional legislation which, however necessary, has been disturbing to business and the employment of labor, we should press vigorously constructive work employing labor. We are not doing enough constructive work. We should do more. We should not cut off our public building, but we should see to it that the public buildings are apportioned, not under the present spoils system, which gives an individual post office as spoils to a Congressman or Senator who devotes himself to the job of securing it, but under a broad and comprehensive system, which, through a board or commission composed of experts in construction engineering and architecture, and with the aid of the National Arts Commission, will take in view the requirements of the entire country and every part of it and adapt the buildings to the special uses and requirements of every locality, uniting art with utility in such a way as to make these buildings a perpetual memorial of the intelligence and culture of the time. We are spending many million dollars in a sporadic way in this direction. We should spend more in a scientific, accurate, and comprehensive way under the new plan.

We should take hold of our rivers, not under the spoils bill called the river and harbor bill, as at present, but by separating them entirely from harbor improvements, planning for the complete development of every watershed with its main rivers and their tributaries from source to mouth, having in view the complete regulation of the rivers with all their branches in such a way as to prevent every destructive use and to promote every beneficial use. We are now engaged in dredging channels and in building levees along the lower reaches of our great rivers, to protect both the channels and the adjoining lands from the destructive floods precipitated upon them from the regions above. We should not only maintain this needed work, but we should also control these waters before they reach the period of flood by taking hold of them as soon as they fall from the heavens throughout the country, leading them over the arid lands through storage works and canals, impounding them in large reservoirs for the development of water power, and for use in intensive cultivation, increasing the natural storage capacity of the soil by the development of forests and the promotion of cultivation, which will absorb instead of shedding the waters, thus gradually slowing their progress from our mountains and valleys toward the gulfs, bays, and oceans in such a way as to mass them for beneficial use and to prevent their massing for destructive use, thus stabilizing the flow of the streams themselves, so that instead of being torrential in certain seasons and dry in others they will afford at all times a sufficient flow to maintain their use for water carriage, the cheapest in the world, a carriage which should be coordinated with rail transportation and ocean transportation in such a way as to make them all dovetail to the advantage of commerce.

We are now expending many millions annually in ineffective river regulation. We should expend $60,000,000 annually for a period of 10 years in effective river regulation, which will involve the cooperation of the Engineering Corps of the Army, the Reclamation, Forest, and Drainage Services, the Geological and Coast and Geodetic Surveys, and other scientific services in team work under common plans, and which will also unite the Nation and the States by a system of cooperation, each within their jurisdiction, in the advancement of works which will secure the full conservation of the water resources of the country for every useful purpose. There is, in my judgment, no work so all-inclusive as this, for it involves the promotion of commerce, the reclamation of waste lands suffering either from want of or too much water, the development of forests, the promotion of scientific cultivation of the soil through intensive cultivation, and the development of water power. There is no subject of legislation which presents so many beneficial aspects. And as these rivers are under the jurisdiction of two sovereignties, the national and the State, some method should be found of uniting their powers instead of encouraging them in constant conflicts as to jurisdiction. It would not be impracticable to organize a great industrial army employed in the forests, the rivers, and public works generally, into a reserve force as a part of the national defense.

THE FINANCES.

But where is the money to come from? My answer is additional taxation. This country is not bankrupt—it will readily respond to intelligent taxation which will be spent in a general way for the welfare of the country, and particularly if a large part of the additional taxation is for public works, which will secure employment during a period of depression. Regarding taxation, I am glad to observe that the administration favors the continuance of the existing sugar tax. The duty on sugar has always been a revenue duty. There has never been a period in the history of the Republic that a sugar duty has not existed, except during McKinley's administration, when a bounty was substituted for a tax. This will prevent our revenues from being depleted to the extent of $30,000,000 more, as is threatened by existing legislation.

The second method of increasing our revenue is to extend the area of our income tax. All incomes below $3,000 are now exempt. The limit should be reduced to $2,000 or $1,500, and from this source $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 more annually can be derived.

If more is required it could be obtained under an inheritance tax. It is true the States have largely taken hold of the inheritance tax. It would have been much better had the United States Government inaugurated this tax, for then it would have been uniform throughout the entire country and the individual States could not, as some do, offer asylum to the rich by exempting wealth from this tax. In view of the fact that many of the States have already levied inheritance taxes and an additional tax might be an unjust burden, I would suggest that whatever inheritance tax is imposed should provide that wherever a State has imposed such a tax it should be deducted from the national tax, to the extent, however, of only one-half of the national tax. Thus, under such a system no State now exempting inheritance from taxation would be encouraged in maintaining the present system, for its citizens would have to pay the entire tax imposed by the National Government. The adoption of such legislation by the United States would gradually result in a system under which inheritance taxes would be imposed by every State throughout the country as well as by the National Government; one-half of the total tax imposed upon inheritances, both national and State, would thus go to the respective States and one-half to the National Government. I would deem it advisable to so adjust these additional taxes upon income and inheritances as to do away with the existing war-revenue taxes, many of which are vexatious burdens upon business, leading to evasion, either conscious or unconscious, for my observation is that few people realize how unconsciously they fail to respond to the numerous requirements of the war-revenue tax regarding stamp duties, etc.

There are, of course, other matters of legislation and administration which should be taken up, such as the settlement of the conservation question in aid of the development of our national resources, but I do not refer to them in detail, lest too extended a discussion may involve a confusion of ideas. The main things to be considered in addition to the questions relating to the tariff and banking, above referred to, are the military defense, an auxiliary navy, the public constructive works, and the unlocking and development of our natural resources.

A CONSTRUCTIVE PROGRAM.

Epitomizing what I have said, I urge the following as a constructive program for this session:

1. PREPAREDNESS.

(a) In addition to a moderate enlargement of the Army and Navy, an increase of efficiency by regarding the national defense as a unit through the creation of a national council of defense, consisting of the Secretaries of War and the Navy, and other experts, with authority to formulate and submit plans.

(b) An increase in the military and naval schools, with a view to training officers for the organization and discipline of troops in case of war, and the utilization for this purpose of the schools of agriculture and the mechanic arts, whose fundamental law—the Morrill Act—provides for military training for our youth as a part of the national duty.

(c) National cooperation with the States in a system of public-school education which will train our youth in the use of arms for the national defense; such education, in addition to military discipline and training, to inculcate the fundamental idea that such training and discipline are not for the purpose of aggression or conquest, but for the maintenance of peace and order and in aid of tribunals, both national and international, organized for their maintenance.

(d) Construction of auxiliary ships for our Navy, to be used in time of war in aid of the fighting ships and in time of peace in establishing new routes of commerce and mail to foreign countries, through lease to shipping companies under the control of a commission consisting of the Secretaries of the Navy and of Commerce and the Postmaster General.

2. TARIFF AND TAXATION.

(a) The grant to a tariff commission or the Federal Trade Commission of all the powers of a needed tariff board, including, in addition to the powers of investigation, publicity, and recommendation, the power to protect, under a rule fixed by Congress, American industries against the combination or action of foreign producers and traders intended to unduly displace the products of American industry in our own markets.

(b) An increase in the area of the income tax so as to cover incomes of $1,500.

(c) An inheritance tax which will permit the deduction, to the extent of one-half of the national tax, of similar taxes collected by State governments.

3. BANKING.

Amendment of the national reserve act:

(a) By providing that the Federal Reserve Board, like the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Trade Commission, shall be be nonpartisan and independent of the executive department, eliminating the Secretary of the Treasury and the comptroller, as such, from its membership, and merging the comptroller's office with all its officials, powers, and functions in the Federal Reserve Board.

(b) By doing away with all capital requirements of member banks, except the percentage of reserves now required by law.

4. PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

(a) The creation of an expert board of public buildings, under the Interior Department, which, with the aid of the National Commission of Fine Arts, will take in view the requirements of the entire country regarding public buildings, and, under a rule fixed by Congress, proceed to the expenditure of a fixed sum per annum, not less than $30,000,000, for public buildings.

5. RIVER DEVELOPMENT AND REGULATION.

Providing for the separation of river development from harbor improvements by the creation of a commission composed of the Secretaries of War, Commerce, Interior, and Agriculture, and the cooperation of the services under them, as well as the cooperation of the National Government with the States, in devising and carrying out comprehensive plans for the regulation of river flow with a view to the promotion of navigation, the mitigation of floods through the development of forests and proper methods of cultivation, the storage and control of flood waters for the reclamation of arid and swamp lands and the development of water power, and the creation of an ample fund providing for not less than $60,000,000 annually for 10 years for continuous work.

Mr. President, later on I shall introduce resolutions for a legislative program upon the lines of this speech.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I believe the welfare of the United States requires the establishment of a nonpartisan permanent tariff commission. After the war is over it may easily happen, in my judgment, that unfair practices may be resorted to by manufacturing companies abroad slipping into the United States goods even below cost, and in that way interfere with the normal, proper course of business of our own enterprises in this country.

I wish to say that the establishment of such a nonpartisan tariff commission, which was referred to by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] in his remarks just made, can be carried out upon lines which are entirely harmonious with the policies heretofore pursued by the Democracy. It is not necessary that such a commission should be constructed upon the avowed theory of the so-called "protective" tariff. There are abundant reasons why such a commission should be established regardless of whether a man believes in the protective tariff or whether he does not.

In the first place, every Member of Congress and the executive department should have the opportunity of knowing what the truth is with regard to the factors which enter into the production, the cost of production, and the cost of distribution of any one of the items on the schedules which are important to the interest of the manufacturing establishments in the United States. Every man on the floor of the Senate is perfectly aware that, with the overwhelming volume of testimony poured out before the committee when the schedules are being considered, no man has the time or the opportunity or the ability to completely master the vast mass of conflicting and unreliable testimony submitted, differentiate the truth from that which is false, and arrive at any sufficient knowledge with regard to the items on the schedules.

There are about 4,000 of these items. The evidence taken on the tariff question when I first entered the Senate in 1908, presented to the Members of the Senate, taken on the House side, consisted of 8,000 printed pages. The evidence was taken without the security or protection which would be afforded by a law punishing perjury applied to false swearing before our committees. Men were permitted to come before those committees and state that which was false for the purpose of misleading the legislators. The evidence was in direct conflict with itself, one group of men desiring to have one policy pursued, another the exact contrary, and each giving evidence accordingly. For example, in the bringing in of zinc ore from Mexico, the smelters desiring the lowest possible rate, the miners of zinc ore in Oklahoma desiring the highest possible rate, there was a flat conflict, each one giving testimony at variance with the other, and the legislator, busy as he is with his daily correspondence and with his duties upon the floor and upon his committees, finding it impossible to ascertain what the truth is, justifies a tariff commission which shall accurately ascertain the truth and let the conscientious legislator know what the facts are if he is to pass upon the fixing of these schedules.

For that reason, therefore, a tariff commission is perfectly justified, in order to ascertain the truth with regard to these items on the schedules and in order to keep Members of Congress informed of the changing factors which enter into these questions, because they are going through a constant flux. They are not the same one year with another.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator from Oklahoma allow me to interrupt him with an inquiry at this point?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senate debated in a most energetic and industrious manner, as was done by both sides of the Senate, in the creation of the Federal Trade Commission. Does the Senator see anything incompatible with the duties of the Federal Trade Commission as now prescribed by law from that board entering into duties such as he has defined and which he regards appropriate and necessary for something called a tariff commission?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I should like the Senator's viewpoint, if I do not divert him from his line, as to wherein he sees that the creation of their duties is incompatible, serving as such tariff commission.

Mr. OWEN. That incompatibility arises from the fact that it is not humanly possible for the present Trade Commission to perform its present function completely, much less undertake this work, which will require the entire time of laborious and expert men to ascertain the facts and the factors governing the cost of manufacture and the cost of distribution. There is a limit to human capacity.

Mr. LEWIS. I understand the Senator feels that the present duties put upon the board by the law exhaust their capacity, and that to put this other duty upon them would leave it a burden that could not be performed.

Mr. OWEN. Take such a commission as the Interstate Commerce Commission. In my judgment that commission now is burdened beyond what flesh and blood can bear. I think there should be a method pursued which would always keep in mind what can be accomplished by the officials who are charged with a duty and not put upon them more than they can properly and efficiently accomplish.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire, with the Senator's kind consideration at this moment, to say the object of my query was this: I am desirous of avoiding the creation of any unnecessary commissions or further unnecessary officeholders and adding to the list of extra salaries in view of the condition of the Treasury of the Government and the necessity of the large expenditures that I think will be forthcoming for the preparation of national defense and other objects. It was with that purpose in my mind I took the liberty to inquire of the Senator whether he thought the duties were compatible and simply for that purpose only.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, there is another good reason why there should be established a tariff commission. The great problem which should be worked out, in my judgment, for the welfare and happiness of the United States is to keep the productive energies of this Nation constantly and profitably employed.

Our foreign commerce ought to be enlarged as much as practicable. I believe that our imports are paid for by our exports and that our exports are paid for by our imports; that each nation must keep its own gold supply; that there is no such thing in reality as a balance of trade beyond the narrow meaning of these statistics gathered from partial facts and which are likely to mislead the country by making it appear that in some years we do not receive as much as we send abroad. We always receive the equivalent of what we send abroad either in merchandise or in service or in obligations of debt, our own, perhaps, as at present. There is now pouring back a vast flood of American securities paying for the extraordinary shipment of goods which we are now sending to Europe; but as it is an axiomatic truth that the whole is equal to the sum of its parts. When a man ships a hundred bales of cotton to Europe and receives its equivalent and you multiply such transactions by a hundred thousand or a hundred million, the equation is still the same. We receive an adequate and approximately equal return for that which we ship abroad. Therefore, in order to energize our own activities we ought to enlarge our foreign commerce and our foreign shipments. In order to accomplish this end reciprocal arrangements ought to be made with the authority of the United States.

It is extremely difficult and slow to negotiate and have confirmed a reciprocal treaty. In my judgment there should be a certain element of active mobility in the tariff schedules, with a maximum and minimum within which the Executive department, under the instruction and guidance of the legislative branch of the Government, shall be authorized to make reciprocal arrangements in order that we may ship a larger measure of our goods abroad and give privileges for shipment into our country of those products which we do not make or which may be sent into our country advantageously to our internal commerce. Therefore, in order to permit these reciprocal agreements to be made quickly, advantageously, and wisely the Executive department should have accurate knowledge with regard to the cost of production and distribution of these various products and be at liberty between a maximum and minimum rate to negotiate such agreements for the enlargement of our foreign commerce.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARDING in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am much interested in what the Senator from Oklahoma is saying, but there are some difficulties that occur to me in the program which the Senator is mapping out.

Mr. OWEN. I anticipate the Senator's view, but shall be glad to have him briefly express it, if he likes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rose to ask the Senator a question merely to clear my mind, if the Senator can, of the difficulties that occur to me. The Senator said that conditions fluctuate from time to time, that the cost of production fluctuates from time to time. The Senator is proposing to have a tariff commission that will sit and, I suppose, day by day examine those questions, with a view to enlighten the country and the Congress as to the proper means to protect their own interests and enlarge our commerce. Did I understand the Senator to say that this commission, having ascertained the facts, should then submit those facts to the Executive department, and that then the Executive department should change the rates of duty?

Mr. OWEN. Precisely.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is, Congress delegates to the Executive department its functions? Is that the view of the Senator?

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from New Hampshire inserts a principle after asking a question as to a fact. The proposal I make is that the Executive department, through the President, should have the authority, between the maximum and minimum rates, to change the items of the schedules.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is to say, we delegate legislative power, then, to the commission and the Executive; that is, power that we have always heretofore held as a function of the Congress?

Mr. OWEN. The Senator draws his conclusion in his question. I deny that it is a legislative power when the legislative branch of the Government directs an executive officer, within a maximum and minimum schedule, to fix the rates for the purpose of making these reciprocal arrangements.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know that I arbitrarily held that view. I suggested that that had been the uniform custom.

Mr. OWEN. I know that that has been the contention, and I am only expressing the view which I entertain with regard to it. It may be, of course, erroneous. It is my opinion that when the legislative branch of the Government exercises this legislative function and declares a maximum and minimum rate, within which the tariff shall be mobile and within which the Executive shall be authorized to make these reciprocal agreements, the legislative branch has given an instruction to carry out the legislative will within certain limited lines, and that the Executive, in discharging that function, will be performing an Executve duty put upon the Executive by the legislative branch. I am willing to trust any President whom the people of the United States may at any time put into the White House to represent their wishes in regard to such matters.

Mr. GALLINGER. But if the Executive department is simply to carry out the mandate of Congress along those lines, I do not see exactly why a tariff commission should come in to instruct the Executive department. That is what is troubling me.

Mr. OWEN. The instruction of the Executive department, if the Senator would imply by that term a direction to the Executive department to do what subordinate officers might see fit to regard as the proper thing, would be putting in the subordinate a power which I would not be willing to do; but in the President of the United States I would be willing to confide, and I think it would not be an unconstitutional act for the legislative branch to fix a maximum and minimum within which these reciprocal agreements can be made; and, except the tariff be mobile in this land, I think we shall never really have any satisfactory method of reciprocal arrangements, because, as I say, the conditions are in a continual state of flux and the legislative branch is too cumbersome to handle these details. If we are going to enlarge our foreign commerce by reciprocal agreements, we ought to have the authority vested somewhere where it may be mobilized and quickly resorted to when the necessity arises, so a national need may be quickly and efficiently satisfied.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me state to the Senator from Oklahoma, in answer to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], that the necessity for this commission arises from the fact that the state of trade and the different conditions that are prescribed are so intricate and involve such an enormous amount of study that it would be impossible for executive officers, charged with the duties which they now have of ascertaining the proper rates that might be required, to perform that function. For that reason a commission is necessary in order to accomplish the desired result.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I should like to invite the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma and that of the Senator from New Hampshire to the reasoning that doubtless escaped their minds in view of the multitude of things upon them. In later years, in the decision of a case wherein there was a test of the power of the Executive to enforce the reciprocity clause of the McKinley Act, I think the Supreme Court of the United States went very fully into the theory as to whether it was a delegation of power and—contrary to what I have believed, I must frankly say, to have been the preceding law and the preceding doctrine—they did hold along the lines of the suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma. I merely called the matter to the attention of the able Senators that they might refresh their minds upon the subject at this time.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, aside from the fundamental fact that no Member of Congress can devote the time which is necessary to a thorough mastery of the facts entering into the 4,000 items of the tariff schedules, apart from the fact that we ought to have a method by which reciprocal agreements can be made, and quickly made, I think that it is further important to the country that when a question relating to the tariff shall go before the country it may be upon the narrow policy either of a high tariff or a low tariff, and thus enable the people of the country to pass with intelligence upon the question submitted. I have been upon many hustings and have heard such debates on the tariff, and they strongly remind me of a description by the Hon. Thomas Brackett Reed on one occasion of an American statesman whom he described as "an encyclopedia of undigested misinformation." It would be far better for the country if the question of a high or a low tariff might be simply submitted to the people, taking out of the hustings the discussion upon a multiplicity of details concerning which even the speakers are not informed, and from which the audience can not derive much real instruction.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My attention was diverted during part of the Senator's speech, and I am not entirely certain that I understand his position. Do I understand the Senator to be in favor of creating a tariff commission with power to fix tariff rates?

Mr. OWEN. No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, do I understand that they are to be given power to fix rates within certain minimum and maximum figures?

Mr. OWEN. No, sir.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, if it will not annoy the Senator, may I ask him what is the proposal?

Mr. OWEN. That the President of the United States might make reciprocal agreements fixing rates between the maximum and minimum points.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And that he then have a commission to aid him?

Mr. OWEN. Have a commission to lay before him the facts with regard to the different items that might be affected.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then, the real power under the Senator's proposition is to be conferred upon the President?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Congress would say that the lowest rate that might be fixed would be so much and the highest rate so much, and within those limits leave the rate to the President. Now, what would be the rule that would guide the President in that sort of a case? Would it be left to his arbitrary discretion?

Mr. OWEN. I do not know why the Senator should use the word "arbitrary"; it would be left to his discretion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Without any legislative rule being laid down to guide him?

Mr. OWEN. Except that he would be moving under the policy of the Government laid down by the legislative branch that he should make reciprocal agreements for the purpose of enlarging our foreign commerce along lines of established legislative policy.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Would not the effect of that be, then, to allow the President to fix the amount of the tax which would be imposed?

Mr. OWEN. He would fix the schedule rate, if the Senator desires to describe that as a tax, but I thought the Senator did not regard that as a tax. That, however, would be the effect of it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is a tax; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. OWEN. I think it is.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. An impost duty comes within the description of a tax, without any doubt whatever.

Mr. OWEN. I think it does.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know anybody who contends to the contrary. I think there is some difference among us as to who pays the tax, whether our own people pay it or the foreign importer pays it; but that it is a tax there is no doubt.

Mr. OWEN. That was my reference, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The final thing I was coming to is this: The Constitution, of course, vests in Congress the exclusive power to impose taxes, and it enumerates among others imposts and duties. Of course, Congress may not delegate that power. The case to which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] referred awhile ago, which arose under the McKinley Act, was a case where a legislative rule was laid down to guide the action of the President; but, as I understand the Senator's position, he does not undertake to lay down any legislative rule for the President's guidance at all. The only rule is that the Senator fixes a minimum amount and a maximum amount, and within those limits leaves it entirely to the President to do what he pleases about fixing the rate.

Mr. OWEN. I had not really reached the point of making a draft of this proposed statute, nor to go into the refinements of precisely determining how far the President should be limited in exercising this duty if it be put upon him, nor precisely what the terms of the legislative policy might be.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was simply addressing myself to what the Senator had already said, as I understood it.

Mr. OWEN. I think that the legislative branch would be at perfect liberty and have the duty to lay down the policy under which this duty should be carried out, and it might be advisable to do that; but I am in favor of making that part of the tariff mobile and changeable within 24 hours, and not compelling the matter to be brought into Congress and thrashed out during 12 months or after a long campaign or under any iron-clad arrangement that, after all, does not adequately and quickly serve our commerce. I am only expressing my opinion with regard to what I think would be judicious, leaving the question of the framing of the statute and the legislative policy, if it ever reaches that point, to those skilled in tariff legislation.

Mr. POINDEXTER rose.

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Washington, if the Senator from Utah has concluded.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to make a further observation, which is that I, for myself, am not able to see how Congress can lay down a rule according to which a change of tariff can be made in the more or less automatic fashion which the Senator is in favor of. I think we would have no difficulty in providing for a tariff commission to gather facts, to present them to Congress, and to make recommendations. That sort of a tariff commission I am in favor of, and have always been in favor of.

Mr. OWEN. I will say to the Senator that I would rather have that kind of a tariff commission than none at all; but I should like to have a tariff commission that would enable the President of the United States to exercise some authority in promoting these international agreements one by one and day by day, as the occasion should occur, in order to enlarge our foreign commerce to as great an extent as possible, because I believe that would enlarge our internal activities and keep our people employed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is very much force in what the Senator says, but for myself I do not see how, under the present Constitution, it is possible to devise a scheme such as the Senator advocates without making an unlawful delegation to the President of the taxing power.

Mr. OWEN. I will say to the Senator that I am altogether in favor of making this Constitution of ours sufficiently mobile to allow it to permit the people of the United States to do what is necessary for their welfare.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] that the proposition of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] would be a delegation of legislative powers unless there was a rule for the government of the commission, it seems to me, is indisputable. The Senator, however, said he was unable to understand how there could be any such rule. I understand this discussion is a little outside of the proposition the Senator from Oklahoma is now presenting, but it has been brought up, and it is a matter of very great interest; and, in view of the remarks of the Senator from Utah, I want to make this suggestion, so as to point a way, as it seems to me, in which a tariff commission could be constituted that would comply with the condition laid down by the Senator from Utah: You could take the measure of tariff protection declared in a party platform, for instance, or any other measure that might be established by Congress as the tariff policy of the country. You could say that it should be the difference in the cost of production in the United States and in foreign countries.

Something of that kind, almost in those words, was contained in the Republican platform of 1908. If the country in the political campaign decides in favor of a protective tariff, as it did decide in that campaign, Congress, in enacting a law to carry out the tariff plank, appoints a commission, not to ascertain what would be a reasonable tariff, not giving the commission any discretion whatever as to raising or lowering rates, but to ascertain the fact of what is the rate on any particular item that represents the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. It would be an absolutely definite and specific rule, leaving no discretion to the commission, and at the same time it would be a rule under which the tariff would be adjustable to changing conditions, because the facts would be changing from time to time. The costs of production at home and abroad and the difference between them would be changeable factors; and as the commission found, upon complaints that might be made to them by those who were particularly interested, that conditions had changed, that the facts had changed, they would then find the new facts. Instead of exercising any discretion in establishing a tariff policy, they would be simply fixing the rate in pursuance of a rule laid down by Congress.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator is entirely right; and there are other rules of legislative limitation and direction which might also be imposed.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will pardon me for just one more word, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] says that the Constitution of the United States authorizes Congress to levy taxes, and that no other authority can levy a tax. Of course, that is true. The Constitution of the United States also authorizes Congress to regulate interstate commerce. There is not any other authority that can regulate interstate commerce; yet there is an Interstate Commerce Commission, but it is operating under the instructions of Congress under a rule laid down by Congress.

Mr. OWEN. Exactly the same principle applies.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I heard the distinguished senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] during the discussion of the tariff bill when this question was presented make the remark that the Interstate Commerce Commission had a rule for its guidance, but that a tariff commission could not have a rule, or that no rule was specified in the amendment that was then pending. I submit that the rule under which the Interstate Commerce Commission is acting—namely, that it shall fix a reasonable rate—is far less definite than the rule which I mentioned a moment ago in regard to fixing a tariff rate which would limit it to the fact of the difference in the cost of production. The latter rule is a definite rule and involves no discretion, while the fixing of a reasonable rate does involve a modicum of discretion.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. Up to the time of the Panama Canal bill we had always supposed that in giving any authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission we had to prescribe a rule, which, of course, avoided any suggestion of the delegation of a power. In that case, however, after considerable discussion and, I think, a very complete consideration by the then senior Senator from New York [Mr. Root], we went one step further, and clothed the commission with the power to prescribe a rule in the use of the Panama Canal with reference to allowing ships associated with trusts, I think, to go through, and attached no legislative rule whatever. Some of us were rather surprised at the suggestion at first; but after a very thorough consideration by so eminent an authority as the then senior Senator from New York, it was decided that we could clothe the commission with the power without even prescribing a rule.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. During the last session of Congress I introduced a bill providing for a tariff commission. In that bill it was provided that the commission should have the authority to make the necessary investigations and to report to Congress any changes that should be made in tariff legislation in part of a tariff bill—not the whole of it, but that it should have the right at any time to suggest to Congress any changes that should be made in tariff legislation. It seemed to me that that was about as far as we could go in vesting power in a commission of that kind; that the act of legislation, or the act of fixing the tariff rate, must be left to Congress. I thoroughly agree with the Senator that there ought to be some means by which we could fix our attention upon any item of tariff legislation where it is found to be in any respect wrong, and change it without having to go over the entire bill as it has been heretofore enacted.

Mr. OWEN. The difference between the Senator and myself, I take it, is that I would go somewhat further than he does.

Mr. WORKS. Yes; I think the Senator does go further, and I am very much in doubt as to whether we could do it or not.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the difficulty which has prevailed so largely between the Democratic point of view and the Republican point of view has always turned upon the question of a protective tariff. Of course any revenue bill carries with it an incidental protection, as a necesary part of it. Take the chemical schedule, for instance, Schedule A: Under the old law the rate was 28.20 per cent. Under the modification it is something less. In either case, however, there is a necessary and unavoidable protection. The difficulty about it has been that under the name of "protection" the Democrats have insisted that monopoly has been encouraged, and that foreign commerce has been cut off from our country by putting up prohibitive schedules, preventing the access to our country of foreign goods, and therefore preventing their power to buy from us and preventing therefore the growth of our foreign commerce, and that we ought to arrange the schedules so as in raising revenue not to destroy the power of foreigners to buy our products by preventing their shipments to us by prohibitive schedules.

During the discussion several years ago I compiled a table of these schedules, showing the relation between the labor cost in percentages and the tariff schedules in percentages as compared to the entire cost. Taking the chemical schedule, for instance, Schedule A, the labor cost was 7.5 per cent, and the tariff schedule was 28 per cent and a fraction, being approximately four times as great as the total labor cost.

I ask permission to put this table in the RECORD, with the few comments then made upon it, because I do not want to take the time to read it. It would take probably 10 minutes to read it, and I do not care to do that, and I do not think the Senate is likely to be enlightened by it. I should like, however, to have it go in the RECORD, if there is no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply wish to ask the Senator a question. Who prepared the figures that the Senator presents to the Senate?

Mr. OWEN. They were compiled by the Committee on Finance, and the percentages of wages were compiled by me.

Mr. SMOOT. There may be one or two instances in the chemical schedule, Mr. President, where the labor involved in the production of the items amounts to as little as 7½ per cent, but they are very few indeed; in fact, at this moment I can not recall an item in the whole schedule in the case of which more than 7½ per cent of labor is not required to produce the finished article. I simply wanted the RECORD to show who prepared the figures.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, I have had the RECORD show that. I have that in the RECORD, Mr. President. It was put in the RECORD at the time it was made, and, of course, I am reproducing that which was then inserted. The footnote, "Percentage of wages to value of product calculated and inserted by R. L. OWEN," is in the matter that I insert. I made these estimates from the figures that were available; and they applied to the entire schedule, as I now remember.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the document will be inserted in the RECORD. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Industries with products named in two or more schedules are credited to the schedule which includes the major product. [h] Should be $13,270,192,088.

SCHEDULE A—CHEMICALS, ETC.

Mr. OWEN. This table shows that the percentage of labor to the value of the product in Schedule A, for example, by the very figures given by the Finance Committee itself, is only 7.5 per cent, while the proposed schedule is 28 per cent—four times as high as the entire labor cost involved in the product.

SCHEDULE B—GLASSWARE, ETC.

In like manner in Schedule B the total labor cost is 36 per cent. The total labor cost in Europe, if it were half as much, would leave the net difference in labor cost only 18 per cent, while the proposed tariff is 48 per cent for Schedule B.

SCHEDULE C—METALS, ETC.

In like manner Schedule C exhibits a total labor cost of 20 per cent. The difference in this labor cost and the European labor cost, accepting the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Finance that the labor cost in Europe is only half as much, would be 10 per cent, and the difference in labor cost for which the protection might be required would not exceed 10 per cent, but the proposed rate is 31 per cent—three times as high as it ought to be for protective purposes.

SCHEDULE D—WOOD, ETC.

In Schedule D the total labor cost is 27 per cent, and the difference in labor cost in this country and abroad would be 13½ per cent, not counting freight, which would be as much more in favor of this heavy material; and here the proposed rate is 11 per cent, and this schedule ought to be absolutely free in order to protect our forest and conserve our natural resources otherwise, as well as supply our people with cheap building material and our publishers with cheap paper.

SCHEDULE E—SUGAR, ETC.

In Schedule E sugar, etc., the labor cost is 5.6 per cent; the difference in labor cost would be less than 3 per cent, which would be more than offset by freight, and here the proposed duty is 65 per cent, giving a complete monopoly to the Sugar Trust, which takes nearly all the profit, leaving a small fraction of the profit to the sugar planter.

SCHEDULE F—TOBACCO, ETC.

The total percentage of labor cost in tobacco manufactures is 18.9 per cent. The difference in this country and abroad, taking the word of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, would be approximately 9½ per cent; the ad valorem rate of the Senate bill is 87 per cent.

SCHEDULE G—AGRICULTURAL, ETC.

Here the labor cost is 4.5 per cent; the difference in labor cost could not possibly equal the freight, and these products might as well be free, with some very minor exceptions, even from a standpoint of absolute protection.

But instead of corresponding with the rate required to protect, the rate is put at 32 per cent, which is perfectly silly, and should not deceive the most stupid man that ever plowed a furrow. For example, the tariff on corn is 15 cents a bushel (par. 227), and the total amount imported in 1907 was 9,000 bushels, and the amount raised was 2,595,320,000 bushels.

And the farmers of the country are flattered with 15 cents a bushel tax to keep the pauper labor of Europe from running them out of their cornfields. The American farmer who does not see the hypocrisy of this schedule and the profound contempt which it exhibits for his intelligence is assuredly incapable of reason.

SCHEDULE I—COTTON MANUFACTURES.

The labor cost in cotton manufactures, according to the figures of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, is 21.4 per cent. The difference in the labor cost in the United States and abroad would be between 10 and 11 per cent. The schedule is put at 47 per cent.

SCHEDULE J—FLAX, ETC.

In like manner the difference in the cost of labor in the production of flax, hemp, and jute goods is 7 per cent. The schedule is 44 per cent.

SCHEDULE K—WOOL, ETC.

The difference in the cost of production measured by labor in this country and abroad is about 8 per cent. The tariff is 58 per cent.

SCHEDULE L—SILK, ETC.

Silk and silk goods: The difference in labor cost of production is 10 per cent, but the proposed tariff is 60 per cent, so as to insure a monopoly.

SCHEDULE M—PAPER, ETC.

Pulp, paper, and books: In this schedule the difference in the labor cost of production at home and abroad is between 11 and 12 per cent. The tariff schedule is 21 per cent.

SCHEDULE N—SUNDRIES.

And, finally, in sundries the difference of labor cost in this country and abroad is 9 per cent, while the Committee on Finance imposed an equivalent ad valorem of 23 per cent.

I challenge the chairman of the Committee on Finance to answer this exhibit, and invite him to use all of his experts, and to put on the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD his answer, where it may be critically examined by the scholars of the country.

I charge him before the country and before the eyes of civilized mankind with writing these schedules, under the pretense of protecting the American workingman, far above the total cost of the labor in the gross product, which would not be justified even if the percentage of labor cost in similar articles abroad was absolutely nothing. But granted that the labor cost abroad is one-half what it is in the United States, I put in this table the maximum average rate, thus measuring the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, and call the attention of the country to it.

The defense of these monopoly-protecting schedules has been as remarkable as the schedules themselves. To my inquiry as to why the rates were not adjusted to the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, the first defense was that of the Senator from New Hampshire, that the inquiry as to what was the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad was absurd.

Mr. President, I have demonstrated that the answer of the Senator from New Hampshire is itself absurd, if it were offered in perfect good faith, as I am sure it was.

The next answer would appear to come from the Senator from Massachusetts, who, having explained a question I did not ask, saw fit to suggest he could not give the Senator from Oklahoma the understanding with which to comprehend, and when I succeeded in enabling him to understand my question he confessed that he was not prepared to answer it.

The Senator from Rhode Island, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, whose genuine good temper at least I always admire, suggested as a proper answer to my inquiry that I was "new to the Senate," a polite way of suggesting a lack of learning and understanding which is commonly practiced by the managers of the committee on committees when they can not answer intelligently an embarrassing question.

The Senator from Montana, another one of the able defendants of this totally indefensible bill, with its monopoly-protecting schedules, thought it a sufficient answer to suggest that the Senator from Oklahoma could not expect to be furnished with intelligence.

Mr. President, I invite the defenders of this bill to put upon the face of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an answer to these tables which I have submitted, showing the relative labor cost of our manufactures and the gross disparity of the schedules they submit in comparison with the lower rates which would properly measure the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad.

The proponents of these schedules, in my opinion, can not answer my objections without putting themselves to utter confusion, if they answer in a spirit of perfect moral and intellectual integrity and frankness, because it contains a multitude of items which are practically prohibitive, which produce no revenue worth mentioning, and has resulted necessarily in the exclusion of foreign competition, followed by combinations in restraint of trade and the establishment of monopoly prices—charging the people too much for what they buy from monopoly and paying them too little for what they sell to monopoly.

Mr. OWEN. The reason I wished to have this inserted in the RECORD was that I did not want to be wrongfully put in the attitude of seeming to favor the Republican protective-tariff policy as urged from the Republican point of view. I think there is necessarily an incidental protection with any tariff schedule. What I want to accomplish is to enlarge our foreign commerce, and therefore to enlarge our internal activities and our internal productive forces and keep our own people profitably employed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I assume, from what the Senator has just said, that in the light of experience he has repudiated the Democratic platform of a few years ago, which said that protection was unconstitutional and a robbery. The Senator has gotten beyond that point, I judge.

Mr. OWEN. I do not repudiate the platform. The platform intended, of course, to say that Republican protection was a robbery.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but it did say that protection, without suggesting that it was Republican protection, was unconstitutional. The Senator can not escape from that.

Mr. OWEN. I think the Democratic position has been that when the Congress of the United States exercises the right given it by the Constitution "to raise revenue" for the purpose of preventing the raising of revenue by prohibitive schedules, as the Republicans have done, it is unconstitutional and it is a fraud. When a schedule is raised to the point of preventing the shipment into this country of goods from which a revenue can be derived and the rate is intentionally made prohibitive under the cover of raising revenue, it is a legislative fraud, utterly unjustifiable, and an unconstitutional exercise of power. That is the Democratic position, and it is completely justified by reason, by common sense, and by a true intellectual integrity.

Mr. President, I only wished to put this matter in the RECORD and express my views on this point. I thank the Senate for its courteous attention.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, no Senator on the floor of this Chamber has forgotten that a few years ago there was created by Congress a tariff board. Congress appropriated some $250,000 for the board to collect certain information and report that information to the President and to Congress. President Taft appointed the members of the board or commission; and I take it for granted that there is not a Senator present who will not admit that the men who were appointed upon that board were men of experience and qualified to make the necessary examination required of them by law.

The board's report came to Congress, and I do not believe a single Democratic Senator paid any attention whatever to the report; and it was repudiated upon the floor of the Senate by the leaders of the Democratic Party.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did not the recommendations of the prior tariff commission—I believe as far back as 1882—meet the same fate?

Mr. SMOOT. Exactly the same.

Mr. President, I want to say that it seems to me rather strange to hear a Senator upon the other side of the Chamber rise in his seat now and announce that he is fearful of unfair practices on the part of the foreign exporter; he is fearful that goods will be sold to the merchants of the United States for less than cost by said exporter. Why, we have been preaching that doctrine to you for the last quarter of a century or more, and it has been denied over and over again by every Democratic Senator and Congressman and every man who spoke for the Democratic Party upon every platform in this country. I have stated time and time again that foreign chemicals shipped from Germany to this country have been sold to the merchants of this country below cost. It has been universally denied upon the other side.

Mr. GALLINGER. For the purpose of putting our manufacturers out of business.

Mr. SMOOT. I have called the attention of the Senate to industries that have been completely wiped out through that practice; and the only consolation that was given me and others who believed as I did was that "the American people have a right to buy their goods in any market where they can buy them the cheapest."

Mr. President, I believe that the proper kind of a tariff commission would be a good thing for this country; but I do not believe that any President of the United States, whether he be Republican or Democrat, ought to have the right to appoint that commission. It ought to be appointed by Congress, be responsible to Congress, report to Congress, and let Congress act upon its report.

Talk about a nonpartisan commission! Those who are in favor of a nonpartisan commission always hold up Germany as an example. There is only one thought on the tariff question in Germany, and that is protection.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Am I not correct in suggesting that Germany has not a permanent tariff commission?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that that is true; but even if we had a permanent tariff commission in this country, I do not believe it ought to be appointed by a President and be responsible to a President and report to a President.

There is no class of people in Germany who believe in free trade for Germany. There is no class of people in Germany who believe in incidental protection, as referred to by the Senator. They believe in protection; and I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that if it had not been that Germany believed in and practiced protection, and had it in full operation at the beginning of the present European war, Germany to-day would be a whipped nation. Germany to-day would be absolutely powerless to produce the things that are required to feed her people and to furnish munitions of war for her armies if it were not for her policy of protection. If there is one example in all the history of the world that proclaims the success of protection, it is Germany to-day.

Why, Senators ask whether the Federal Trade Commission could not handle this subject; whether they could not make an investigation into the 4,000 items of the tariff bill!

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STONE. The Senator says if it had not been for protection to Germany, Germany would have been vanquished in this war.

Mr. SMOOT. Before this.

Mr. STONE. Before this. Per contra, why has not England been vanquished?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, England does not believe in protection.

Mr. STONE. Of course——

Mr. SMOOT. England is a free-trade country. England has depended entirely upon her navy.

Mr. STONE. Therefore, why has not England been destroyed?

Mr. SMOOT. Because she controls the ocean.

Mr. STONE. Germany depends upon her army and her navy.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator knows that Germany has not a single vessel free that can carry a pound of food to her. The Senator knows that there is not a vessel in all the world that can carry a pound of munitions of war to her. She has to live within herself; she has herself to produce all she consumes and all she requires in carrying on the war.

Mr. STONE. I was not seeking an argument with the Senator, but I was struck with his statement that Germany is a protection country, that Germany believes in and practices the policy of protection, as he says, and except for that Germany would have been overrun with the armies of the belligerents waging war against her. I just wondered why the contrary of that would not be true, why Great Britain, which, as I think he and I will agree, is the dominant force leading the opposition to Germany, has not suffered the disaster that might have befallen Germany.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is the reason why. Reverse it and see what the result would be, and I think the Senator from Missouri will acknowledge it. Suppose Germany controlled the ocean, as England controls it to-day, England would be starved in three months.

Mr. STONE. Again let me ask the Senator——

Mr. SMOOT. England could not even produce munitions of war to carry on the war successfully. America has been furnishing the allies with most of their munitions of war.

Mr. STONE. Then let me say to the Senator——

Mr. SMOOT. England could not produce enough to feed her people.

Mr. STONE. Admit that.

Mr. SMOOT. England would be absolutely helpless.

Mr. STONE. Admit it.

Mr. SMOOT. Germany is not in that position. Germany produces what she consumes, and she has been able to do it owing to the fact that she believes in and practices the principle of protection and by it has built up her home industries in time of peace, and they have saved her from utter defeat in time of war.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. In just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield, and to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will pardon me, the Senator says that if Germany had had a navy like that owned by Great Britain, Great Britain would have been starved to death. I say let us admit that. But Germany has not that navy to control the seas, and therefore Great Britain, which is a free-trade country, is seeking to starve Germany to death.

Mr. SMOOT. And has been unable to do it.

Mr. STONE. Well, it has not been done up to date. I am not going into an argument as to what may come of it if present policies are pursued; but the protection theory of Germany did not give her control of the seas so that she could starve England.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, and no one has claimed that it did, but I do claim that the protective policy of Germany has enabled her to develop her own resources and made the German Empire great. It has builded her factories, it has strengthened her institutions until they are the greatest perhaps in the world, and that in a time of peace, and when war came she was able to take care of herself. England can not do it to-day nor can any other free-trade country on earth. Therefore, I say the question of protection has been a godsend to Germany in this hour of her national trouble.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Utah that there are a number of Senators who desire to proceed with the discussion of the Philippine government bill, if he will kindly yield for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will just wait for a moment I will be through. In fact, I would have been through before this time, I will say to the Senator, if I had not been interrupted.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That unfortunately is the difficulty. One thing leads to another. As the Senator knows, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] is here, coming almost from a sick bed for the purpose of speaking to-day; and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is in the midst of a speech which he has not quite finished.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I can not resist the importunity of the Senator from Nebraska. At some future time I will conclude my remarks. I did want about 10 minutes more to answer a few statements that were made here which are so glaringly inconsistent with the conditions existing, and I thought this was a proper time to answer them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator takes his seat I will suggest to him, sympathizing with the suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska, that we have been promised that in the near future we shall have an opportunity to discuss the question which the Senator has been so ably discussing this morning, and at that time we will do it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Utah has finished, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is recognized. For what purpose does the Senator from Nebraska rise?

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to interrogate the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that I have yielded the floor at the earnest solicitation of the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is entitled to the floor upon the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 381.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. GORE. I wish to say that at this juncture, having no opportunity to express any views on the subject of a permanent tariff commission, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a few suggestions which I recently submitted on this subject in another place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma desires permission to have printed in the RECORD some observations on the tariff commission which he made elsewhere.

Mr. SMOOT. They were not made in the Senate?

Mr. GORE. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection. The matter referred to is as follows:

ADDRESS OF SENATOR THOMAS P. GORE ON THE SUBJECT OF A PERMANENT TARIFF COMMISSION, DELIVERED BEFORE THE MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK DECEMBER 9, 1915.

The interchange of ideas has been as serviceable to progress and civilization as the exchange of goods, wares, and merchandise. On this occasion I expect to import more than I export; hence I can not hope for a favorable balance of trade. We are apt to forget that peace hath her victories no less brilliant and no less beneficent than the reeking triumphs of war. We may differ as to the necessity for naval and military preparedness, as to the extent of preparedness essential to our defense and security. We shall not differ in the belief that America should not arm for conquest; that she should not pursue military ambition; that she should not seek martial strength and glory for their own sake. These tempting baubles ought to be waived aside more often, if need be, than Caesar put aside the crown. That our permanent interest, that our true destiny lies in the paths of peace, no one will challenge. There are certain ideals which America has the right to cherish, aspirations which she has the right to pursue and promote. America has the right to aspire to become the industrial, commercial, and financial primate of the civilized world. This is the dazzling destiny I would set before your eyes. It is not a vain vision. It is a rational hope. It is an ideal which can be naturalized in the realm of the real.

Nature has done her share. She has lavished her bounties. We must do our share. We must discharge our duty. We must conserve and develop our resources. We must extend our industry and our commerce; must promote improvement at home and peaceful expansion abroad. We deplore the calamities which have befallen our friends across the sea. We would speed the return to them of peace, prosperity, and civilization. But we owe it to ourselves now and always to extend by the arts of peace, not by arms of war, our foreign commerce; to multiply and widen our foreign markets.

The advantages of foreign commerce are not limited to the mere profits upon exports. Foreign commerce distributes risks, diminishes shocks and losses. It stabilizes wages, profits, prices, and business conditions at home.

Of all commercial undertakings, international trade involves the fiercest competition. Competing goods from various countries meeting in a common market engenders competition that is cruel, merciless, unrelenting. Quarter is neither asked nor given. This means the survival of those who are fittest to compete, who are best prepared for this kind of pacific warfare. Such preparation depends upon knowledge of competitive conditions, the facts and factors which make competition possible or impossible. These conditions include cost of production, cost of distribution, wages, prices, freight rates, and taxation, direct and indirect, domestic and foreign. Competitive conditions are affected by taxes levied in other countries as well as in our own.

The larger business concerns may be able in a way to ascertain these competitive conditions for themselves. The smaller concerns have neither the means nor the facilities. They ought to be made a matter of common knowledge. This function requires a national agency.

This is the paramount reason why I favor an international trade and tariff commission. Those of us who favor such a commission might adopt as our motto "Fiat lux"—"Let there be light." This is the supreme, if not the sole, object of such a commission—to ascertain those facts and factors which make up competitive conditions and from which emerge the economic laws that govern trade and commerce.

I have always voted for a tariff commission. When our Republican friends were pressing such a measure, were praying for light, I could not find it in my heart to refuse to touch the button. Even Democrats, with all their fond faith in dreams, can not afford to be entirely indifferent or neutral in respect to facts.

Everyone's attitude in regard to a tariff commission must depend upon his answers to the following questions:

First. Should facts have any influence in the determination of articles to be taxed and the rate of duties to be imposed?

Second. Is a tariff commission a better agency to ascertain the facts than a congressional committee?

He who answers these two questions in the affirmative must favor a commission. He who answers either in the negative must oppose a commission.

Burke said, "Statesmanship is the science of circumstances." Few will deny the potency of circumstances, even though they do not own their sovereignty. Few will deny that facts are the best touchstone upon which to try the value of theory. Few will insist that taxable articles can be selected by intuition and duties best determined by inspiration.

There are the two opposing classes, however, who hold fast to this theory. One class is the ultraprotectionist, who would make duties arbitrarily high, who would insist upon a maximum of protection, who does not care to be vexed with the consciousness that duties exceed the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad. The other class is the ultrafreetrader, who would demand the immediate repeal of all duties and the immediate transition to free trade without calculating the consequences either upon private business or public revenues. These classes are limited in number, but they are both dogged and dogmatic, and it must be owned that the jewel of consistency blazes upon their brows.

Between these two there are two larger classes, two larger sections of opinion, two distinct schools of thought. One is made up—I speak with poetic license—of Progressives and Republicans, who believe that tariff rates should be graduated to cover the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad. Facts are of course indispensable to the application of this theory. It would be utterly visionary without an intimate knowledge of conditions prevailing in all industrial and competing countries.

Even a theory has a right to a fair trial when it is to be tried at all. The other class, the Democrats, oppose this theory. They regard it as an impossible standard. The cost of producing the same article varies in all countries. It varies in different parts of the same country. It varies in the same part of the same country. It varies in the same establishment. This is regarded as an "inconstant variable" which could not be applied to practice.

The Democrats have their own theory. It is their contention that no article should be taxed higher than the lowest rate that will yield the largest revenue. Below this rate they allow variations in accordance with the circumstances and the character of the article. This standard is easy to define, but it is difficult to apply. To be successfully applied would perhaps require the widest information of any rate-making theory. Many Democrats oppose a tariff commission because they deem the information unnecessary. It is necessary. A knowledge of tariff rates and changes, past and present, at home and abroad, alone can reveal those variations, tendencies, and relations which would make it possible to fix duties at the lowest point that would yield the largest revenue. Of course, Republicans insist that this standard is not possible, even if desirable, and not desirable even if possible. I waive those partisan controversies. Whatever theory be true, facts are essential to its application and success. This is the point.

Is a tariff commission a better agency for the ascertainment of the facts than a congressional committee? The commission would be constituted more largely of experts and trained economists. It would be less liable to change with the violent vicissitudes of party politics. It would be less affected by the bias and prejudice of partisan controversy. It would be virtually in continuous session. It could study and record changing conditions while they are changing. It could accumulate and systematize a vast mass of data. It could make continuous observations over a long period of tendencies and relations between varying rates and their effects. It could render a number of services and perform a number of functions to which a congressional committee is not adapted. It is no disparagement to say that a commission is better suited than a committee for the conduct of such investigations, the collection of details, and the collation of facts for the analysis and enlightenment of such committee. It is not necessary to say that the old system is the worst system. It is only necessary to prove that it is not the best. To whom has the old method proven satisfactory? Has it been satisfactory to the advocates of high tariff, to the advocates of low tariff? Has it been satisfactory to the country? Has it established and maintained industrial peace and commercial progress and prosperity?

The most elaborate and colossal works of pure fiction ever produced in America have been the tariff hearings before the Finance Committee of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House. As works of fancy they are unrivaled by the Rape of the Lock. As works of the imagination they are unapproached by Paradise Lost. They have all the vices of ex parte testimony on the part of interested witnesses, animated by alternating hope and fear. Every temptation to misstatement is present. Nearly every obligation to truth is absent, save conscience alone—their consciences are under such perfect control.

The Secretary of Commerce, with the approval of the administration, has asked an appropriation of $100,000 to enable the department to make investigations abroad as to the costs of production, rates of wages, and other competitive conditions which might be serviceable in the making of tariff rates. It may be said, therefore, that the administration is at least partially committed to the proposition that a congressional committee is not the best or, at least, is not the only agency that ought to be charged with such investigations. Would not a commission be preferable to the Department of Commerce, less liable to certain political changes and to the influence of partisan dogmas and predilection?

I have already mentioned and need not discuss the ordinary powers and duties with which all friends of a commission would expect to see it charged and invested, such as the ascertainment of output, supply, cost of production, distribution of wages, freight rates, taxes, and so forth. But it may be asked if these facts were all assembled, would not much remain still unknown. Undoubtedly true; but we must not refuse to learn anything because we can not know everything. The wise men of Greece would have been unwise had they refused to pursue their investigation of nature merely because the noontide of science was some 2,000 years ahead of them. Every strip of territory transferred to the known from the unknown is a conquest. Every fact captured by certainty from uncertainty is a triumph for truth. Every problem solved is a service to civilization.

I now reach, perhaps, a point of departure. We doubtless all agree as to the powers and duties and services already enumerated. I would not stop there. Our Federal system of revenue is a dual system. It consists of duties on imports and internal-revenue taxes. These are the two halves of a whole; they are the two sides of a shield; they are the two counterparts of the arch. One must be studied, must be understood, must be changed with reference to the other. I would have the commission not only investigate tariff rates and tariff changes in this and other countries, but I would also have it investigate internal-revenue rates in this and other countries. These taxes are an ingredient of price. They effect competition. To illustrate: No one can make a comparison or draw a conclusion in respect to sugar prices in this country and Germany without taking into account the consumption duties on sugar in that country. I need not multiply these instances. As a rule Great Britain imposes an internal-revenue tax corresponding with the custom duty on a given article. This policy has not been adopted by other countries. This increases the difficulties and uncertainties of comparative statistics. The internal-revenue commission, of which Mr. David A. Wells was chairman, did much to illuminate the subject and to establish our system on a more rational basis.

For my own part I would not stop here. The operation of our fiscal system involves two activities—the receipt of revenue and the expenditure of revenue. They bear, of course, the most intimate relation to each other. They can not be separated either in theory or in fact. The commission that has a constant eye on all the sources of revenue might well be constituted a permanent board of economy and efficiency. It could do much to eliminate waste and duplication of services in the various departments. The Cleveland Board of Economy and Efficiency justified its existence. It ought not to have been abolished. I know there is a popular prejudice against the word "efficiency," but those who succeed in business must have as their key note "efficiency first." Such a commission would be a sort of clearing house where the ideas and methods of industrial efficiency would be assembled and distributed and made a part of the common intelligence—capital of the country.

Nor would I stop here. The Government has done much to regulate commerce, to restrict trade, to prohibit monopoly, to penalize unfair practices. These measures were essential to industrial and commercial liberty. In some instances the Government may have of necessity harassed industry and commerce. The Government ought to do whatever it can to promote industry, to stimulate commerce, to facilitate business, without sacrifice to the rights or interests of others. Justice should be the boundary of governmental activities.

Congress has felt obliged to enact laws to protect the people against domestic monopolies and combinations. Might it not be well, or may it not become necessary, for Congress to enact laws to protect the people and to protect domestic business against foreign cartel and monopolies? The facts upon which such regulations should be founded, if necessary, could be assembled by an international trade and tariff commission.

I do not feel so great a dread as some profess in regard to dumping as a consequence of the present war, but if real dumping be a real danger it should be promptly met and effectually restrained. If a properly equipped commission were now in existence, it could do much to ascertain whether the dread of dumping be groundless or not. If its fears be unfounded on fact, the commission could dispel them now. If they be founded on facts, the commission would be in a position to enlighten the country on the subject and to enable Congress to avert the danger and allay apprehension on the part of the business community.

Everyone must regret the disappearance of the American flag from the seven seas. Everyone must desire to see the reestablishment of the American merchant marine. We ought to ascertain the causes of its former prosperity and of its sudden decline. We ought to ascertain and agree upon the means best calculated for its restoration. That American capital is content with the profits of ocean traffic is proven by the fact that much American capital is invested in ships flying foreign flags. This suggests that there may be a self-imposed handicap and that the difficulties may not be irremediable. In any event, I would make this a sort of international trade commission. I would direct it to investigate shipping problems and recommend ways and means for the revival and relaunching of our mercantile navy. Until some other authority be charged with this duty, it might contribute much to this consummation, so devoutly to be wished.

You suggest that I would overload the commission. I answer that there is a growing prejudice against the establishment of commissions. It would be wise to federate as many just reasons as possible for the establishment of this one. But since we agree in principle and in purpose, but as we shall not quarrel as to details, the real question is not whether a tariff commission will be established or will not be established. The only question is whether the Democrats will establish it now or leave it for the Republicans to establish hereafter. Such a commission is an inevitable step in the evolution of international commerce. There are few creatures that thrive better in the darkness than in the light; man is not among them.

One word touching an important detail. The commission should consist of an even number of commissioners, say, six. Not more than three of these should be of any one political party. To make the number odd you impeach in advance either its capacity or its sincerity. It would indicate that an odd number is necessary to cast a deciding vote, to avoid a deadlock. If the commission's work is to be just and scientific, it will generally be unanimous. If its work is to be unscientific and partisan, let it divide half and half and thus unmask its incompetency and unfitness. An even number would be a mark of confidence and would be an added assurance of its fitness and efficiency.

The business men of America have a right to ask the establishment of such a commission at the hands of Congress. It is not flattery but justice to say that they have contributed their full share to the development, progress, and prosperity of the New World. It is not prophecy, it is simply coming events casting their light before, to say that they will contribute their full share to that splendid destiny which the future holds in reserve for this Republic.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I desire to complete in a very few moments what I have to say, in order that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] may have the opportunity to proceed, which, I understand, is the program for the afternoon.

I was discussing at the adjournment last night the question of the preamble. I want to go back to one thing in the bill. It has always seemed to me that the salaries provided in the bill are too high. I am not prepared to say as to the salary of the Governor General as fixed at $18,000, which is a reduction of a few years ago. The chief justice of the supreme court under this bill, and he is a Filipino, receives $10,500. It seems to me that salary is too high. The associate justices of the supreme court receive $10,000 each. That is a very high salary, especially where that court is composed of Filipinos. The director of the civil service under this bill receives $6,000. He now receives $3,200. I never have quite understood why the increase was made. I reserve the privilege of voting for a reduction of the salaries, if that question shall arise. I think the salaries are too high.

I wish to refer to a question that has been very frequently suggested as to the similarity of the Filipinos with the Mexicans and the question of revolutions. In Mexico about 10 per cent of the population is Spanish. In the Philippines not one-half of 1 per cent is Spanish. There are pure-blood Malays there, and they differ very materially from the Spaniard. It is the history of Latin American nations that where a large per cent or a substantial per cent are Spanish there you have your revolutions. But up to 1896 there had been no revolution in the Philippine Islands for 300 years.

I wish to revert also, in gathering up the thread of my argument, to the statement made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] as to slavery in the Philippine Islands. It is and has been a very serious charge against the Filipinos that slavery exists in those islands. It is something of an indictment of our own control of those islands during the time that we had complete possession, military and otherwise, and were making and executing the laws, as we were up to 1907, if any great amount of slavery existed and we did not terminate it. That question seems to have become acute in 1913, when a resolution was introduced in the Senate on that subject. The Philippine Legislature passed, November 28, 1913, an antislavery act of the assembly and that was ratified by the commission, and I understand at that time there was but one American commissioner in the islands. So the Philippine people, through their assembly, have been reasonably swift in trying to end slavery, if it existed in the islands at all. I think the question must have been somewhat magnified as to slavery existing in the islands. There was a peonage act—an act rather, I should say, to be correct, that resulted in peonage—which was passed some time before that and before the Filipinos had such control as they now have.

The question has been raised and was under discussion in the House in the last Congress whether the Philippine Assembly, the house, practically vetoed the proposition three or four times. If that is true, and I can not take the time to enter into why it was done, I do not like it. It seems to me they should have passed the antislavery act through the lower house when it was submitted to them, but they had their own reason for that, which has been explained by Mr. QUEZON, the Resident Commissioner of the Philippines on the House side.

I ask leave to insert as a part of my remarks the antislavery law passed by the Filipino Assembly November 28, 1913.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ANTISLAVERY LAW PASSED BY THE FILIPINIZED LEGISLATURE NOVEMBER 28, 1913.

An act confirming existing legislation prohibiting slavery, involuntary servitude, and peonage in the Philippine Islands, subject to modifications as provided in sections 268, 269, 270, and 271 of the act of the Congress of the United States approved March 4, 1909, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," and adopting measures for preventing violations of said laws.

By authority of the United States, be it enacted by the Philippine Legislature, that—

SECTION 1. Nothing provided in the existing legislation shall be understood or construed as directly or indirectly permitting slavery, involuntary servitude, and peonage in the Philippine Islands. Subject to the modifications provided in the next following section, the provisions of law prohibiting and punishing slavery, involuntary servitude, and peonage contained in any laws, orders, ordinances, decrees, instructions, or regulations promulgated during Spanish government and applicable to the Philippine Islands are hereby confirmed and ratified.

SEC. 2. The provisions of sections 268, 269, 270, and 271 of the act of the Congress of the United States approved on March 4, 1909, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," are hereby adopted, with the necessary modifications, as if they had been enacted by the Philippine Legislature, to be in force within the territory subject to the jurisdiction of said legislature, so that said sections, as modified, shall read as follows:

(a) Whoever kidnaps or carries away any other person, with the intent that such other person be sold into involuntary servitude or held as a slave; or who entices, persuades, or induces any other person to go on board any vessel or to any other place with the intent that he may be made or held as a slave, or sent out of the country to be so made or held; or who in any way knowingly aids in causing any other person to be held, sold, or carried away to be held or sold as a slave, shall be fined not more than ₱10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(b) Whoever holds, arrests, returns, or causes to be held, arrested, or returned, or in any manner aids in the arrest or return of any person to a condition of peonage shall be fined not more than ₱10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(c) Whoever obstructs, or attempts to obstruct, or in any way interferes with or prevents the enforcement of the section last preceding shall be liable to the penalties therein prescribed.

(d) Whoever shall knowingly and willfully bring into the Philippine Islands or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof any person inveigled or forcibly kidnaped in any other country, with intent to hold such person so inveigled or kidnaped in confinement or to any involuntary servitude; or whoever shall knowingly and willfully sell, or cause to be sold, into any condition of involuntary servitude, any other person for any term whatever; or whoever shall knowingly and willfully hold to involuntary servitude any person so brought or sold, shall be fined not more than ₱10,000 and imprisoned not more than five years.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the provincial governor of every Province organized under act No. 83 of the Philippine Commission to obtain information and take all measures that in his judgment may be proper to forestall and thereafter to prevent any violations of this act, and in case such violations have been committed, to order immediate prosecution. It shall also be the duty of the provincial governor to order, where necessary, the institution of habeas corpus proceedings, and he may apply to the provincial fiscal, and in his default to the proper court, for the designation of a lawyer to protect the rights of the person or persons for whose benefit the habeas corpus proceedings shall have been brought, and no fees shall be charged for such services, and the costs shall in every case be de officio.

SEC. 4. The courts of first instance shall have original jurisdiction over all cases for violations of this act.

Enacted, November 28, 1913.

PEONAGE LAW PASSED BY COMMISSION NOVEMBER 14, 1911.

An act relating to contracts of personal service and advances thereunder, and providing punishment for certain offenses connected therewith.

By authority of the United States, be it enacted by the Philippine Legislature, that—

SECTION 1. Any person who, with intent to injure or defraud his employer, enters into a contract for the performance of any act or personal service, and thereby obtains money or other personal property from such employer as a gratuity or advance on wages to be earned under such contract of employment, and without just cause, and without refunding such money or paying for such property, refuses or fails to perform such act of service, shall on conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than ₱200 or imprisonment for not more than six months, or with both penalties.

SEC. 2. Any person who, with intent to injure or defraud his landlord, enters into a contract in writing for the rent of land under an agreement to cultivate such land, thereby obtains money or other personal property from such landlord, and without just cause, and without refunding such money or paying for such personal property, refuses or fails to cultivate such land or to comply with his contract relative thereto, shall on conviction be punished by a fine of not more than ₱200 or imprisonment for not more than six months, or with both penalties.

SEC. 3. Any person who, with intent to injure or defraud, shall contract with another to receive from him personal service of any kind and to compensate him therefor, and thereafter with like intent receive the benefit of such service in whole or in part and fails or refuses to pay the compensation agreed upon shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than ₱200 or imprisonment for not more than six months, or with both penalties.

Enacted, January 20, 1912.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, charges of slavery in the islands, which are rather unpleasant charges as to the Filipinos, have been made pretty generally, and the Secretary of War wrote a letter on May 6, 1915, in answer to that general charge which has been made by Mr. Worcester and others. I will not take the time to read it, but ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. This letter, I think, thoroughly sustains the contention that, while there may have been some little slavery in the Moro Provinces, slavery had ceased to exist in the Philippine Islands.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 6, 1915.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I beg leave to acknowledge the receipt of the following resolution of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate any and all facts bearing directly or indirectly upon the truth of the charge publicly made that human slavery exists at this time in the Philippine Islands and that human beings are bought and sold in such islands as chattels."

In response thereto I beg leave to state as follows:

There is not in this department, to the knowledge of the Secretary thereof or of the head of the bureau having charge of insular affairs, a record of any facts bearing directly or indirectly upon the truth of the charge, publicly made, that human slavery exists at this time in the Philippine Islands and that human beings are bought and sold in such islands as chattels.

The only information concerning this matter of which there is any record in this department or the branch of it having to do with insular affairs is the following:

In a hearing before the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives, on Wednesday, February 10, 1904, Mr. Taft, then Secretary of War, said:

"I have no doubt that slavery continues in part of the Moro Province, and that there is some slavery in some of the Christian Filipino Provinces that lie near to the mountain tribes. This latter we are trying hard to eliminate. I had a report from a constabulary officer from the Province of Isabela, saying that it was not the general custom, but that it was not uncommon for hill-tribe parents to bring their children into a Filipino village and to sell a child to a wealthy man in the village, who would use him as a servant. That is contrary to law, and we have directed prosecution in every case brought to our attention."

The foregoing is taken from the printed report of the hearings before the House Committee on Insular Affairs.

It would seem from such investigation as time has permitted to be made of the law existing in the Philippine Islands, that there are provisions in the criminal code, both with respect to that part of said Islands inhabited by Moros or other non-Christian tribes and fully organized Christian Provinces, covering unlawful detention, whether called slavery or not, as a result of which a person unlawfully detaining another or coercing him to work against his will may be imprisoned and fined.

Very respectfully, LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
Secretary of War.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to revert just a moment, in order to put a quotation in the RECORD, to the dangers to us as a people in any scheme of colonization. It makes us forgetful of the rights of other people and makes it difficult for us to apply the same standard of liberty to them. Lord Elgin, Governor General of India and formerly Governor General of Canada, declared as a result of his experience in the East, not in Canada:

> It is a terrible business, however, this living among inferior races. I have seldom, from man or woman, since I came to the East, heard a sentence which was reconcilable with the hypothesis that Christianity had ever come into the world. Detestation, contempt, ferocity, vengeance, whether Chinamen or Indians be the object. One moves among them with perfect indifference, treating them not as dogs, because in that case one would whistle to them and pat them, but as machines with which one can have no communion or sympathy. When the passions of fear and hatred are ingrafted on this indifference, the result is frightful—an absolute callousness as to the sufferings of the objects of those passions, which must be witnessed to be understood and believed.

I wish to turn again for just a moment or two to the question of this preamble, and then I will close. The preamble is not satisfactory to all; I know it is not satisfactory to me. I have felt that possibly it was the best we could do. Like all legislation, it is more or less in the nature of a compromise, and the divergent views perhaps were met in this preamble as well as they could be stated. I do not know what our conclusion may be as to the permanent interests of those people. My own idea is that when I came to vote on that proposition I would have to take into consideration that the interests of a liberty-loving people, their permanent interests, while it might not bring them as much prosperity, required some struggle, opportunity for growth, and development. So I could vote for independence under this preamble when the time came, even though I believed it might be better from a material standpoint, a commercial standpoint, for them to remain under the sovereignty of the Government.

Mr. WORKS rose.

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Referring to the preamble, I was about to ask the Senator whether, in view of the fact that it seems to mean so little, it would not be better to omit the preamble altogether.

Mr. KENYON. It might be better to omit the preamble if—and it is a pretty big if—if the Filipinos have not been led to understand by adopting the preamble before in the House and by a favorable report to the Senate and by the words that have been used in the islands with reference to it, so that if we struck out the preamble it would be in their judgment an act showing that we did not intend ever to give them their independence.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator think the preamble means anything like what the Filipino people think it means?

Mr. KENYON. The Filipino people believe, as near as I can gather from those who represent them, that because the word "independence" is in the preamble it will be thoroughly satisfactory to the people of the Philippine Islands. Independence is a magic word that they seem to have in their minds.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator think that the Philippine people believe that if the preamble is adopted we are likely to proceed very soon to give them their independence?

Mr. KENYON. Whether they believe it?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. I have no question that immediately on the passage of this bill the agitation will commence and they will say they are ready, that it is for their interests now, their permanent interests, and that they will insist upon it.

Mr. JONES. It is likely to cause trouble if we do not do it, the Senator thinks?

Mr. KENYON. I think the Filipinos are in a reasonable condition of mind. The preamble as it stands now is a sort of mutual agreement as between those people and our Government. It is so understood there. It for my part harmonizes my conscience with trying to force a government upon them. They are agreed, they are willing for a few years, to go on.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator think that the Philippine people believe that the preamble and the declaration in it is binding upon future Congresses and the people of the United States?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, they have, I think, a full comprehension that it is not binding in any legal sense or in anything except a pledge of the honor of this Nation, and they believe in the honor of the Nation.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator think that the preamble pledges the honor of this country and future Congresses?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. JONES. I do not.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. Just a minute. I will say to the Senator from Washington that I do not like to have any question about it or have it a subject that would be questioned. If we intend in the future to give them their independence I want to see it stated in a way that there is no question about it, and if we do not want to do it we ought to say so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Washington first.

Mr. JONES. I merely want to say to the Senator that I had intended to state a little later on in the discussion my views in reference to that point, and I might as well state them briefly now. I want to put them in the RECORD that so far as my position goes the Filipino people may understand it in the consideration of this bill. I do not consider any statement in the preamble as binding upon future Congresses or on my action in the future or upon the people of this country. I am satisfied the people of this country will do what they think is best for the Philippine people whenever they think it ought to be done, and not until then.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to say a word here. The people of the Philippine Islands I am satisfied are exceedingly anxious to have the word "independence" retained in the preamble. There was comment as to passing the bill in the last Congress without any reference to a preamble. A communication was sent to the Governor General of the Philippine Islands and he returned the statement that he regarded it more important to the peace and quiet and order and good government in the Philippine Islands that the preamble should be adopted than that the rest of the bill should be adopted.

I take it the view is the same as that of the Senator from Iowa. When we use the word "independence" in the preamble we must mean something by it, and while it may be that it can be repealed by a subsequent Congress, yet as a matter of fact we know wherever a promise has been made, as in the case of Cuba, there was absolute compliance with it on the part of the Government of the United States. Instead of being a source of discord if we struck it out, it would make it an immense source of discord, in my judgment, in the Philippine Islands. For that reason, it seems to me, that it ought to stay; and I want to say to the Senator that even if this language is kept just as it is in the preamble, I am satisfied after the people of the United States realize that the word "independence" is there there will be a great movement among all the people to give them within a short time their independence.

Mr. KENYON. There is, as the Senator suggests——

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. It has been reported that Filipinos believe it would be unsafe for them to undertake self-government at the present time; that they are opposed to it; and that that responsibility ought not to be imposed upon them as a people. What does the Senator know about that?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will say——

Mr. KENYON. I think the question is directed to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator from California that there is no sentiment in the Philippine Islands that is of any consequence whatever against independence, and independence immediately. The only way we can judge of these matters is in the resolutions that are passed at public meetings and the resolutions of the municipal councils and the legislature, and they are all in favor of independence immediately. We have here on the table presented at this session of Congress a resolution of the General Assembly of the Philippine Islands in which it is expressly stated that they are in favor of it. It has passed resolutions indorsing the Jones bill and congratulating the House of Representatives for having passed it, and appealing to this body and to the President of the United States to ratify it. Not a single vote in the general assembly was recorded against it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator permit me one word?

Mr. KENYON. There is only one thing about these interruptions. I think it is hardly fair, possibly, to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] who is to follow me, and I want to get through.

Mr. LIPPITT. I hope the Senator will not hesitate to take all the time he wants to discuss the bill.

Mr. KENYON. I can finish in a very few moments.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator allow me just a word in response to what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] has said? His experience and mine and the experience of all others who have been in a territorial form of government is that Congress always is informed of the aspirations and desires of the people by officials who happen to hold Federal jurisdiction in those countries. I would take something more than the mere statement of a man in the highest position in the Philippines, and I would take his statement with a grain of salt, while I would give full credence to the views of the public, as shown by people who do not hold office.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield further to the Senator from California?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. I was not urging that as being a fact. It is a phase of the question upon which I desire to be assured, whether the Filipino people do believe themselves that they are capable of self-government and actually desire it, because so far as I am individually concerned, I think the sooner we can relieve ourselves of the situation over there and turn the government over to the Filipinos, the better for us.

Mr. KENYON. Ex-Gov. Martin, who I think impressed everybody as a level-headed man, said, before the committee, he thought if a vote was taken on the question in the Philippine Islands it would be practically unanimous. Of course, that is answered by the suggestion of illiteracy in the islands, amounting to possibly 50 per cent. That would be 50 per cent of the islanders could not express themselves on that question. Some are opposed to it and many are for it. But the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] is the keynote of what enters into the Filipino mind, namely, independence. He wants some statement about independence. We had the same experience in our country in our early struggle when we were a little afraid to use the word "independence" in relation to our situation with England.

I wish to read a little incident from Blanchard's Life of Thomas Paine right along that line:

"At the close of the year 1775," says Calvin Blanchard in his Life of Paine, "when the American Revolution had progressed as far as the Battles of Lexington and Bunker Hill, John Adams, Benjamin Rush, Benjamin Franklin, and George Washington had met together to read the terrible dispatches they had received. Having done which, they pause in gloom and silence. Presently Franklin speaks: 'What,' he asks, 'is to be the end of all this? Is it to obtain justice of Great Britain, to change the ministry, to soften a tax? Or is it for'—he paused; the word independence yet choked the bravest throat that sought to utter it.

"At this critical moment Paine enters. Franklin introduces him and he takes his seat. He well knows the cause of the prevailing gloom and breaks the deep silence thus: 'These States of America must be independent of England. That is the only solution of this question!' They all rise to their feet at this political blasphemy. But, nothing daunted, he goes on; his eye lights up with patriotic fire as he paints the glorious destiny which America, considering her vast resources, ought to achieve and adjures them to lend their influence to rescue the Western Continent from the absurd, unnatural, and unprogressive predicament of being governed by a small island 3,000 miles off. Washington leaped forward, and taking both his hands, besought him to publish these views in a book.

"Paine went to his room, seized his pen, lost sight of every other object, toiled incessantly, and in December, 1775, the words, entitled 'Common Sense,' which caused the Declaration of Independence and brought both people and their leaders face to face with the work they had to accomplish, was sent forth on its mission. 'That book,' says Dr. Rush, 'burst forth from the press with an effect that has been rarely produced by types and paper in any age or country.'"

That was the first use, the first daring to use the word "independence" in those struggles. Thomas Paine's Common Sense did nearly as much for American independence probably as did Washington's sword. He thought of it as his great life work, for at his grave there is a little plain slab on which is inscribed, "Thomas Paine, author of 'Common Sense.'" The Filipinos have gathered from us and from our shrines something of this fire of patriotism and independence.

As to this preamble, as I have before stated in answer to the Senator from Washington, the troublesome thing all the way through this matter to me has been the proposition of imposing a government without the consent of the governed. If we impose it for two or three years we are violating that principle just as much as if we had imposed it for 50 years; but we can say there is a practical situation about this preamble, that it is fairly satisfactory to the people of the Philippine Islands, and therefore the government is being carried on clear up to the time of independence, if we give it to them in any reasonable time, by mutual consent.

I think Secretary Garrison has well stated this proposition before the committee. He said:

Good faith to those to whom we have pledged ourselves requires us to stay so long as we must; and good will to the islanders, in accordance with our pledges and assurance, requires us to stay no longer than is necessary to test and reach conclusions as to their capacity for managing their own affairs.

There is a document which we have learned to regard and love among our earliest teachings. That document says—and I do not know how we can get away from it in dealing with this Philippine question—

That to secure these rights—

Referring to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness—governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

Is that only for the Fourth of July? As a liberty-loving people we can not flee from that proposition; we can not hide from it. If we try to forsake it, we stultify ourselves; and, if we do, and try to hold an unwilling people—and we might as well be perfectly frank about it; there are people in this country and interests in this country that never want to take our flag down from the Philippine Islands—if we do, we shall have a smoldering volcano in the Philippine Islands, and in time of trouble, if it ever comes—which God forbid—a constant menace to our country; and in times of war, if they ever come—which God forbid—a more serious menace, for we shall have revolution in those islands, and you could not blame the islanders.

Mr. President, I want to read a little from a speech delivered by Mr. QUEZON, of the other House. I do not know that the speech was made in the House, so I shall not be infracting any rule by reading it. I have often heard it stated that there is a little crowd of influential Filipinos who want independence over there in order to enslave the rest of their fellow men. A letter was read here reflecting seriously upon one of the Resident Commissioners, and I think afterwards part of it was withdrawn from the RECORD. If that charge is true, it is something that ought to be investigated; but I can not understand how men who were born in the Philippine Islands, who love their people and their country, are not just as much interested in the welfare and progress and happiness of that country and of their neighbors of the same race as are Americans who go over there. I can not understand why they are not just as honest as are Americans who go over there. They may be dishonest; there are dishonest Filipinos, of course, and there are dishonest Americans. I am going to read what this gentleman said in one of his speeches, and it seems to me to be the plea of a people for freedom. This man as a boy 17 years of age—he is a man now—took his musket and went with his people to war against the United States. He knew that a Nation of 100,000,000 people could put more soldiers into the Philippine Islands than the whole population of those islands; he knew his people could not succeed; he knew that it might cost him his life; but he did it. He fought for his country. We are continually met with the accusation that he has some sinister motive in this matter. Listen to this:

Let no man upon this floor have any doubts regarding the nature of the question upon which he is to vote. In its last analysis that question is simply this: Will you, as a Christian and powerful Nation, do to another Christian but weak nation what the Golden Rule commands you to do? Will you, as the offspring of those who pledged their lives, their property, and their sacred honor to the enforcement of the principle that all men are born free and are entitled to their freedom, and that just governments derive their powers from the consent of the governed, be true to the covenant of your fathers? Nay, the question involves more than the observance or disregard of a duty imposed by general or, as some may cynically say, outworn principles. The question is whether you are ready to redeem or would prefer to repudiate concrete and recent promises, both expressed and implied, made in the name of your faithful and honorable Nation to the people of the Philippine Islands, that the dawn of a glorious day shall come when full justice will be done them and when every opportunity shall be given for self-development and progress under the auspices of their own free and independent flag.

That does not sound as the language of a man who had not at heart the deep interest of his people.

Mr. President, the charge that probably a few people may rule in the Philippine Islands in case independence is granted may be true. A few people will be leaders. There are a good many who think in this country that only a few people are competent to govern, and it will always probably be true in any government that the thinking people will exert a mighty power as leaders. It will not be different in that country from what it is in this. The people will have to take their chances on their government. If we turn them adrift, they are embarking on a pretty stormy sea. We had to take chances with our Government. They are willing to take those chances.

The best thing we have ever done for the Philippines was not in creating commercial prosperity, not in establishing schools and colleges, but it was that we have brought to them higher standards of life and government, that in future years, after we are gone, are to have their effect upon the development of a people who are looking for the higher and better things of life. If we have done that for them, let no one say that we have no reward for our services. We have the reward for the great altruistic work in the Philippine Islands that has been done, the reward of the consciousness of duty well performed.

No man ever did a mean thing in this world but he punished himself worse than he punished the other person; no person ever did a good thing in this world but reaped a greater benefit than the person he benefited; and no nation that has done such a work for humanity as we have done in the Philippine Islands can ever say that we have reaped no benefit from it. We have among all our citizenship the consciousness of a duty that we have well performed in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, I ought to apologize, I think, for taking so much of the time of the Senate, but I have not been entirely to blame for it. In conclusion, let me remind you not to blame the Filipino people for wanting freedom. There seems to be a spirit of criticism directed against them for it. They learned the lesson, in part, at least, from us. They find it hard to understand how a nation dedicated to liberty could ever seek to deprive other people of liberty. You can not, Mr. President, take that love of freedom out of their hearts; you can not drive it out by force; and far be it for the great Republic to attempt to do so or to force upon them a government that they might not want. So long as human hearts are constituted as they are, so long as men have red blood in their veins, they are going to insist upon freedom. True it is, as the poet has spoken of that divine gift—

> For He that worketh high and wise,
> Nor pauseth in his plan,
> Will take the sun out of the skies
> Ere freedom out of man.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, the occupation of the Philippines was not a part of the original plan of the American people in the War with Spain. There was, however, an American fleet in the harbor of Hongkong, and it had the alternative of staying there and being interned, of coming back to this country, or of sailing into the territory of the enemy. It chose the latter course; and the news that the American fleet had entered the harbor of Manila and captured the city of Manila was received with great satisfaction by the people of the United States. It made Admiral Dewey a great national hero. He was applauded and promoted and rewarded; but, Mr. President, that victory and the possession of power brought with them great responsibilities.

The American people had destroyed a government that had existed in the Philippines for some 300 years. To be sure, it was not an efficient government according to the most improved modern theories; nevertheless, it had served its purpose. It had kept reasonable order in those islands, and the problem came to the United States of what they were going to establish in its place. They also had an alternative. They could cast the Philippine people adrift, to take their chances of what fate might have in store for them. They could establish a colony, principally for the purpose of commercial exploitation; but what they did do was to undertake to create a people, to create a nation. I believe that history records no similar undertaking on such a scale and under such circumstances; but it appealed to the generous spirit of the American people. It was conceived and formulated by the far-sighted wisdom of Elihu Root, the most practical idealist among American statesmen; it was accepted and promulgated by William McKinley; it was approved, ratified, and enacted into law by the Congress of the United States; it was organized and systematized by William H. Taft; it was continued by President Roosevelt, and by Mr. Taft himself as President. It has thus become identified, sir, with great names in the modern history of the American Republic.

There was nothing obscure or indefinite about the policy which was thus established.

What should be emphasized—

Says Secretary of War Taft on January 23, 1908, in a report to President Roosevelt—

> what should be emphasized in the statement of our national policy is that we wish to prepare the Filipinos for popular self-government. This is plain from Mr. McKinley's letter of instructions and all of his utterances. It was not at all within his purpose or that of the Congress, which made his letter part of the law of the land, that we were merely to await the organization of a Philippine oligarchy or aristocracy competent to administer government and then turn the islands over to it. On the contrary, it is plain from all of Mr. McKinley's utterances and your own, in interpretation of our national purpose, that we are the trustees and guardians of the whole Filipino people, and peculiarly of the ignorant masses, and that our trust is not discharged until those masses are given education sufficient to know their civil rights and maintain them against a more powerful class and safely to exercise the political franchise.

For some 14 years now we have managed the affairs of the Philippine people according to that plan. The question which we are discussing to-day is whether that noble project shall be carried to a triumphant and glorious conclusion or whether we shall vacillate, falter, and fail. It is the question of whether the story of the Philippine enterprise shall form a chapter in American history of high purpose consistently carried out or whether we shall grow tired and abandon our enterprise when already we are within a measurable degree of success.

This question has to do with the welfare and happiness of 8,000,000 people, a small portion of them educated, trained, and well able to look out for themselves, and a very large portion of them uneducated, untrained, and utterly ignorant of their individual rights and the methods that must be employed to protect them.

I want to consider, Mr. President, something of the progress that we have already attained in those islands and something of the duties that still remain to be performed, if we are to be true to our pledges. Fortunately, some of the things that it was necessary to do and that have been done there to advance the people upon the paths of modern progress can be measured in definite ways. We have definite reports of the progress which has been made in those islands along commercial lines. In 1900 the total imports and exports of the Philippine Islands, the total foreign business of the islands, was only $40,000,000, of which there was done with the American Republic $5,000,000. In 1909, nine years later, that $40,000,000 had grown into $58,785,000, and $14,900,000 of it was done with the United States. Five years later, in 1914, it had grown to $107,000,000, and nearly one-half of it, or $50,000,000, was carried on with this country. The internal business of the islands, which in 1906 amounted to only $200,000,000, had grown in 1913 to $333,000,000.

That is a broad statement of the enormous commercial progress that has been made under the enlightened system of government which has been maintained there under the supervision of this country. Its results upon the people have not been merely to give them that employment. It has had another result that is more important than that.

At the time we went there, the ordinary daily wages of laborers in the Philippines were from 10 to 20 cents a day. To-day, after we have been there for a little over a dozen years, those wages have been increased to an average of about 50 cents a day—a rate higher than prevails anywhere else in the Orient for common, unskilled labor.

In connection with our administration there we have built 4,400 miles of good roads, and we have built 1,300 miles of cart roads and trails, enabling the farmers to take produce to market that heretofore it had been impossible to put into the channels of trade. There are over 600 miles of railroad where there were only 122 miles before.

In these things that can be measured by figures, then, our occupation has been of great benefit to the people of those islands. There is another thing which is quite as important as doing business, and that is the health conditions under which the people of that country or any country have to live. When we went there, there were 40,000 deaths annually, on the average, in that country from smallpox. Now there are no more there than there are in any well-governed city in America. Smallpox has been practically eliminated from the Philippine Islands. Cholera, that dreadful scourge of oriental countries, had always been prevalent in those islands. From March, 1902, to April, 1904, there had been in the city of Manila 4,386 deaths from cholera, and in the Provinces over 105,000. Then the American system began to take effect. From August, 1905, to February, 1906, there were only 243 deaths in Manila, and 22,000 in the Provinces, from cholera. In 1908 the total deaths from cholera in those islands had been reduced to 18,000, in 1909 to 7,300, in 1910 to 6,900, and in 1911 there were only 203 deaths from cholera in the entire Philippine Islands, where a year or two following our occupation there had been more than 105,000.

When we went to the Philippines there were 30,000 lepers there. Leprosy, we all know, is a frightful disease. Now, there are 3,000.

These good results upon the health of the people of the islands were paralleled by what we did in the case of the cattle. The industry of the Philippine Islands is dependent upon the carabao. He takes the place there that the horse and the raise occupy upon the farms of America. The carabao had been almost exterminated by a disease called rinderpest, which began in those islands in 1888, and had almost brought agriculture to a standstill when we took over the control of the islands. That disease has been practically eliminated. It was confined to half a dozen Provinces, and existed only among a very few animals in those. Practically we reestablished the employment of the carabao upon the farms of the islands.

We established schools. There are said to be 1,200,000 school children in the Philippine Islands. Two years ago we had built more than 700 schoolhouses, and were adding about 100 a year. There were more than 1,000 teachers that had gone there from this country. We had educated Filipinos sufficiently to give the primary instruction. Also, at that time there was an opportunity for some 400,000 children to be educated annually. We had established courts where the laws that had been passed by Congress and by the authorities of the Philippines were given a fair interpretation, and the judgments of those courts have been highly regarded and accepted.

These are some of the things that we have been doing in the Philippine Islands. I do not undertake to recite all that has been accomplished; but this is enough to show that progress has been made. The importance of that progress has been recognized and praised, not only by the men who went there with the authority and power of developing it under Republican administrations, but it has received as high praise from the present Democratic governor of the islands, Mr. Burton Harrison, as by any of those who were responsible for its establishment.

In Mr. Harrison's report for 1914 he says:

All who have resided in the Philippine Islands must appreciate the tremendous achievements of the United States in the islands since the American occupation.

And the present vice governor, Mr. Martin, who went there not without some feeling that perhaps the previous administration could be improved upon, says, in the testimony which he gave before the Philippine Committee of this body last winter, on page 130, in answer to a question as to what he thought of our work in the Philippines:

I am very sure it is one of the finest experiments of colonial government in the world. I do not believe it can be duplicated.

And again, a little further on, in discussing the same subject, he says:

I think that the government of the Philippine Islands, from the very beginning to this day, has been such that the American people may be proud of it. * * * That does not mean that the Americans have not made mistakes—they have—but American control has been a very fine thing.

Mr. President, while these things have been accomplished out there, and have been of such a character as to receive this praise from the political opponents of those who were particularly responsible for its creation, there have been others who have been free in their criticism of what has been accomplished. This policy that Democrats now praise has been the subject of as much criticism in the official utterances of the Democratic Party as any other one thing to which they have turned their attention.

I want to read the opinion of that party as expressed in its platforms. In 1900 they said:

We condemn and denounce the Philippine policy of the present administration. * * * The Filipinos can not be citizens without endangering our civilization; they can not be subjects without imperiling our form of government; and as we are not willing to surrender our civilization nor to convert the Republic into an empire, we favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to give the Filipinos, first, a stable form of government; second, independence; and, third, protection from outside interference, such as has been given for nearly a century to the Republics of Central and South America.

And they declared that—

The burning issue of imperialism growing out of the Spanish War involves the very existence of the Republic and the destruction of our free institutions. We regard it as the paramount issue of the campaign.

Mr. President, that policy that they thought was going to destroy this great Nation has been in existence now for some fifteen years since those declarations were made. The Republic has not been destroyed, but their own representatives in the Philippines now declare that the policy which was thus condemned is of such high character that it can not be paralleled anywhere else in the world.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LIPPITT. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator will of course admit that it is since the writing of that platform that the representative Republicans and public officials, Presidents, Secretaries of War, and Governors General of the Philippine Islands have announced the policy of "The Philippines for the Filipinos," and to a considerable extent have committed the United States to the doctrine of a constant extension of self-government to the Philippine Islands, with independence in view as the ultimate object. That has all occurred since the year 1900.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I do not admit anything of the sort. I propose to consider that very question in a few minutes. I think the claim that the Senator from Nebraska has just made, and that is being used by the advocates of the preamble of this measure as their chief argument in support of it, is utterly unfounded. But for the present I want to continue with an explanation of the Democratic position as it has been recorded in the resolutions of their party conventions.

In 1904 they declared:

We insist that we ought to do for the Filipinos what we have done already for the Cubans, and it is our duty to make that promise now, and upon suitable guarantees of protection to citizens of our own and other countries resident there at the time of our withdrawal set the Filipino people upon their feet, free and independent, to work out their own destiny.

Four years later, in 1908, they were still criticizing the achievements which to-day seem to some of them at least worthy of praise. They said:

We condemn the experiment in imperialism as an inexcusable blunder, which has involved us in enormous expenses, brought us weakness instead of strength, and laid our Nation open to the charge of abandoning a fundamental doctrine of self-government. We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us as we guarantee the independence of Cuba, until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers. In recognizing the independence of the Philippines our Government should retain such land as may be necessary for coaling stations and naval bases.

In 1912 their platform was essentially the same as in 1908.

There are three distinct declarations of the Democratic Party on this question. The first, after criticizing the Republican policy, declares that we should give the Filipinos, first, a stable government; second, independence; and third, protection from outside interference. The second declares that upon suitable guarantees of protection to citizens of our own and other countries resident there we should set the Filipino people upon their feet, free and independent to work out their own destiny. The two proposals are entirely distinct from each other. One is that there shall first be established a stable government there. The second is that the only condition we ought to make for giving independence to the Filipino people is that they will guarantee the security of foreign residents in their country. Four years later they have still a different view. Again they have come back to the proposition that the Philippine Islands should be given independence as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us as we guaranteed the independence of Cuba. Before, when they advocated independence on the condition of a stable government, it was declared that we should give them protection such as the Monroe doctrine gives to the Republics of Central and South America.

The only consistent thing that there has been about the Democratic doctrine upon this subject is the criticism which they have leveled at the Republican policy. They have sometimes wanted to give independence to the islands on the condition of the establishment of a stable government—something manifestly impossible so long as we maintain control of the islands. They have sometimes wanted to give them independence outright with practically no conditions.

Mr. President, all of the various bills which have been introduced upon this subject have pursued somewhat the same vacillating course. When the Democrats first came into control of the House of Representatives, three years ago, a bill was introduced granting independence to the Philippine Islands in 1921. It was referred to a committee under control of the Democratic Party, received the approval of that committee, and was reported to the House of Representatives as their policy upon this question. It was not passed. When the next Congress convened a bill was introduced, received the approval of the committee, and was passed by the Democratic majority of that House, proposing to give to the Filipino people independence when they could establish a stable form of government. That bill came to the Senate, was referred to the Philippine Committee of this body, received its consideration, and was reported back toward the close of the last session with the proviso that the Filipino people should be given their independence when in the opinion of the United States they were fitted for it. The subject has been again taken up by this Congress, and the policy which the Democratic majority of the Committee on the Philippines have now adopted is that the Filipino people shall be given their independence when in the opinion of the United States it will be for their permanent advantage.

Each of the steps that have been taken in regard to this question of independence, in this consideration which has been given to the subject, has been a step away from any immediate grant of that gift. First it was unconditional independence in 1921; then it was based upon the ability to form a stable government; then it was based upon when they are fitted for it; now it is based upon when it will be for their permanent advantage.

It is manifest, I think, that as this subject has come closer home to the gentlemen who now have the responsibility of deciding it they have not grown more enthusiastic about that policy which has been the base of their platform declarations. I am in sympathy with the progress of their thought upon the subject. It seems to me that they have been gradually themselves growing doubtful of the advisability of doing the thing which they were somewhat eager and enthusiastic about in the beginning and before they had responsibility.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LIPPITT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator from Rhode Island is making an assumption which is not warranted. There is some difference of opinion on this side of the Chamber as to the exact step that should be taken; but I can assure the Senator from Rhode Island that there is at this moment more likelihood that this side of the Chamber will take a radical step in this very bill than there is that this side of the Chamber will recede from any position heretofore taken. The real reason why this proposition has been so modified and so moderated has been for the purpose of securing the cooperation of members of the other party. It has been desired to make this a nonpartisan measure, to take it out of politics, to have it a great public act in the direction of progress and in the direction of permanently settling the Philippine question, and to secure for it the cooperation, as far as it goes, of members of both parties.

The Senator was not here at the time, but this morning an amendment was introduced to this bill by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], and will be one of the issues before the Senate before this bill is disposed of—an amendment which looks to the separation of the Philippine Islands within two years. I want to warn Senators on the other side that the chance of extreme action is as great now as it was at any time, and the hope of moderate action lies in the cooperation of Senators on the other side.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, just a minute. I express my sympathy and approval of what the Senator from Nebraska himself admits, I think, in his remarks, that the trend of the thought upon this subject by those who have immediately considered it has not been as represented in the various forms in which this bill has taken, toward more drastic measures, but the contrary. Of course what the members of his party or what the Members of the Senate may think on this subject later on I do not know. I think that my statements were not inconsistent with the facts. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that the situation, as stated by the Senator from Nebraska, was caused to some extent at least by the declaration made by Senators upon the other side of the Chamber to the effect that the preamble is not definite enough, and some of the Senators upon the Republican side——

Mr. LIPPITT. May I interrupt the Senator to ask him how that could be when the utterances he refers to have been made since the bill was reported and since the change was made? The Senator is aware that the change was made upon the express request of the Governor of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not mean the action of the committee; I mean the reference the Senator has made to the introduction of the amendment by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] giving independence within two years. It was due somewhat to the criticism that came from both sides of the Chamber that nothing definite was stated, and for that reason there ought to be something definite expressed.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I am perfectly aware that there is a distinct difference between the view which the Democracy has entertained on this subject and the Republican view. The view of the Democracy has been all along that we should get rid of the islands, because they were going to imperil the safety of the United States. The view of the Republicans was that we should retain the islands for the benefit of the people who inhabit them in order to meet the responsibility which we assumed at the time of the Spanish War. The action which the Senator from Nebraska now refers to, as represented by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], is in accordance with the policy of the Democracy, as indicated by its convention utterances.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask the Senator if it is not also represented by the declaration made by President Roosevelt, in which he said since the Filipinos have been led to believe that they were to get their independence, good faith requires that it should be done, and be done as soon as possible, without retaining any foothold whatever in the islands?

Mr. LIPPITT. I did not know he had made such a declaration.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes; he made that declaration.

Mr. LIPPITT. When?

Mr. SHAFROTH. In Everybody's Magazine about a year ago. It was read by one of the Senators here last Friday. It was repeated in a letter from ex-President Roosevelt to Commissioner QUEZON.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I did not happen to have seen that declaration of Mr. Roosevelt's. I have, however, read several declarations of President Roosevelt on this subject while he was an officer of this Government and responsible to a certain extent for what he said.

Mr. President, this policy of giving the Filipinos their independence has had for its chief argument the doctrine that this country was bound to grant them independence in order that——

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to his colleague?

Mr. LIPPITT. I do.

Mr. COLT. I should like to ask my colleague with regard to President Taft's declarations on the subject of ultimate independence. Has the Senator any data upon that point which he can give us?

Mr. LIPPITT. I was just going to consider the subject of the so-called promises that have been made in regard to granting the Filipino people their independence. That is the chief argument which now seems to be put forward to enforce the doctrine that is in the preamble of the bill. It is an effort to convict the United States of having promised independence to the Filipinos so definitely that it must now redeem the promises. Such allegations were first made as long ago as when Aguinaldo was in revolt. He endeavored to establish the claim that the United States was compelled to grant independence to the Philippine Islands on account of promises that military officers of the Government had made to him. An investigation was made on that subject, and the report upon it, as referred to by President McKinley, is—

> That the claim of the rebel leader that he was promised independence by any officer of the United States in return for his assistance has no foundation in fact and is categorically denied by the very witnesses who were called upon to prove it.

That was away back at the end of the last century. From that day to this representatives of the Filipino people and others have continually made the claim that they had been promised independence.

In the hearings upon this bill, which were held by the Senate committee last winter, Mr. Ferguson, the secretary of the Governor of the Philippine Islands, who came to this country to represent the opinions of the administration in the Philippines, was asked the following question by Senator WEEKS:

> Do you think the Government of the United States has ever indicated to the Philippine people an intention to finally withdraw from the Philippine Islands? In other words, give them independence?

Mr. Ferguson replied:

> The Government of the United States, I think, has, through the several Governors General, who have been appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, said that it was the ultimate intention, when a stable government was established, to withdraw.

Mr. Ferguson was asked if he would compile those utterances and put them into the record, which he did, and I want to read the kind of statements which Mr. Ferguson, as representing the Governor General of the Philippine Islands and as representing the people who have continually been trying to obtain action in favor of independence on the ground that we have made a binding promise that must be kept, relies upon for evidence. The first is a quotation from President McKinley:

> The Philippines are ours not to exploit, but to develop, to civilize, to educate, to train in the science of self-government.

There is not a word of independence in connection with that. If it means anything, it means something entirely different from independence. But the most that can be said for it is that it does not discuss the question at all. This is on page 193. What it implies is that for a very considerable length of time at least the American protectorate must continue in the islands.

Then, from President Roosevelt:

I trust that within a generation the time will arrive when the Philippines can decide for themselves whether it is well for them to become independent or to continue under the protection of a strong and disinterested power, able to guarantee to the islands order at home and protection from foreign invasion. But no one can prophesy the exact date when it will be wise to consider independence as a fixed and definite policy.

Nobody can claim that as a promise of independence. What Mr. Roosevelt says is that no one can prophesy even a date at which we should consider independence.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will not the Senator recognize, however, that that is a promise of ultimate independence if the Filipino people desire it? Can any other interpretation of that language be made?

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I can not see any such interpretation possible upon that language. President Roosevelt says that some time in the future, which he hopes may be within a generation, the time may arrive when we can consider whether or not it is well for them to have independence. To hope that the time may arrive when the Philippine government and ourselves may take mutual council with each other as to whether or not it is advisable to consider the question of independence is not promising independence. It is simply a suggestion to consider the circumstances and to deal with that question some time in the future.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, here is a little fuller statement of that same matter. President Roosevelt said in his message to Congress in 1908:

Hitherto this Philippine Legislature has acted with moderation and constraint, and has seemed, in practical fashion, to realize the eternal truth that there must always be government, and that the only way in which any body of individuals can escape the necessity of being governed by outsiders is to show that they are able to restrain themselves, to keep down wrongdoing and disorder. The Filipino people, through their officials, are therefore making real steps in the direction of self-government. I hope and believe that these steps mark the beginning of a course which will continue till the Filipinos become fit to decide for themselves whether they desire to be an independent nation.

What is that? Is not that a statement upon his part that he hopes they will become fitted so that they will determine for themselves whether they are capable of becoming an independent nation? All that can——

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him just at that point, President Roosevelt at that time says he hopes the time may arrive when the Philippine people will be able to consider this question of independence. There is no statement in the words the Senator has read that this country will accept the decision which they may arrive at. There is simply the statement that he hopes they may be so trained in self-government that they can consider the question of independence.

Those are not promises, Mr. President. Is this question of independence one that no American can open his mouth about or discuss in any form without those words being interpreted as a distinct promise?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. LIPPITT. Those are not promises. Promises are definite things. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No one is here contending that there is a binding promise on the part of the United States. The President could not do it if he wanted to do it. But it is expressive of his opinion and his hope that they would become independent and that they would pursue this policy of self-government until they of their own choice should determine to be an independent nation.

Now, I want to call the attention of the Senator to the statement I made a few moments ago. This was in a letter addressed by ex-President Roosevelt to Mr. QUEZON, the present Commissioner from the Philippine Islands in the Congress of the United States. It is dated New York City, December 4, 1914——

Mr. LIPPITT. I did not catch what it is.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is a letter from ex-President Roosevelt to Mr. QUEZON, the present Commissioner from the Philippine Islands in the House of Representatives of the United States, and it is dated New York City, December 4, 1914:

NEW YORK CITY, December 4, 1914.

MANUEL QUEZON, Esq.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. QUEZON: I thank you for your letter and appreciate it. You have put the case in a nutshell when you say that in view of the attitude of the present administration and of the American people in indorsing that administration, the proper course to follow now is "to grant the Filipinos their absolute independence without any responsibility on the part of the United States in guaranteeing such independence."

Sincerely, yours, THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Mr. LIPPITT. Does the Senator consider that a promise? Are the views of Theodore Roosevelt to-day of such a nature that they constitute a promise binding upon the Government of the United States?

Mr. SHAFROTH. What we were talking about——

Mr. LIPPITT. What we were talking about was whether definite promises have been made by responsible authorities. I do not know anything about what opinion Theodore Roosevelt may entertain to-day on this subject. His opinions are always of value and of interest, but the question which I am discussing is whether any official has made these definite promises.

Mr. SHAFROTH. At the time the controversy occurred over this matter it was upon the question as to what had produced a modifying influence in this body as to why there should be a time limit fixed in which to recognize the Filipinos as independent, and in that it was stated that the Democrats had modified their view. I had stated that the Republicans, to a large extent, by their statements here the first day of this discussion had had that influence on the Democrats, one of which was that Theodore Roosevelt had himself declared that he believed in favor of independence. That was the line of argument which was used then. Of course, the Senator is upon a different branch, as to whether an absolute promise was made. I agree with the Senator that it was not authoritatively made, but it was a statement from which they could infer and did infer that it was the intention of the United States to grant to them independence.

Mr. LIPPITT. I shall shortly put into the RECORD some statements from which they could not infer any such thing and in which there can be no question as to what they meant.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LIPPITT. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I listened very carefully to the extract from Mr. Roosevelt which the Senator from Colorado has just read. It seems to me that it proves just the opposite of what the Senator from Colorado is contending for.

Mr. LIPPITT. I agree with that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator from Rhode Island will allow me just a word, I will explain why I make that statement. Mr. Roosevelt, in the letter which has been quoted, says that they are not now ready to consider the question, at least that is the inference, because he says he hopes that at some future time they may be in a condition to consider it. The very statement that they are not now ready, that it may be considered at some future time, necessarily contains the inference that he does not know what the conclusion would be at a future time when they do consider it.

Mr. LIPPITT. He does not even know whether they would be prepared for it at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is a necessary inference from the statement.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The statement the Senator refers to is a statement made in a message to Congress in 1908, not the subsequent article written in Everybody's Magazine about a year ago, and a letter to Mr. QUEZON, which has no qualification whatever, but in which Mr. Roosevelt says he believes in giving them independence without retaining any foothold whatever in their islands.

Mr. LIPPITT. That has a qualification. It has this qualification, that in consideration of the recent declaration of the Democratic Governor General of the Philippine Islands he has formed that opinion. I want to consider a little later the declaration of Mr. Burton Harrison upon this question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LIPPITT. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator from Rhode Island deny that Mr. Taft, Secretary Dickinson, and President McKinley made official statements of such a weighty and direct nature in public reports and to the Philippine people that they, the Philippine people, were justified in believing that they meant that it was the intention of the United States to extend a constantly increasing degree of self-government with independence as the ultimate object? Does the Senator deny that those statements were made?

Mr. LIPPITT. I will challenge the Senator from Nebraska to quote such an expression from Secretary Dickinson, or if instead of doing that he prefers a different course, I should like to read to him from the report of Secretary Dickinson upon this very subject.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I happen to have under my thumb the statement made by Secretary Taft.

Mr. LIPPITT. I am talking just for the moment about Secretary Dickinson.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I mentioned Secretary Taft also. I will find what Secretary Dickinson said later, for the Senator should not be prejudiced against Secretary Taft. Here is what Secretary Taft says:

The conditions in the islands to-day vindicate and justify that policy.

I ask the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LIPPITT. I beg the Senator's pardon. My attention was distracted for a moment. Will he read that again?

Mr. HITCHCOCK (reading):

The conditions in the islands to-day vindicate and justify that policy.

Mr. LIPPITT. From what are you reading?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am reading from a special report made by Secretary Taft on the Philippines.

It necessarily involves in its ultimate conclusion as the steps toward self-government become greater and greater the ultimate independence of the islands; although, of course, if both the United States and the islands were to conclude after complete self-government were possible that it would be mutually beneficial to continue a governmental relation between them like that between England and Australia, there would be nothing inconsistent with the present policy in such a result.

Mr. President, it strikes me that that is a very specific and definite statement from the man who had an official position entitling him to speak with authority and to speak to the Philippine people conclusively as far as the American Nation is concerned.

Let me read something more from Mr. Taft at the time when he opened the Philippine Assembly in October, 1907. He was then Secretary of War, and under his jurisdiction came the Philippine Islands, and here is what he said:

The avowed policy of the national administration under these two presidents—has been and is to govern the islands, having regard to the interest and welfare of the Filipino people, and by the spread of general primary and industrial education and by practice in partial political control to fit the people themselves to maintain a stable and well-ordered government, affording equality of right and opportunity to all citizens. The policy looks to the improvement of the people both industrially and in self-governing capacity.

Now, mark what follows:

As this policy of extending control continues, it must logically reduce and finally end the sovereignty of the United States in the islands, unless it shall seem wise to the American and the Filipino peoples, on account of mutually beneficial trade relations and possible advantage to the islands in their foreign relations, that the bond shall not be completely severed.

Can the Senator from Rhode Island question that that is a definite and specific statement of the highest American official having control of the islands, addressed to their representatives assembled in their legislative body, that they were to have a constantly increasing degree of self-government extended to them and finally complete independence as soon as they and the American Government agreed on something else?

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I had intended a few minutes later on in my discussion to consider for a minute some of the various expressions which President Taft had used in discussing the question of Philippine independence. Inasmuch as the Senator from Nebraska has brought it up at this time, I think perhaps I might refer to some of the things Mr. Taft said. I will refer the Senator to page 389 of the hearings. Mr. Taft is referring to some speeches that he made upon this subject. He said:

The policy to be pursued with respect to them—

That is, the islands—

is, therefore, ultimately for Congress to determine.

Then—

He says—

I praised the treatment of the islands, and show that the instructions of Mr. McKinley were embodied in the statute afterwards, and then I go on:

This is from his speech—

This close adherence of Congress to the views of the Executive in respect to the islands in the past gives ground for ascribing to Congress approval of the Philippine policy, as often declared by President McKinley and President Roosevelt—

I will ask the Senator from Nebraska to mark this—

Still, I have no authority to speak for Congress with respect to the ultimate disposition of the islands. I can only express an opinion as one familiar with the circumstances likely to affect Congress, in the light of its previous statutory action.

President Taft in that speech distinctly says to the Philippine people that his utterances carry no binding force. He declared that there is only one body in the United States that has authority to speak conclusively on the question, and what he says is that in his discussion of it he is simply stating what may be done, what Congress might do.

Mr. President, the representatives of the Filipino people who have been trying to establish this doctrine of definite and binding promises are intelligent people. They have read those words of ex-President Taft declaring that he had no authority or power to make promises of any kind; and yet, in the face of that, we are continually having general expressions, chance remarks of a popular nature, discussing the subject, brought here as though they were such as to bind the American Nation. The Senator from Nebraska knows just as well as Mr. Taft knew at the time he made that utterance that he could not bind this Government in the slightest degree.

Let me go a step further. I did not intend to do so—I am a little ahead of my discussion of the subject—but the Senator from Nebraska has referred to Secretary Dickinson. Secretary Dickinson was Secretary of War under President Taft. The Philippine Islands are under the War Department; under the direction of that department, they are governed by an executive who has the title of Governor General, but who is the subordinate of the Secretary of War. Mr. Taft asked Secretary Dickinson to visit those islands. It was three years after Mr. Taft uttered those expressions which I have just read, denying that he had any power to bind this Government. Mr. Dickinson went there as the representative of President Taft. The Senator from Nebraska wants to know if Mr. Dickinson did not bind this Government by promises. Let me read his report. He says:

Advantage was taken of the announcement of my coming by politicians, through the press and in other ways, to stimulate a general demand for immediate independence. The impression was made upon the minds of many of the masses that the Secretary of War—

He being the highest officer of the Government in connection with the Philippines that had ever visited those islands—that the Secretary of War had either the power to grant immediate independence or that recommendations made by him would result in the granting of immediate independence. In Manila and throughout my journey, wherever Filipinos were established in any numbers, the result of this teaching was made manifest by the erection of numerous arches, with inscriptions, either asking or demanding independence.

* * * * * * *

The similarity in the movements everywhere and the form of expression indicated very clearly that a concerted campaign had been made to elicit such demonstrations.

And then he goes on to further describe the situation, and here is his report of what he did to deal with it, as made to President Taft:

I took prompt steps to undeceive, so far as I could, those who had formed a misapprehension either as to my power or mission, and reiterated in public speeches—that the future relations between the Philippines and the United States would be determined by Congress, and that there had been no authoritative departure from the doctrines laid down by you in your utterances upon that subject when Secretary of War.

Reiterated all over the islands—

Is it possible that a man as high in the Government service as the Secretary of War could report in regard to his mission to the Philippine Islands that he took every step possible to have those people understand that no power but the Congress could decide these questions, and at the same time be making binding promises to them or be making speeches of any kind which he thought they had the slightest right to interpret as a promise? Why, Mr. President, the evidence only has to be stated to show the absurdity of the claim that Mr. Dickinson was promising independence to the Filipino people.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator a question, Mr. President. I ask whether, if Gov. Gen. Taft had stated to the Filipinos, "the American Government's policy is to give you independence," the Senator thinks that that promise ought to be carried out by the American people?

Mr. LIPPITT. Well, I do not know what trap the Senator is trying to bait for me, but if he is asking a hypothetical question I will say that I should not have supposed that Mr. Taft ever would have made that statement, because the policy of the Government of the United States had been distinctly expressed. I will read a statement of it to the Senator from Colorado in a few moments.

Mr. SHAFROTH. As the Senator is reading these communications and saying that those who made them had not the power to bind the United States—and that is true; there is no dispute about that—I am asking the Senator whether there is not a moral obligation? Suppose Mr. Taft had said to them, "The policy of the Government is ultimately to give you your independence," would the Senator then think that we would have the right morally to deny independence to the Philippine people?

Mr. LIPPITT. I certainly would. When a man goes before a certain body of other men and says, "I have no power to decide this question at all," and then goes on—if Mr. Taft ever did such a thing and I do not suppose he ever did—but if he did then make promises they surely could not be considered binding morally or technically.

At the time I was interrupted, Mr. President, I was reading the compilations which Mr. Ferguson, the secretary of the Governor General of the Philippines, relied upon to demonstrate that a definite promise, binding upon this Government, had been made to the Filipino people. I have read the statements which he quoted from President McKinley and President Roosevelt. In the order of governors he next quotes ex-Gov. Henry C. Ide, who says:

On the whole, it would seem that no other course is yet feasible for dealing with the Philippine Islands than that of tutelage, training, high and sympathetic guidance. That is the course upon which we have entered, and we ought to continue in it until the time shall arrive, which no one can now definitely fix, when the people of the islands shall have become so trained and educated and accustomed to self-restraint and to the exercise of government, and so financially equipped—

And I hope the Senator will give that statement "and financially equipped" very careful consideration, for it is one of the very important questions in considering this subject of the independence of the Philippines, and I do not know but that it is the important question—and so financially equipped, as to be able to maintain a respectable Government, when the question of independence may become a real, practically impending one.

He says that some time away off in the future, when the Philippines have become far advanced beyond their present situation, then the question of independence may become an "impending one"; and that statement is quoted as a binding promise of an official of this Government sufficiently strong to compel the United States, whatever its judgment on the subject may be, to grant independence. I think it is fairly illustrative of the indefinite nature of these so-called promises.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LIPPITT. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator from Rhode Island think that we have reached a point where the right of a people to have whatever form of government they desire depends upon what somebody else has said about it?

Mr. LIPPITT. Oh, Mr. President, just for a moment I should prefer not to be diverted from the phase of the subject which I was discussing.

Mr. KENYON. Very well.

Mr. LIPPITT. I was not discussing the natural rights of people, but simply the question of promises that had been made. I am discussing that because it is the one argument that the advocates of independence seem to rely upon as something that ought to have weight in the decision of this question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LIPPITT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Surely the Filipino does not regard the officer who goes to the islands as either a Republican or a Democrat, and if promises were made——

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I should not like to agree offhand to that assertion of the Senator. The Filipino is a pretty good politician, and I think he knows the difference between a Democrat and a Republican.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be; but at the same time the Filipino would regard any official declaration made by one in authority as somewhat of a morally binding promise under any circumstances. I want to call the attention of the Senator to this declaration which was made by the Governor General of the Philippine Islands——

Mr. LIPPITT. By what Governor General?

Mr. SHAFROTH. By Francis Burton Harrison.

Mr. LIPPITT. I hope the Senator will not do that just at this moment. I think I am familiar with that declaration; I propose to discuss it a few minutes later, and I should like to have it left till then, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If that can not be considered a governmental promise, there is nothing that can be so considered. He said:

The President of the United States has charged me to deliver to you——

Mr. LIPPITT. I ask the Senator not to bring that question up for the moment, if he will be so kind.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

Mr. LIPPITT. I am trying to go along in a somewhat orderly way.

Now, we come to ex-Gov. James F. Smith—and the Senator from Colorado likes to hear from Democrats. This gentleman is a very honorable gentleman and very much interested in the Philippine Islands. He was and is a Democrat. He was asked to testify before the committee. He replied that he preferred not to testify—his letter is in the hearings—because, although he was a Democrat he did not believe in granting independence to the Philippines. He was excused. Ex-Gov. Smith says:

The evolution of a government by Americans assisted by Filipinos into a government of Filipinos assisted by Americans, and the education and preparation of the people for popular self-government—

I hope the Senator from Colorado will listen to what his fellow Democrat says. The policy of changing the government of Americans assisted by Filipinos into a government of Filipinos assisted by Americans certainly is not independence. He says that—was the broad policy of President McKinley, of President Roosevelt, of Gov. Taft, of Gov. Gen. Wright, of Gov. Gen. Ide, and of all their successors. It is the policy to-day.

What is that policy? There is nothing about independence in connection with that declaration. In fact, I think it is too narrow a declaration, if anything. It says that the policy was to transfer the Philippine government from a majority of American officials to a majority of Filipino officials; and that is quoted by the representatives of Mr. Francis Burton Harrison as a promise of independence. Can anything be more absurd?

Mr. SHAFROTH. But the Senator overlooks——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LIPPITT. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator overlooks the most important part of that paragraph, because it says:

And the education and preparation of the people for popular self-government.

What is popular self-government?

Mr. LIPPITT. Well, what is it?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is not government with a string to it.

Mr. LIPPITT. What is popular self-government?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It means absolute independence. It is not self-government unless it is independent. When you speak of preparing a people for popular self-government, it is a direct statement, it seems to me, that it is intended for the purpose of giving them independence.

Mr. LIPPITT. Why, Mr. President, the people of Belgium have governed themselves in the way in which they wanted to govern themselves; they were equipped for government as they wanted government to be established in that country; but are they enjoying it? Is the mere fact that a people may be equipped for self-government or that you may educate them to be equipped for self-government equivalent to a declaration that they are going to have independence? Has not Canada self-government in all its essentials, so broad a self-government that there is not a Canadian to-day who would think of asking for a change; a self-government so satisfactory to that liberty-loving people that more than a half million of them are to-day reddening the plains of France with their blood? Self-government and independence are not the same thing. Being equipped for something does not mean that you can necessarily have it; and that is the very fallacy of the continual statements which I am trying to expose. If any Senator can twist that statement of Gov. Smith into a promise for independence, I will admit he has a different idea of logic than I have.

I now quote ex-Gov. W. Cameron Forbes:

The political development should follow the economic one—

That is, he means that the islands should first be put upon a firm economic basis before the question of their political government should be considered—further increase in participation being taken tentatively and gradually so that there should be no sudden jerks or jolts, and the movement should go along with an even, true sweep and sway, until ultimately, many generations hence, I fear, the matter of the future political relations between the Philippine Islands and the United States will be determined by the representatives of both people satisfactorily to both.

Is that a promise of independence? It contains no word of independence, but that is what it is quoted as meaning.

Mr. President, I have referred to the positive declarations before the Philippine people of President Taft, or, rather, of Gov. Gen. Taft, for it was in that capacity they were made, that he had no power to bind this Government. I have read the statement made to the Philippine people three years later by an officer in the Government superior to him, Secretary Dickinson, who continually reiterated for the information of the Philippine people that nobody had the power to bind the American people except the Congress.

There has been a declaration by that body which has the power to bind. The Congress of the United States spoke upon this subject on the 1st day of July, 1902, when it passed an act which is known as the organic act of the Philippine Islands, for the purpose of establishing a government in those islands and regulating the relations between them and the United States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an interruption?

Mr. LIPPITT. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator recall the fact that in referring to that act Mr. Taft cites its title as a reason for his belief that the policy of the United States was only to provide for temporary Government there? Mr. Taft calls attention specifically to the fact that Congress in the title of that act declared that it was for the temporary government of the islands, putting the emphasis upon the word "temporary."

Mr. LIPPITT. Well, Mr. President, I do not know whether Mr. Taft ever made that implication, but it is a pretty far-fetched way of arriving at a promise of independence. It undoubtedly implies that Congress thought at some time changes might be made, but it gives no indication of what nature those changes would be.

Now, what is provided by the organic act passed by the Congress of the United States, which is the law governing the relations between this country and the Philippine Islands, which is binding upon every official of this Government in those islands or in this country from the President of the United States to the lowest official who has any connection with the subject? This act makes the instructions which President McKinley gave to the commission which he sent in the first place to establish civil government in the Philippine Islands a part of the law; it declares that the islands shall be governed in accordance with them. Those instructions closed with the words:

The articles of capitulation of the city of Manila on the 13th of August, 1898, concluded with these words:

"This city, its inhabitants, its churches and religious worship, its educational establishments, and its private property of all descriptions, are placed under the special safeguard of the faith and honor of the American Army."

This is the language of President McKinley:

I believe that this pledge has been faithfully kept. As high and sacred an obligation rests upon the Government of the United States to give protection for property and life, civil and religious freedom, and wise, firm, and unselfish guidance in the paths of peace and prosperity to all the people of the Philippine Islands. I charge this commission to labor for the full performance of this obligation, which concerns the honor and conscience of their country, in the firm hope that through their labors all the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands may come to look back with gratitude to the day when God gave victory to American arms at Manila and set their land under the sovereignty and the protection of the people of the United States.

There is nothing there about independence; there is something there about sovereignty; there is something there about the right and the responsibility which the people of this country undertook when they decided to destroy the government that had existed in the Philippine Islands for three centuries. The question that we are going to decide by this bill, as I said in the beginning, is the question of whether we are going to carry out efficiently and in good faith the declaration of McKinley as made by him and as reaffirmed by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, I have been speaking for nearly an hour and three-quarters. I have some other things which I should like to say upon this subject, but with the permission of the Senate I think I will discontinue and resume at another time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], unless there is some conflicting notice, I shall address the Senate in opposition to the pending bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 12, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 11, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Infinite Spirit, for that deep and abiding faith resident in the heart of man which enables him to realize that back of all that he perceives with his natural senses is a Supreme Intelligence from whom and through whom all things proceed, an Intelligence which not only guides the stars in their courses, but somehow shapes and guides the destiny of men. Increase, we beseech Thee, that faith, that all the world may be brought into the bonds of a spiritual brotherhood which shall lift them into harmony, peace, and good will through the incomparable life and character of Him who poured out His life in love on Calvary that all men might know and worship Thee in spirit and in truth. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

J. LAWRENCE LATHAM.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Mississippi rise?

Mr. SISSON. I rise to ask a change of reference of a bill, H. R. 8466, which was introduced by me and which was referred to the Committee on Claims. It should have been referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The SPEAKER. What is it about?

Mr. SISSON. It is in reference to the relief of a postmaster. There is no money to be paid out of the Treasury. It is simply for relief.

The SPEAKER. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. SISSON. It is for the relief of a postmaster where funds were taken from the post office by burglary, but no payment has been made by the postmaster into the Treasury. The bill should be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The SPEAKER. Why?

Mr. SISSON. Because there is no claim against the Government here at all.

The SPEAKER. What is he trying to do?

Mr. SISSON. He is simply asking to be relieved of the payment of the funds.

The SPEAKER. Payment of the amount that was lost?

Mr. MANN. That has always been considered as a claim against the Government, and those bills have always gone to the Committee on Claims. There have been a large number of them.

Mr. SISSON. My understanding, Mr. Speaker, is that where there is any claim against the Treasury it would go to the Committee on Claims, but where it was merely for the relief of a postmaster, it would go to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MANN. Those have always been held to be claims, and have always been referred to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. They have gone to the Committee on Claims for 22 years, to my certain knowledge, because I served on that committee when I was here first.

Mr. MANN. We had two notable cases—one at St. Louis and one at Chicago—with quite a controversy over them, and they went to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. There is no question but that it should go to the Committee on Claims. Of course, the Chair has no right to interject. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I think the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads would have no authority to report it under the rules.

Mr. SISSON. I was acting, Mr. Speaker, on the theory that, it not being a claim against the Government and there was no money to be paid out of the Treasury, it would go to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MANN. Thinking to release a claim by the Government.

Mr. SISSON. I presume that would be the status exactly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to sending this to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads?

Mr. MANN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS OCONA LUFTY RIVER, N. C.

Mr. BRITT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent for change of reference of the bill to which I referred yesterday, H. R. 3675, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Indian Affairs, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] having withdrawn his objection, I understand.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the War Department has failed to recognize that as a stream for navigation along the line that the War Department is following, and so I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Reserving the right to object, is this a public bill?

Mr. BRITT. This is a bill for the appropriation of $15,000 to build a bridge across the river to connect the Indian land and the Government land, on which a school is located. It is a public bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BRIDGE ACROSS PEND OREILLE RIVER, IDAHO.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House passed the bill (H. R. 320) for a bridge across the Pend Oreille River, in Bonner County, Idaho, in which there is a slight grammatical error, and I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill was passed and that it may be returned to second reading.

Mr. ADAMSON. What is the trouble?

Mr. MANN. The bill, as introduced, read: "That the county commissioners of Bonner County are hereby authorized," which is correct grammar. But now it reads: "That the county of Bonner, State of Idaho, are authorized." I want to make it correct English.

Mr. ADAMSON. I suppose the word "county" is correct English, but it can not be regarded as a collective noun. I think the grammar should be right whether the law is right or not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that all proceedings under the bill H. R. 320, on yesterday, be vacated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. I ask to have the bill amended, in line 4, by striking out the word "are" and inserting the word "is."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 1351. An act providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and water holes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States, in the State of California, for rendering the same more readily accessible and for the establishment of and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same;

S. 1066. An act authorizing leave of absence to homestead settlers upon unsurveyed lands;

S. 733. An act providing for patents to homesteads on the ceded portion of the Wind River Reservation, Wyo.;

S. 22. An act to promote and encourage the construction of wagon roads over the public lands of the United States;

S. 2266. An act to authorize the appointment of Duncan Grant Richart to the grade of lieutenant in the Army;

S. 1294. An act amending section 81 of the Judicial Code;

S. 1781. An act to correct the military record of Nathaniel Monroe;

S. 1378. An act to amend the military record of John P. Fitzgerald;

S. 898. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to designate certain tracts of land in the State of Nevada upon which continuous residence shall not be required under the homestead laws;

S. J. Res. 25. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of 50,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse; and

S. J. Res. 19. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of 50,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 1378. An act to amend the military record of John P. Fitzgerald; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1781. An act to correct the military record of Nathaniel Monroe; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2266. An act to authorize the appointment of Duncan Grant Richart to the grade of lieutenant in the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 22. An act to promote and encourage the construction of wagon roads over the public lands of the United States; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 733. An act providing for patents to homesteads on the ceded portion of the Wind River Reservation, Wyo.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 1066. An act authorizing leave of absence to homestead settlers upon unsurveyed lands; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. J. Res. 25. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of 50,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse; to the Committee on Printing.

S. J. Res. 19. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of 50,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle; to the Committee on Printing.

S. 898. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to designate certain tracts of land in the State of Nevada upon which continuous residence shall not be required under the homestead laws; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 1230. An act to authorize the construction of bridges across the Fox River at Aurora, Ill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the reading of the Journal on Thursday of this week I may be permitted to address the House for 40 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] asks unanimous consent that after the reading of the Journal and the clearing up of business on the Speaker's table on Thursday he be allowed to address the House for one hour, subject, of course, to the restrictions that have been imposed on all these requests. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman asked for only 40 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Forty minutes.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, let us first see if we can not have some understanding on this matter. There are several gentlemen on this side who desire time. The phosphate or coal-leasing bill comes up to-day as privileged, and as privileged to-morrow, for general debate. Why can we not use that time in Committee of the Whole, where these speeches may be made, giving the bill the right of way, perhaps for the balance of the week, if necessary? I think there is nothing else that is pressing.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought there would be nothing that would come up on Thursday, unless it should be the good-roads bill.

Mr. MANN. I know that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] would like to proceed with his bill on Thursday. It undoubtedly will not be finished on Wednesday, and the general debate would run over then; probably it would. These speeches could be had in general debate on that bill, and it would probably expedite somewhat the business of the House.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, that would suit me just as well, so that I can get in on Thursday or Friday or Saturday.

Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman withdraw his request until we can see if we can arrange it that way? I think the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] would like to go ahead if the House will give him permission.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi withdraws his request.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. OLNEY rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. OLNEY. I rise to ask unanimous consent to have my remarks extended in the RECORD on the dyestuff situation, which includes an extract from the Lewiston Journal of September 15.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of dyestuffs.

Mr. LINDBERGH rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Minnesota rise?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I rise to object.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman objecting?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I am.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota objects.

Mr. OLNEY. Will the gentleman state his reason?

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a communication from the Hon. J. E. Kelley on the farmers and grain gamblers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a communication from Hon. J. E. Kelley on the subject of farmers and grain gamblers. Is there objection?

Mr. DILLON. He was at one time a Member of this House in the Fifty-fifth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota objects.

REPORT OF THE INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS COMMISSION.

Mr. BARNHART rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. BARNHART. To offer a privileged House joint resolution, which I ask to have read and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] submits a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution authorizing the printing of 100,000 copies of the final report of the Commission on Industrial Relations as a House document.

Resolved, etc., That the final report of the Commission on Industrial Relations be printed as a House document and that 100,000 additional copies be printed and bound in cloth, of which 70,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 30,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the accompanying report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BARNHART, from the Committee on Printing, makes the following report (to accompany H. J. Res. ——):

"The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration various joint resolutions providing for the printing as a House document the testimony and final report of the Industrial Relations Commission, reports as a substitute therefor the following joint resolution (H. J. Res. ——) and recommends its adoption:

"That the final report of the Commission on Industrial Relations be printed as a House document and that 100,000 additional copies be printed and bound in cloth, of which 70,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 30,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

"The estimated cost will be $18,711.18.

"The unencumbered balance of the allotment for printing and binding for Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, is $885,678.26."

Mr. FOSTER rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on it.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] risen?

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask a question. Is it proposed that these reports be distributed through the folding room or the document room?

Mr. BARNHART. Through the folding room.

Mr. FOSTER. The resolution does not so provide.

Mr. BARNHART. It is in the usual language. They go to the folding room.

Mr. FOSTER. This resolution providing for the printing of the report has nothing to do with printing the evidence taken before the commission any more than that it has reference to it.

Mr. BARNHART. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit, I might offer a word of explanation. The Committee on Printing has before it numerous resolutions referring to the printing of the report of the Industrial Relations Commission and the hearings before that commission, to the inquiry into the Colorado strike, and some other investigations. There has been a pressing demand that some action be taken at least as to the publication of the report and the hearings.

The committee has been unable, on account of the absence of the chairman of the committee from the city, to get a definite understanding as to what the commission desires to include in the hearings, and for that reason we have been unable to get any estimate from the Government Printing Office as to what it will cost. But I might say, in this connection, that the committee has practically agreed to do this in the way of a report, and that is to ask for the adoption of this resolution now, which provides for the publication of 100,000 copies of the report, and it will be issued from the Government Printing Office. Thereby the plates will be preserved, and for the small sum of about $15.60 these plates can be put back on the press and additional copies issued from time to time as the demand requires.

I might say that the cost of these 100,000 copies will be eighteen thousand and some dollars. It has been practically decided to have printed the usual number of the hearings, which means that each Member of Congress will be provided with a copy, and that each depositary library in the United States shall be furnished with one copy, and the executive departments furnished with one, as the law provides. That will cost, as it is now estimated, about $28,000, and I might say it does not include such things as four volumes of the life of John D. Rockefeller, and other similar documents, which would make the publication so voluminous that it would be almost impossible to handle it and also impossible for anyone to read them. The committee has practically decided, I say, to print all of the evidence in the hearings if it can be arranged with the commission to that effect, preserving the plates for future use, so that the cost of printing additional volumes would be nominal.

We are unable to report on the Colorado Strike Commission because we do not know what the commission's idea of the number of copies needed may be. When we get a hearing from Mr. Walsh and Mr. Manley we will report this out, but for the time being the committee thought it best to commence the publication of these reports, which everybody seems to want, and take the matter up as to the other publications as soon as we can get into communication with those who are most familiar with the actual needs.

Mr. STEENERSON. How many volumes will there be if all these hearings are printed?

Mr. BARNHART. There will be 1 volume of this report. There will be either 7 volumes, of 1,080 pages each, or 14 volumes, of 540 pages each, of the evidence, without any of the exhibits.

Mr. STEENERSON. That will not include the exhibits?

Mr. BARNHART. That will not include the exhibits; that will include the oral evidence only.

Mr. STEENERSON. How many volumes when you include everything?

Mr. BARNHART. We do not know, because we have not been advised as to all that is included in the exhibits, and we are awaiting that information before completing the report of the Printing Committee on this subject.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will there be 30 or 35 volumes?

Mr. BARNHART. The probability is that if all the exhibits should go in there would be many volumes, and if the number of copies are printed that some are asking the cost would be at least $100,000 for this one publication.

Mr. STEENERSON. About 35 volumes?

Mr. BARNHART. I am not prepared to say. I can not make any estimate, for I do not know what all the exhibits might include.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield for a question?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House how many copies of the hearings will be available for Members of the House, to their credit?

Mr. BARNHART. My recollection is that it will mean 230 copies of this report for each congressional district in the United States. Senators, however, will distribute 30 per cent of those, and that will give about 160 copies to each Member of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of the hearings and the report?

Mr. BARNHART. Of the report.

Mr. STAFFORD. I made an estimate as to the number of reports, but I wish to inquire how many copies of the hearings will be available?

Mr. BARNHART. We do not know that, because we do not know the number of volumes yet, and we can not get any estimate of the cost.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought the resolution provided for at least one copy of the hearings for each Member?

Mr. BARNHART. No; it does not. I was just stating that as the intention of the committee in an explanatory way.

Mr. STAFFORD. This merely relates to the report?

Mr. BARNHART. That is all.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order against the resolution.

Mr. BARNHART. Let us have a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdraws the point of order. He never made it, but only reserved it. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, is this a joint resolution or a concurrent resolution?

Mr. BARNHART. It is a joint resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it should be a concurrent resolution. A joint resolution has to be approved by the President.

Mr. MANN. It is a matter which relates purely to printing for the two Houses.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We want this in such form that Members can get copies of this report without delay, and a joint resolution is not the best form for that.

Mr. BARNHART. Then I will ask unanimous consent to change the form of the resolution from a joint resolution to a concurrent resolution.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to say that if this goes through as a joint resolution it will forbid the Members claiming any right to distribute copies of this report. Is that correct?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not talking about that at all. I am trying to get this in such form that copies of this report will be printed promptly, if they are going to be printed at all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York said it ought to be a concurrent resolution. The difference is that a joint resolution has to be signed by the President and a concurrent resolution does not.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is the difference.

Mr. BARNHART. I ask unanimous consent to change the form of the resolution so as to make it a concurrent resolution.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to amend by making it a concurrent resolution.

Mr. BARNHART. That is what we are doing now.

The SPEAKER. We are doing it now.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Thank you.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to change the form of this resolution, to make it a concurrent resolution instead of a joint resolution. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 9 (H. Rept. 31).

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the final report of the Commission on Industrial Relations be printed as a House document and that 100,000 additional copies be printed and bound in cloth, of which 70,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 30,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 86.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Territories be allowed to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

OUR RIGHTS ON THE SEA.

The SPEAKER. Under a special order of the House the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is entitled to one hour. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I hold no brief for any belligerent country. I am not speaking now in the interest of any particular element of the American electorate. Neither am I espousing the cause of any particular State or section of the country. Neither am I pleading in the interest of any particular commodity of commerce; but as a citizen of the Republic I ask the attention of this House to the question of American rights upon the sea, whether they be violated by a projectile from a submarine or interfered with by a high-handed interpretation of international law, which, in my way of thinking, has come to recognize no law save that of necessity, and that of the interpretation of the country that is violating the right.

While I speak especially against aggressions upon the sea by one of the countries, Great Britain, I do not minimize the gravity of the situation of our country in our contention with the central powers. Our Nation will not stand for the submarine war against unarmed merchant vessels, whether carrying American citizens or citizens of other neutral countries, for that sort of interference is not only in violation of international rights as defined in the practice of international law, but it is in violation also of rights that are human, that no one has thought necessary to protect under the decree of law. And while I shall pay special attention to the aggressions of Great Britain, I want to be clearly understood on the question of the German and Austrian interference with our rights as well.

I can best give my position on this contention by reading my telegram of May 15, 1915, to the New York Times in answer to a request from the editor at the time of the occurrence to indicate my view on the President's note on the sinking of the Lusitania.

The people of the United States will stand by the President in his demand for the discontinuance of submarine warfare on merchant vessels, even to the extent of entering the whirlpool, which would blast all hope of our leading the warring nations to peace. If diplomacy fails, we must be the just man armed.

On July 10, 1915, in reply to same authority, I sent the following opinion on the German reply,

The German reply is conciliatory in tone and specific in terms, but disappointing on the main issue. The rights of a citizen in neutral vessels on the high seas are assured. This is no concession, as it was never contended against when the vessels were engaged in legitimate commerce. The requirement that such ships be so marked as to be recognizable by German submarines will not meet with approval, as our flag is our sufficient mark. The limitation of travel to vessels marked and scheduled in accordance with the requirements is not only an infringment of our rights on the sea, but would be interpreted as unneutral. The defense of the sinking of the Lusitania must be regarded as a justification to repeat the act if occasion permits. Nothing will satisfy the country except an assurance of the rights of neutral citizens upon the sea, whether in neutral vessels or unarmed belligerent merchant vessels engaged in legitimate commerce. In this assurance the reply is wanting—a serious disappointment.

On July 24, in response to same authority, requesting an opinion on the policy of national defense in the light of the Lusitania tragedy, I wired the following:

MUST KEEP THE WORLD'S RESPECT.

Peace with honor must be our goal. That is assured neither by vacillating diplomacy nor by inability to defend our Nation's rights. While the Nation will never enter upon a campaign of militarism, it will most certainly employ the necessary means to command respect of all nations. The President's statement that a repetition of the Lusitania incident will be regarded as a deliberate unfriendly act, read in the light of its first use in its significance as reflected in 92 years of the Monroe doctrine, can have but one meaning. War must be the last resort; but if it must come our safety will not lie in propaganda, but in our ability for national defense.

On July 24, 1915, on the same day in answer to the same authority, I wired the following on Germany's second reply:

A NOTE OF FINALITY.

The President's reply has the note of finality. It leaves the German Government to decide whether rights under international law as well as the plainest rights of humanity are to be abandoned for the principle of necessity which knows no law. To have acceded to the last note would have been an abandonment of neutral rights on the sea, for which we have always stood for all nations.

Members of the House, I read these telegrams to you that you may know that while I condemn Great Britain for her overriding all international law, it is not excusing other countries for their violations.

But, turning from incursions upon the sea by the central powers, I want to pay some attention to the statement of my friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], whose scholarly attainments are certainly superior, and whose ability in this House is universally recognized. Last week, when he addressed the House, I put the question directly to him, "Would you exonerate Great Britain in her extending the blockade to neutral countries?" He replied at once without hesitation, which did him credit, "I would not for the time being." When later a question was asked from the Democratic side of the House, "Would you be willing to remove the encroachment?" his reply was not ambiguous but specific, "Not for the time being."

I would not be drawn into this controversy if it were not for that sort of an answer on the floor of the House of Representatives at this particularly critical time when the country ought to see where this policy is leading the Nation. I do not think, Members of the House, that any nation has the right to be a law unto itself, totally oblivious of all the practices of international law, and to the most concise and recent statements that have yet been made of what those practices should be.

The declaration of Paris in 1856 coming at the close of the Crimean War, in which Great Britain was one of the most interested parties, specifically defined the rights of neutrals on the high seas, and this definition was not only indorsed by Great Britain but it was held as her idea ever since when she was a neutral. Let me read the declaration of Paris touching blockade:

ARTICLE 2.

The neutral flag covers enemy's goods, with the exception of contraband of war.

ARTICLE 3.

Neutral goods, with the exception of contraband of war, are not liable to capture under the enemy's flag.

ARTICLE 4.

Blockades in order to be binding must be effective; that is to say, maintained by a force sufficient really to prevent access to the coasts of the enemy.

This declaration of Paris stood as a law and was respected by the signatory nations, especially Great Britain, for 60 years. In 1909 upon the initiation of Great Britain a council in the city of London was held representing the greatest nations of the earth. The council adopted a series of rules and regulations of commerce on the sea, and is known as the declaration of London. The very first decree refers to the declaration of Paris, and substantially repeats the obligations laid down in that declaration in regard to blockade, and even goes beyond it in the liberality of contraband. However, if I wanted to know the present attitude of Great Britain upon the question of contraband when she was a neutral, I would look to the instructions of that country given by Sir Edward Grey, probably Europe's ablest statesman, to the delegates that were to sit in The Hague conference in 1907. Let me read those instructions:

His Majesty's Government recognize to the full the desirability of freeing neutral commerce to the utmost extent possible from interference by belligerent powers, and they are ready and willing for their part, in lieu of endeavoring to frame new and more satisfactory rules for the prevention of contraband trade in the future, to abandon the principle of contraband of war altogether, thus allowing the over-sea trade in neutral vessels between belligerents on the one hand and neutrals on the other to continue during war without any restriction, subject only to its exclusion by blockade from an enemy's port. They are convinced that not only the interest of Great Britain but the common interest of all nations will be found on an unbiased examination of the subject to be served by the adoption of the course suggested.

The recommendation here was made that the delegates to The Hague convention use their power to induce the convention to abolish contraband. It is easy to see why this great sea-power desired to make all neutral goods free. Here lies her strength.

In the event of the proposal not being favorably received, an endeavor should be made to frame a list of the articles that are to be regarded as contraband. Your efforts should then be directed to restricting that definition within the narrowest possible limits and upon lines which have the point of practical extinction as their ultimate aim.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman explain what he means by abolishing contraband?

Mr. FESS. I mean by abolishing contraband to exclude all articles of commerce from liability to seizure in time of war; in a word, to make all goods free instead of contraband.

Continuing the instructions of Grey:

If a definite list of contraband can not be secured, you should support and, if necessary, propose regulations intended to insure that nations shall publish, during peace, the list of articles they will regard as contraband during war, and that no change shall be made in the list on the outbreak of or during hostilities.

You can not make the position stronger against contraband. Those are the instructions, in 1907, to the delegates to The Hague conference, and ought to fairly state England's position as a neutral nation to-day, as they were given but eight years ago. In 1898 we were in war with Spain, Great Britain was in war with the Boers, and I might as well say here and now that your speaker has always been rather favorable to Great Britain in her contentions in the wars in which she has been engaged in the last 100 years, or since at least our trouble with her in 1812–1815. But the Boer war, so bitterly criticized in our country, offered opportunities for Great Britain to say in time of war, when she was a belligerent, what she regarded as contraband. When cotton was proposed as contraband, and foodstuffs were discussed as contraband, Great Britain forbade it in the following words of Lord Salisbury, the prime minister:

Foodstuffs, though having a hostile destination, can be considered as contraband of war only if they are for the enemy's forces; it is not sufficient that they are capable of being so used, it must be shown that this was in fact their destination at the time of their seizure.

In 1904 Russia and Japan were in war. Japan desired to pronounce cotton contraband. Great Britain took the position that cotton should not be contraband, because so small a portion of that which is transported would be used as a commodity of war, and therefore forbade it; and it was dropped from the list.

In 1909 the declaration of London was made and a fixed list of articles to be determined as contraband was written, which I shall put into the RECORD. Not only were those items of commerce specified in two separate articles of the declaration—articles 22 and 23—but a specific, separate article—28—defines what shall not be contraband. That is the latest declaration and the highest expression of international law that is on record to-day, the declaration of London, adopted in the city of London by a convention called by Great Britain. As quickly as this war opened our Secretary of State addressed a note to the British Government asking whether the Government would take the declaration of London as the law to control naval activities during the continuance of the war.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I do not want to be discourteous——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I just want to ask a question as to what nations had accepted that declaration of London.

Mr. FESS. The declaration of London was signed by the representatives of all the powers represented, including Great Britain, and it is the highest and latest expression of the countries, and simply because it was not ratified—and neither was it voted down, for no chance was given to do it—does not make it any less vital or compulsory or imperative. The British Cabinet did not ratify it because its contraband features too much interfered with neutral rights. On the 6th of August, the day after war opened between Germany and England, our Secretary of State asked Great Britain if she would stand by the declaration of London during the present conflict, provided Germany should agree to do it, and he simultaneously asked Germany if she would stand by the declaration of London provided England would do so. Germany replied she would. Great Britain replied she would with modifications. These modifications were vital and of such character that the acceptance was a total negation of the declaration of London. I am not inclined to criticize our administration at this time upon this question, but I am going to read one statement in our note of December 26, 1914, that I think is seriously weak and was a fatal mistake.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I am very glad to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TEMPLE. Before the gentleman passes from the discussion of the declaration of London, I should like to ask whether the American Government, in submitting the proposals which he speaks of to the various belligerents, assumed that the declaration of London was international law or that it was a treaty, or either of those things?

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, our Government did not assume that it was a treaty, because it was not in the form of a treaty but a convention. It was not made as a treaty. It was not submitted to the Senate, as I remember. Our Government, however, did assume that it was the highest expression of rights on the sea and wanted to know whether the belligerents would take that position.

Mr. TEMPLE. I think the gentleman will find that it was submitted to the Senate and received the full two-thirds vote in the Senate.

Mr. FESS. As a treaty?

Mr. TEMPLE. Ratified; but the ratifications were not exchanged.

Mr. FESS. If Dr. TEMPLE, the Member from Pennsylvania, says that, it is true, because he knows what he is talking about and is always careful of his utterances.

Mr. TEMPLE. Then I should like to ask one other question. Does the American Government now recognize the declaration of London as international law or as a binding treaty?

Mr. FESS. It does not in this matter, because it has withdrawn its request from both Governments since Great Britain rejected it. It was withdrawn October 22, as the documents which I shall insert will show. This was necessary to hold the belligerents to the laws governing rights on the sea.

Mr. TEMPLE. May I——

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be disrespectful to any Member, and especially not to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I do want to have time to say some specific things before my time is up. Listen to the one thing that, I think, was very unfortunate, from the State Department December 26. Among other things, Secretary Bryan said:

The commerce between countries which are not belligerent should not be interfered with by those at war unless such interference is manifestly an imperative necessity to protect their national safety, and then only to the extent that it is a necessity.

Mr. Speaker, I appeal to both sides of the House, Republican and Democratic, whether that is not a surrender of our rights, as defined by international practice, to the law of necessity, which is the one thing Germany has ever claimed in justification of her submarine policy—that it was necessary for her to do this and that—a law which we can not and will not stand for. And when the Secretary of State put England in the position to plead the law of necessity, Sir Edward Grey immediately seized upon it and quoted the identical words in his reply of January 7, a part of which I read:

His Majesty's Government cordially agree in the principle enunciated by the Government of the United States, that a belligerent, in dealing with trade between neutrals, should not interfere unless such interference is necessary to protect the belligerent's national safety, and then only to the extent to which this is a necessity.

From that day until now every movement on the sea by Great Britain has been defended by that statement laid down in our correspondence on this sensitive point; and while I have not noticed weakness in our diplomacy since that time to that extent, yet here is the beginning of a policy that is a total surrender, I fear, and we are paying the penalty for it at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I would not accept the position of my friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD], who spoke yesterday with so much interest to everyone, when he rather took the position, as I thought, that the Nation ought to lay an embargo upon munitions of war. I would not do that, save as a necessary means to prevent a greater evil. Neither would I take the position of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] that we should not interfere with the exportation of munitions of war for the reason that England needs them. I doubt whether any man has the right on the floor of this House to make the statement that we ought not to limit munitions of war or their shipment because one of the belligerent countries needs them. I doubt its wisdom. I know it is not discreet; I would not say that it is unpatriotic, because of my regard for the splendid and scholarly Member who made the statement. But I oppose the embargo upon munitions for other reasons, three specific reasons. First, the right given in The Hague conference, article 7, is not limited to the right of a neutral to sell. It must be understood when we say a neutral we refer to citizens of a neutral country. To be sure, our Nation does not sell munitions.

The real significance to us is not the right of a neutral to sell, but rather the right of the belligerent to buy. If we were doing nothing more in laying an embargo than interfering with an individual American citizen selling munitions, we could afford to do it if we found it necessary, and we would not violate any international agreement but simply the right of our citizens, but when one belligerent has taken control of the sea, so that but one can get munitions, and we turn around, by act of Congress, and say to an individual citizen, "You can not ship to the one who can buy," we interfere with the right of the belligerent to purchase, and it would be unneutral, in my way of thinking. Again, I would not vote for an embargo, because this country urged the right of a belligerent to buy. We are not military. We do not believe in building up great munition plants; but we hold our right in case we get into war to go to any neutral country on the earth and buy the things we need that we are not making. It is in the interests of peace and against the military spirit that we refuse to put an embargo upon munitions of war.

And I would not vote for an embargo for another reason, and that is, if we put a law of that kind on the statute books we will be compelled to start a system of dangerous espionage in our country to see that no individual violates the law, for in case he did and we did not prevent it we multiply our troubles on the sea with the countries that are now in war. But, my friends, I would not refuse to vote for an embargo as an extreme and necessary measure to compel warring nations to respect our rights. I repeat, I would not refuse because I wanted one of the countries to get the help and the others not to get it. I do not put it on such a basis as that. [Applause.] Germany's inability to get munitions is not our refusal to sell them, but her inability to deliver what our citizens offer. What I am contending for is that the laws of contraband shall be respected by every country; that the laws of blockade shall be respected by every country.

What does Great Britain do in regard to these? I hold in my hand a list of the orders in council by Great Britain. One of these orders in council says that they adopt the declaration of London, with such and such a modification. Then the modification follows. The order in council of the 20th of August, 1914, did what? It repudiated the declaration of London by changing the list of contraband which the English instructions to the delegates to The Hague conference two years before inveighed against. After she had changed it August 20, 1914, on October 29, 1914, comes a second order in council and says:

The order in council of the 20th of August, directing the adoption and enforcement during the present hostilities of the convention known as the declaration of London, subject to the addition and modification therein specified, is hereby repealed.

You will note the orders in council of August 20, 1914, repudiated the declaration of London. The orders in council of October 29 repudiated the orders in council of August 20, and this is followed by a third repudiation of the last orders in council. Members of this House, is it possible that any nation can interfere by mere orders in council, thereby nullify all international agreement, and make herself a law unto herself to be observed by all nations, and by herself only so long as she sees fit not to change it again? My contention against Great Britain is that international law must be respected by her as well as it must be by the central powers; that is all I hold. [Applause.] I shall place in the RECORD the declaration of London that we may see how Great Britain has violated the very decrees which she has had most to do in making, for she has in the last 60 years been the neutral country of the earth and not the belligerent, and her contention has been for herself as a neutral. Now it is repudiated because she is a belligerent, and I do not think that this House is under any obligation to sit quiet and excuse all of these violations. What is the first one? From August, 1914, to August, 1915, she changed the list of contraband three times. She has done it after war began, both of which she declaimed against in 1907 and 1909. What else? She has repudiated the law of blockade, for the very first declaration of both the declarations of Paris and London is that a blockade must not extend to neutral coasts. Now her blockade extends to Denmark, to Holland, to Scandinavia, because they are in juxtaposition to the enemy's country. In other words, she claims the right in spite of all law to stop all neutral commerce to these countries She has done it in violation of, first, her own professions when she was a neutral, of her own demand upon belligerents when she was a neutral, and is doing it to-day in the face of our protests and at a time when we stand upon our rights simply of international law. It has been said that her blockade is justified on the continuous voyage as defined by our courts during the Civil War. It is not. Such would be in direct violation of our Nation's instructions to our naval authorities. I here append these instructions:

INSTRUCTIONS OF THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY TO FLAG OFFICERS COMMANDING SQUADRONS AND OFFICERS COMMANDING CRUISERS RELATIVE TO THE RIGHT OF SEARCH.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, August 18, 1862.

SIR: Some recent occurrences in the capture of vessels, and matters pertaining to the blockade, render it necessary that there should be a recapitulation of the instructions heretofore from time to time given, and also of the restrictions and precautions to be observed by our squadrons and cruisers.

It is essential, in the remarkable contest now waging, that we should exercise great forbearance, with great firmness, and manifest to the world that it is the intention of our Government, while asserting and maintaining our own rights, to respect and scrupulously regard the rights of others. It is in this view that the following instructions are explicitly given:

First. That you will exercise constant vigilance to prevent supplies of arms, munitions, and contraband of war from being conveyed to the insurgents, but that under no circumstances will you seize any vessel within the waters of a friendly nation.

Second. That, while diligently exercising the right of visitation on all suspected vessels, you are in no case authorized to chase and fire at a foreign vessel without showing your colors and giving her the customary preliminary notice of a desire to speak and visit her.

Third. That when that visit is made, the vessel is not then to be seized without a search carefully made, so far as to render it reasonable to believe that she is engaged in carrying contraband of war for or to the insurgents, and to their ports directly or indirectly by transshipment, or otherwise violating the blockade; and that if, after visitation and search, it shall appear to your satisfaction that she is in good faith and without contraband, actually bound and passing from one friendly or so-called neutral port to another, and not bound or proceeding to or from a port in the possession of the insurgents, then she can not be lawfully seized.

Fourth. That, to avoid difficulty and error in relation to papers which strictly belong to the captured vessel, and mails that are carried, or parcels under official seals, you will, in the words of the law, "preserve all the papers and writings found on board and transmit the whole of the originals unmutilated to the judge of the district to which such prize is ordered to proceed"; but official seals, or locks, or fastenings of foreign authorities are in no case, nor on any pretext, to be broken, or parcels covered by them read by any naval authorities, but all bags or other things covering such parcels, and duly seized and fastened by foreign authorities, will be, in the discretion of the United States officer to whom they may come delivered to the consul, commanding naval officer, or legation of the foreign government, to be opened, upon the understanding that whatever is contraband or important as evidence concerning the character of a captured vessel will be remitted to the prize court, or to the Secretary of State at Washington, or such sealed bag or parcels may be at once forwarded to this department, to the end that the proper authorities of the foreign Government may receive the same without delay.

You are specially informed that the fact that a suspicious vessel has been indicated to you as cruising in any limit which has been prescribed by this department does not in any way authorize you to depart from the practice of the rules of visitation, search and capture prescribed by the law of nations.

Very respectfully,

GIDEON WELLES,
Secretary of the Navy.

Some people cite the Springbok, the Peterhoff, the Dolphin, the Pearl, the Stephan Hart, and the Bermuda cases to prove Great Britain is not doing more than we did in the Civil War. Members of this House, that, in my judgment, is a perversion of both the facts and the law, and it hurts to find a Congressman who will make the statement. Not one of those cases has taken a position other than what we now demand Great Britain to recognize, not a single one. The Peterhoff is in direct opposition to Britain's present claims. For the principle of the cases pronounced by Chief Justice Chase, some of them by Judge Betts, the brainy jurists of the country, was this: If the goods, contraband, of course, are shipped by way of Nassau and were intended to reach the belligerents or blockaded coasts, it was seizable whether the vessel was to stop, halt, and then go on, or even if that vessel was to be unloaded and the cargo to be transshipped in faster sailing vessels to avoid capture.

Every single decision says if the goods—and they were contraband, mark you—were to go into the mass of the commerce of the island of Nassau, then the goods are not seizable, and neither is the vessel. The basis of these decisions is not covered by a single case that we have in contention with Great Britain to-day. And when Members of the House say that Great Britain is not doing anything save what we did, in my way of thinking, they are clouding both the facts and the point of decision in all of the cases I have mentioned, and what is worse, laying the basis for serious trouble that is bound to follow. That is not the only serious indication of our present trouble.

The blockade may be used as a discrimination against not only our rights but against our immediate future, for if Great Britain can shut us out of the markets of Scandinavia and Denmark and Holland, which we emphatically deny, she can not blockade those coasts, even though we agree that it is a continuous voyage, unless she blockades the coasts against her own vessels [applause], for a blockade must extend to all vessels of all countries alike. And if Great Britain could extend her blockade to these vessels alone she could herself buy the article we otherwise would sell to neutral countries and then reship it at her own price to the same countries. In this way she fixes the price she pays to us and also the price she receives from them. Such monopoly on the sea is monstrous. These lines which are daily tightening upon the world's sea-borne commerce are ominous to any man who has watched the movement of this country the last year, especially in the light of the past.

My friends, this will not be tolerated unless you are ready to see every decree of international law violated. I presume my friend from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] will give you figures in detail to show you the profit Great Britain can make by extending her blockade there and keeping it open to herself. Members from Montana will show the same thing in copper, and Members from Chicago and Kansas City will tell you about meats. Blockade must exclude England if it excludes neutrals.

Again, a blockade must be effectual to be valid. This is why we paid no attention to Germany's order of February 18 declaring the waters about Great Britain a war zone. You can not blockade a coast by an invisible fence of submarines. Germany never called it a blockade for that reason. It would have meant nothing under international law.

Is England's blockade effective? We say no. Our country has already notified her that it is "illegal, ineffectual, and indefensible."

She admits it is not effectual when she refuses us to sell to neutrals on the ground that the goods reach Germany. If they do, it is conclusive of the ineffectual character of her blockade and can not be valid against neutrals.

CONTRABAND.

Contraband is both absolute and conditional. Absolute contraband can be seized when it is shipped to enemy countries, whether direct or indirect. That is, if we were shipping absolute contraband, like shells, powder, cannon, and so on, to Germany, and shipping it through the neutral countries, that could be seized and confiscated wherever found, because it is reaching Germany indirectly. But this must be limited to absolute contraband. It can not extend to conditional contraband. Conditional contraband covers foodstuffs, clothing, mules, drugs, automobiles, and such articles that may or may not be used by the army, and can not be seized when consigned to neutral ports, nor to even belligerent ports when for the use of the civilian population. But Great Britain has decreed that conditional contraband shipped to a neutral country is seizable, and thereby she has eliminated the difference between conditional and absolute contraband, so that there is no discrimination whatever any more. In this method of order in council she has by the extension of contraband really blockaded not only the enemy but neutral coasts before she issued blockade orders.

I will submit for the RECORD tables of vessels, specifying the goods reaching neutral coasts, that have been seized by Great Britain, and I will submit 155 cases of it, and I will also show you where Great Britain, from March 11 to June 17, required 271 vessels to stop at a certain port, a port of her own call, and that were required to do it because she said so. She does not only say what we may ship, but where we may ship and what route we must take, and at the greatest cost.

FREE SHIPS; FREE GOODS.

That is not the only thing. Enemy's goods under neutral flags, if free goods, must be protected. I do not say contraband; certainly not. I refer to enemy free goods. Here are dyes, that can neither be regarded conditional nor absolute contraband, manufactured by Germany. We need them in this country. We have heard what Mr. Metz has said upon the subject. We have received resolution after resolution from firms asking that these goods be released. Why are they not released? What has become of the long-established rule that neutral flags cover enemy goods not contraband? On March 15, 1915, by orders in council Great Britain made this ruling, the most far-reaching of all her rulings, in which she says that any goods of the enemy found on neutral vessels—for example, dyes of Germany on American vessels—will be seized, taken into port, and, if not requisitioned, etc. This same order in council is not limited to goods going to or from Germany, but extends to every vessel on her way to any port other than a German port carrying goods either of enemy property or destined to enemy use. It also extends to all neutral vessels destined to neutral ports that carry goods of enemy origin. This order forbids this country purchasing any goods whatsoever from Germany, no matter what the suffering produced by their want, except upon her permission.

What else has she said in that orders of council of March 15, 1915. Any neutral goods, contraband or noncontraband, found under enemy flags will be seized. What has become of the law that free goods mean a free sea? If it is enemy goods, in enemy vessels, nobody has a question. If it is absolute contraband, under neutral vessels, nobody has a question unless that contraband was going to a neutral country to be applied for its own use. But that is not all.

THE WILHELMINA A TEST CASE.

Here is the vessel Wilhelmina, loaded with foodstuffs and consigned to a Mr. Green, an American citizen. Mr. Green accompanies the vessel to Germany. Great Britain says foodstuffs on the Wilhelmina are contraband, because it is conditional. In substance she says, "If you send it to Germany, we will seize it, whether it is to be given directly to the armed forces or to the German people, because under a decree of Germany all foodstuffs to reach Germany will be applied by the German Government." The German Government said to us, and we to Great Britain, that this decree does not apply to any goods that go to municipalities, for the order did not cover municipalities. Yet Great Britain seized the Wilhelmina because loaded with foodstuffs consigned not to the German Government nor a German citizen but to an American citizen to see that it went to the civil population. This seizure is made in spite of Britain's position in 1898, cited at the outset of my address, and in the face of our well-known position. In 1904, when Russia wanted to so treat foodstuffs, our own John Hay said, "Articles like coal, cotton, and provisions, though ordinarily innocent, are capable of warlike use, are not subject to capture and confiscation unless shown by evidence to be actually destined for the military or naval forces of a belligerent." How does this comport with the Wilhelmina? What has taken place since this seizure? No goods, conditional contraband or free, are admitted into any of the central countries.

Now, you say to me, "Mr. FESS, are you condemning Great Britain for her retaliation upon Germany?" You might as well ask me, "Are you condemning Germany for retaliating upon Great Britain?" Why, my fellow Members of the House, I condemn Germany for her submarine warfare. I also condemn Great Britain for attempting to starve the noncombatants of a nation of 65,000,000 people without regard to sex or age or condition. They are both at fault and both are putting it upon the basis of necessity. You say, "Do you not condemn Germany for what she did in Belgium?" Certainly I do, and likewise I condemn Great Britain for what she is doing in Saloniki, Greece, and what she did, or refused to do, when Japan interfered with the neutrality of China. You say, "Do you not condemn Austria for what she did in extending her influence over Bosnia and Herzegovina and with the prospect of extending it over Servia?" Why, certainly I condemn it; but I likewise condemn Servia for keeping within her borders the junta of assassins who murdered their own King and later assassinated an heir to a neighboring country. You say, "Do you not condemn Turkey for her outrages against the Christian Armenians?" Why, certainly. I condemn the Turk with all the force I can command, and I likewise condemn Russia for her brutal treatment of the Jew that is within her borders. These countries are not free from fault. They are in a life and death struggle, and because they are thus endangered some people say that we ought to take sides with one or the other of the belligerents. I deny it. Individual citizens will have their preferences. I have mine. But this Nation must take no sides as between the contestants, and no Congressman should embarrass the country by so doing. If you ask me "What are you going to do about it?" I answer you, "That is no question for any to hesitate about."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 50 minutes.

Mr. FESS. It is the question that is asked by one who speaks with a power to resist the rights of the innocent. It is a question of a belligerent which believes itself strong enough to ignore all the rights of a neutral. What I fear—what every man must fear—is this tightening of the ropes which bind us. The meaning is not for to-day, it is for the future. Britain rules the waves. While our contentions with the central powers have not been adjudicated, yet we see the prospect of reparation, so far as it can be made. It is true there can be no full reparation for the cruel submarine warfare; but all our notes to these countries have brought concessions, not satisfactory, it is true, but it ought not be forgotten that England has made not a single concession. Her control is becoming stronger. I shall place in the RECORD our requests and her refusals.

This attitude of the two countries is noted in the case of adopting the declaration of London; of England's answer January 7 and February 10 to our protest of December 26; it is true of her reply February 19 to our memorial of the 10th on the misuse of our flag; it is true in the case of the Wilhelmina, which we made a special case; it is true in her reply March 13 to our note of February 20 proposing mutual concessions in naval warfare, to which Germany agreed if England would.

Anyone who closes his eyes to the full meaning of this attitude repudiates the lessons of the past. Her feeling toward us is not very cordial.

Many of the English newspapers are outspoken. The Globe assumed an attitude of hostility, in language approaching an insult, when commenting on our note of December 26, 1914:

> The voice of the great neutral Nation which seeks to be the final arbiter in civilization is raised for the first time, not on any question of higher morality, but to express impatience at the fact that the greatest war in the history of the world has interfered with the opportunities of American traders to make money out of the necessities of belligerents.

Many of the English public urged the Government to pursue such policy as will in its judgment best aid the allies in their struggles, regardless of the wishes of the United States. Only recently the Pall Mall Gazette, discussing American press reports regarding the attitude which the United States may adopt with regard to the blockade question, says:

The British Empire, which is shedding blood and not ink for the vindication of "neutral rights," has reached a stage in the conflict where technicalities will not be allowed to restrain the legitimate use of all its weapons of warfare.

The Evening Standard says:

Germany is now clothed in a white sheet. She and America are joining hands in the noble task of bullying the nation that has respected every law of humanity and has persistently interpreted the law of nations to her own disadvantage.

Poor England! No moral crime can be laid at our doors, but we are interfering with the war profits of American manufacturers, so we must raise our blockade and thus prolong the war, and this is asked in the name of humanity.

There is one comfort for us miserable sinners. President Wilson and Count von Bernstorff will knock at our door in vain.

You ask me, "What are you going to do about it?" I will tell you what I might be willing to do. We may be driven to it here, not because it is our wish or desire, but as a measure to compel respect for our rights, and that is, if Great Britain will not respect our rights as defined in law, I am about ready to vote now to stop all the munitions of war going to her. This at least would raise the question why it is right to sell her weapons of death and wrong to sell the noncombatants of Germany bread for life. [Applause.]

I would not stop munitions to aid Germany. Farthest from it, for I fear the military spirit of that great country. And while I fear the spirit of militaristic Germany, I also fear the navalism of Great Britain, as I feel it now on the sea. I would not vote an embargo on behalf of or against any belligerent, but we may be driven to do it to compel respect for us upon the seas. I am ready now to ask this Congress to adopt a resolution——

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand, then, that the gentleman's position is that he regards the controversy with Great Britain on an alleged breach of international law as entirely distinct and separate from the controversy with Germany on another alleged breach of international law, and in that respect he agrees with the administration of this country in these various controversies?

Mr. FESS. I would not say that; I will say to my friend from Missouri that at this time I am trying to set forth the situation as it is and permit all to draw their conclusions.

Mr. BORLAND. You agree to the extent that you would not make one conditional upon the other?

Mr. FESS. I agree that when the President had a controversy with Germany on the submarines he could not be expected to link up that controversy with our controversy with Great Britain. They involved different nations as well as different principles; one referred to our property rights and the other to rights of life. I shall ask the House to adopt a resolution to the effect that the American Congress instruct our Committee on Foreign Relations to investigate the violations upon the sea, both by the central powers and the allies, and report the same at once, or as soon as it is possible. This investigation should cover England's interference with our mails. If you would say "What further would you do" I do not think anything further would need to be done. I think that if we would stiffen our backbone and not take orders from any country outside of our own, we would not have any trouble.

A few months before President Washington went out of office he wrote to that great friend of his, Alexander Hamilton, from Philadelphia:

We are an independent nation, and act for ourselves. Having fulfilled and being willing to fulfill (as far as we are able) our engagements with other nations, and having decided on, and strictly observed a neutral conduct toward the belligerent powers, from an unwillingness to involve ourselves in war * * * we will not be dictated to by the politics of any nation under heaven, further than treaties require of us.

Whether the present or any circumstances should do more than soften this language may merit consideration. But if we are to be told by a foreign power (if our engagements with it are not infracted) what we shall do, and what we shall not do, we have independence yet to seek and have contended hitherto for very little. I commend these words of our first great President, who was at the head of a Nation of 4,000,000 people residing in 16 States east of the Mississippi, for careful consideration by the Nation of 100,000,000 of freemen comprehending a continent with half a hundred empire States.

I am not belligerent. I think, my friends, that all that it is necessary for this country to do, in order that our rights will be respected from every quarter, is to make it clear that we are not taking the position of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], an ally of any one of the countries, but that we are here in the American Congress, the legislative body of the first great Republic of the earth, and we are here speaking not for any belligerent, taking sides with no one of the contestants, speaking not for the North, the South, the East, or the West, nor for German-Americans, or Anglo-Americans, but as American citizens we shall cease our bitter partisanship toward individual nations, and shall suppress the foolish prejudices that I hear so frequently, both in public and in private, and raise our voice not for any section or for any particular element of our electorate, but for America, for America's rights on sea and land, for her nobility of purpose as a friend and well-wisher of all the countries now in the throes of war, then we will compel the recognition of our rights in all quarters and by all nations, belligerent or neutral. "Thrice armed is he who hath his quarrel just." War will not come if we stand for our rights. War will come if we shilly-shally. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. William Bayard Hale has made a partial compilation of vessels detained, which I will print in the RECORD.

It is impossible to obtain anything like a full list of ships detained and cargoes seized by Great Britain on their voyages between the United States and other neutral countries, but the following list of carefully verified cases may serve to illustrate the methods by which the British Government is strangling American commerce.

The first list includes the cases of 155 vessels brought into British ports or otherwise detained for examination. Of these 40 were forced to discharge their cargoes, which were held for prize-court proceedings. Thirty more were subjected to protracted detention at great loss. One American vessel carrying oil to Copenhagen was run aground by the English prize crew aboard her off the coast of Scotland.

It will be noted that this list does not include cases like that of the Wilhelmina, which, when seized by the British, was bound for Hamburg with an innocent cargo, and the Dacia, which was seized by the French Navy under British instructions.

Nor does this list include the vessels, 273 in number, recorded by the Government of the United States in an appendix to its note of October 21 as having been detained in the port of Kirkwall alone between March 11 and June 17. The Government list is appended, bringing this merely illustrative record of ships detained up to a total of 428.

From March 11, 1915, to June 16, 1915, 271 vessels carrying American cargoes were compelled to stop at Kirkwall, England.

A PARTIAL LIST OF SHIPS DETAINED.

S. S. Kumeric (British): Sailed from Galveston July 17, 1914 (via Newport News July 24), for Bremen. Cargo, 49,000 bushels of grain. Taken to Queenstown August 2; detained at Liverpool August 19.

S. S. Georg Hawley (American, American Exporters' Line; C. H. Sprague & Sons, Boston): Sailed from New York November 15 for Copenhagen. Cargo, general. Taken into Falmouth November 30; gave up ship's papers voluntarily for examination. Reason for detention: None given to master officially. Released January 2, 1915, and proceeded with full cargo to destination. Other circumstances: Master protested in writing on December 5, 1914. Master was verbally informed by customs officers that they would have to hold the vessel on account of the flour, wheat, and oil on board. Later master was simply informed verbally that trouble was because the consignee of the 550 barrels of oil was at that time under suspicion by the British Government. On January 1, 1915, master was told to proceed with his full cargo on board and no excuse or reason given for the 33 days' detention at Falmouth. Damage for detention at charter rates, etc., amounted to $14,000.

S. S. Canton (Swedish): Sailed from New York November 17, 1914, for Stockholm and Gothenburg. Cargo, copper, 375 tons. Shipper: American Smelting & Refining Co. Held December 1, the Tyne.

Statement of Secretary Lansing regarding vessels detained by British authorities:

SEPTEMBER 10, 1915.

(1) Vessels whose cargoes and papers have been of such a character as to require but brief time for examination have been held in British ports, according to this Government's information, for prolonged periods, in some instances for more than a month, and then released without the institution of prize-court proceedings.

The steamer Chester, which sailed from Baton Rouge for Rotterdam with a cargo of illuminating oil, was taken into Falmouth, September 21, 1914, and held until November 4 of that year.

The steamer Occan, carrying the same kind of a cargo, from New York to Rotterdam, was taken into Plymouth September 23, 1914, and similarly released November 5.

The steamer Charlois and the steamer New York, carrying similar cargoes, were taken into British ports on September 30 and October 12, 1914, respectively, and similarly released on October 27.

The steamers American and Rotterdam, carrying cargoes of oil to Rotterdam, were also detained under conditions similar to those of the vessels just mentioned in the fall of 1914.

The steamer Christian Knudsen, carrying a cargo of oil in bulk, consigned to a Danish corporation in Copenhagen, was brought into the port of Kirkwall, detained for 11 days, and then released.

Vessels carying oil from the United States to long-established markets in Scandinavian countries have repeatedly been detained without being sent to the prize court for adjudication. Among them may be mentioned the Brindilla, the Platuria, the Wico, the Polarine, the Pioneer, the Llama, the Muskogee, and the John D. Rockefeller.

The steamer Denver, which carried a full cargo of cotton from Norfolk to Bremen and which had been loaded under the supervision of a British consular officer, was taken into Kirkwall in January last, as the department was informed by the British Government, just to examine her papers and to vertify her cargo.

The George W. Hawley was held for a month because she refused to comply with a requirement of the British authorities to discharge a single shipment, the illegal destination of which does not appear to have been disclosed by any evidence. The vessel carried a mixed cargo, including a shipment of oil. The British authorities insisted that the vessel should discharge the oil, which, the shipper represented, was consigned to one of its long-established agents in Sweden. Finally, it was announced that the vessel would be released as an act of grace.

The steamer Wico was held by the British authorities last March. This Government was advised that the British minister at Stockholm had informed the Swedish foreign office that the vessel had arrived in a British port with a full cargo of oil for a concern in Stockholm, and that, in view of the recent seizure by a German man-of-war of the steamship Bryssel and her cargo, the British Government required complete assurances from the Swedish Government before the Wico could be allowed to proceed to destination that she would not share the fate of the Bryssel.

Subsequently this Government was informed that the vessel had been allowed to proceed, but that the British Government felt that, in the event of further cargoes going to Stockholm being seized by German ships, the whole question of permitting oil cargoes to proceed to that destination would have to be seriously reconsidered.

The steamer Llama, carrying a cargo of oil to a Scandinavian port, was taken into Kirkwall and subsequently released on June 5 last. After departing from Kirkwall the ship was again arrested on June 6, and although the officer of the war vessel which seized the Llama apparently was shown the ship's release papers, he placed a prize crew on board and ordered the vessel to Aberdeen and thence to Leith, where she was finally released on June 12, although she could not proceed until June 15, owing to a shortage of coal.

(2) Vessels have been held until they have reconsigned their cargoes to a consignee in a neutral country designated by the British Government.

The steamer Seguranca, which carried a general cargo from New York to the Netherlands, was detained at a great loss to the owners of the vessel and to the shippers in a British port for the greater part of last April, in order that her cargo might be reconsigned to the Netherlands Oversea Trust. The manifest showed that the entire cargo was consigned to named consignees in the Netherlands and was accompanied by a certificate of the British consul general in New York, stating that the loading was supervised by his inspector and that the vessel contained no cargo other than that specified in the manifest. A large part of the cargo, consisting of fresh fruit stored in the hold of the vessel, was subject to decay with great rapidity.

A similar requirement was imposed on the steamer F. J. Lisman, which during last June was detained at London. It appears that, after a prolonged detention of the ship of over a month, representatives of the shippers were compelled to discharge both contraband and non-contraband articles, and that the captain and the shippers, finding their efforts to comply with the requirements of the British authorities hopeless, abandoned the voyage.

The steamers A. A. Raven and Vitalia, carrying articles listed as conditional contraband, were detained in a British port in March last until the goods shipped to specified consignees in Holland could be consigned to the Netherlands Oversea Trust.

The steamer Neches was detained last May for about two weeks in order that a shipment of cotton destined for Rotterdam might be consigned to the Netherlands Oversea Trust.

The steamer Zzaadjik was detained last June, as the department was informed, while the British minister at The Hague made inquiries as to whether the Netherlands Oversea Trust had accepted the consignment of the cargo.

(3) Detentions have been made without evidence amounting to probable cause.

The steamer Annam, which was detained at Kirkwall last April, carried a cargo of food products from the United States to Swedish ports. She was detained owing to a "suspicion," as the British Government stated, that a part of its cargo was destined for Germany.

The steamer Dronning Olga was detained at Kirkwall in April last and the cargo, which consisted of cotton and food products, was placed in the prize court on the ground, as the department was informed by the British Government, that it was "believed" that it was ultimately destined for Germany.

The steamer Hilding, which sailed from New York for Copenhagen with a general cargo consisting largely of food products, was seized and taken into Leith last April, and this Government was informed that the cargo had been seized as contraband with the expectation of holding it under the order in council of March 11, 1915, if the charge that the goods were contraband should fail.

Numerous similar instances might be cited.

The steamers Christian Knudsen and Platuria, carrying oil from New York to Denmark, were detained by the British authorities last fall, taken into British ports, and held until the British Government, as they stated, could make an investigation as to the destination of the cargoes. Furthermore, this Government was informed that the vessels had been detained pending the receipt of guaranties from Denmark against the exportation of the cargoes and that the orders were given for the release of the vessels on the receipt of satisfactory guaranties.

The steamer Brindilla, which sailed from New York October 13 last, with a cargo of oil for Alexandria, was taken into port at Halifax and later released, as the department was informed, when the British authorities received information that the ship's cargo was expected at Alexandria.

The steamer Ambra was taken into a British port in July last, and this Government was informed that this vessel was held pending inquiries that had been instituted concerning destination of certain items of her cargo. About a week later the vessel was allowed to proceed.

In July last this Government was informed by the British Government that the prolonged detention of the oil steamers Polarine, Platuria, and Pioneer was due to the fact that His Majesty's Government's attention had latterly been drawn to the very large quantities of oil which had been shipped to Scandinavian countries during the last few months; that there had been every reason to suspect that some of the oil was destined for enemy countries; and that the arrival of the steamers in quick succession necessitated the institution of inquiries as to the ultimate destination of the oil.

The owners of these vessels and their cargoes complained to the Government of the United States against their detention, stating that the vessels carried the usual cargoes consigned in good faith to long-established subsidiaries in neutral countries, and further representing that, since supplies from Russia and Roumania had been prevented from entering Scandinavian ports, a large increase of business with them had been expected, but it had been found that during the first five months of the year 1915 total shipments of all petroleum products to these countries were less than for the same period last year, although ness in previous years had steadily increased.

(4) Vessels have been held, according to statements of the British Government, because of the manner in which shipments have been consigned.

The steamer Eincrjarl was brought into Kirkwall last May and its cargo of cottonseed cake, shipped from Newport News to Denmark, which the shippers represented was to be used exclusively for consumption in Denmark, was seized. This Government was informed that the cargo was discharged because it was consigned "to order."

The steamers Alfred Nobel, Bjorstjerne Bjornsen, and Fricdland were seized last autumn because their cargoes were consigned "to order."

The shipments on the steamers America and Artemis have been placed in prize court under the order in council of March 11, 1915, because, the goods being consigned by the shippers to themselves, there was no guaranty of their ultimate destination.

(5) Goods have been seized by the British Government on the ground, as this Government has been informed, that the country to which they were shipped had not prohibited their export.

In the fall of the year 1914 copper shipped from the United States to Sweden on the steamers Francisco, Antares, Idaho, Tyr, and Toronto was seized by the British authorities, because, as the British Government stated, the Swedish Government had not yet prohibited the reexportation of copper from Sweden.

A consignment of rubber on the Swedish ship Zamore had been placed in prize court last January, because, as the British Government stated, of the absence of a comprehensive prohibition on the exportation of rubber in all its forms from Denmark.

(6) The British authorities have repeatedly seized articles classified as contraband articles classified as conditional contraband, as well as noncontraband goods, shipped to Scandinavian countries, to the Netherlands, and to Italy, then neutral, although the reexportation of such commodities from these countries had been forbidden.

In December last the steamer Tellus was ordered to discharge a shipment of copper shipped from New York directly to a consignee in Milan, Italy, although by an Italian decree of November 13, 1914, the exportation of goods shipped in this manner was forbidden.

The steamer Joseph W. Fordney was seized 4 miles off the coast of Norway and, in charge of a prize crew, brought into Kirkwall April 8 last. The ship's manifest showed that the cargo consisted entirely of cattle fodder consigned to a person in Maimo, Sweden. It appeared from information presented to this Government that an affidavit regarding the character and destination of the cargo, made by the shipper of the entire cargo, was attached to the bill of lading, and that this affidavit contained a certification by the British consul general and the Swedish consul, and also a statement by the latter to the effect that the exportation from Sweden of the goods of which the cargo consisted was prohibited. The vessel was brought into a British port and her cargo discharged. This Government was informed by the British Government that, apart from the uncertainty of the address of the consignee of the cargo of this vessel, His Majesty's Government had evidence that the cargo was not destined for bona fide Swedish consumption, but was intended for Germany.

Numerous other similar instances might be cited, including those of the detention of vessels carrying oil to Scandinavian ports which have been mentioned.

(7) Detentions have been made pending assurances that embargoed goods would be allowed to pass through a neutral country to Great Britain's allies.

The steamer Leelanaw, which carried a cargo of cotton from Galveston to Gothenburg for transshipment to Moscow, was detained in a British port early in June last. Relative to the detention of this vessel the British Foreign Office said:

"In view of the fact that cotton has now been placed on the Swedish prohibition of export list, His Majesty's Government have not considered it advisable to allow this large cargo to go on to Gothenburg until they are assured that there is a fair chance of it reaching its declared ultimate destination."

After nearly a month's detention the vessel was released on the understanding that she should proceed directly to Archangel.

The steamers Jcutland and Syrius appear to have been recently detained under circumstances similar to those of the steamer Leelanaw.

(8) From time to time this Government has been informed of the seizure of cargoes on the ground that consignees have been known to trade with the enemy or because they were suspected of doing to.

In January last this Government was advised by the British Government that the British Government had been compelled to place in prize court a consignment of rubber on board the Swedish vessel Zamora, the consignee of these goods being regarded with grave suspicion, and there being reason to believe that the ultimate destination of the rubber was the enemy forces.

(9) Vessels have been seized and brought into port and have been required by the British authorities to pay pilotage, harbor, unloading, warehouse, storage, or other dues, costs, and expenses in advance of a judicial determination of the validity of the seizure of vessel or cargo.

Instances of such treatment of vessels may be found in the cases of the detention of the steamer Neches last May, the Ogeechee, which was seized last April, and the Antilla, which was seized in February last and subjected to a prolonged detention. In the case of the last-mentioned ship it appears, however, that the cost of discharging was borne by the British Government.

(10) Detention of vessels proceeding from European ports.

The steamer Ogeechee, which left Bremen April 3 last for the United States, was detained at Sharpness and compelled to discharge its entire cargo, which consisted of approximately 200 shipments of goods urgently needed by American citizens. In most, if not all, cases it appears that ownership of these goods at the time of the seizure had passed to American consignees. In many instances American citizens had contracted for the sale of the goods consigned to them and were prevented from carrying out their contracts.

The release of shipments on the vessel has been allowed on the production of proofs of American ownership of the goods prior to March 11, 1915. American consignees in order to avoid loss have endeavored to comply with the requirements in the presentation of proofs.

The steamer Neches, which sailed from Rotterdam to the United States, was brought to London and compelled, in June last, to discharge cargo on the ground, apparently, that the goods originated partly in Belgium. The vessel was detained about a month and, after having been damaged to the extent of approximately £1,500 as a result of a collision with another vessel while under the control of the British Admiralty, and after having been involved in litigation growing out of such collision, was allowed to proceed.

The following is a list of the vessels detained prior to March 11 last, among which are some regarding the detention of which details have been briefly stated in this memorandum:

Platuria, Brindilla, John D. Rockefeller, Kroonland, Noorham, Rotterdam, Sandefjord, Thomas J. Fordney, Fram, Edward Pierce, Ellen, Tellus, Sif, Kim, Canton, Ogeechee, Fricdland, Gallileo, Uller, Verona, Zuiderdijk, Greenbrier, Herm, Arkansas, Ascot, Carolyn, Breiford, Bergensfjord, Bjornstjerne Bjornsen, Ida Cuneo, Kentucky, General Minctonka, General Caloric, Denver.

Mr. Speaker, I shall print in the RECORD the document on the naval warfare, compiled by Prof. Shepherd, of Columbia University:

THE PROTECTION OF NEUTRAL RIGHTS AT SEA.

The declaration of London, chapter 2—Contraband of war. (At the naval conference called together by Great Britain at London the declaration was signed, Feb. 26, 1909, by all of the powers represented; seven of the present belligerents, viz, Great Britain, France, Russia, Japan, Italy, Germany, and Austria-Hungary, and three of the neutral nations, viz, the United States, Spain, and Holland. Later, chiefly because of British opposition to the articles defining contraband of war, it failed of ratification. Lawrence, Documents Illustrative of International Law, 351, note.)

CONTRABAND OF WAR.

Article 22.

The following articles may, without notice, be treated as contraband of war, under the name of absolute contraband:

(1) Arms of all kinds, including arms for sporting purposes, and their distinctive component parts.

(2) Projectiles, charges, and cartridges of all kinds, and their distinctive component parts.

(3) Powder and explosives especially prepared for use in war.

(4) Gun mountings, limber boxes, limbers, military wagons, field forges, and their distinctive component parts.

(5) Clothing and equipment of a distinctively military character.

(6) All kinds of harness of a distinctively military character.

(7) Saddle, draft, and pack animals suitable for use in war.

(8) Articles of camp equipment, and their distinctive component parts.

(9) Armor plates.
(10) Warships, including boats, and their distinctive component parts of such a nature that they can only be used on a vessel of war.
(11) Implements and apparatus designed exclusively for the manufacture of munitions of war, for the manufacture or repair of arms, or war material for use on land or sea.

Article 23.

Articles exclusively used for war may be added to the list of absolute contraband by a declaration, which must be notified.
Such notification must be addressed to the Governments of other powers or to their representatives accredited to the power making the declaration. A notification made after the outbreak of hostilities is addressed only to neutral powers.

Article 24.

The following articles, susceptible of use in war as well as for purposes of peace, may, without notice, be treated as contraband of war, under the name of conditional contraband:
(1) Foodstuffs.
(2) Forage and grain, suitable for feeding animals.
(3) Clothing, fabrics for clothing, and boots and shoes, suitable for use in war.
(4) Gold and silver in coin or bullion; paper money.
(5) Vehicles of all kinds available for use in war, and their component parts.
(6) Vessels, craft, and boats of all kinds; floating docks, parts of docks and their component parts.
(7) Railway material, both fixed and rolling stock, and material for telegraphs, wireless telegraphs, and telephone.
(8) Balloons and flying machines and their distinctive component parts, together with accessories and articles recognizable as intended for use in connection with balloons and flying machines.
(9) Fuel; lubricants.
(10) Powder and explosives not specially prepared for use in war.
(11) Barbed wire and implements for fixing and cutting the same.
(12) Horseshoes and shoeing materials.
(13) Harness and saddlery.
(14) Field glasses, telescopes, chronometers, and all kinds of nautical instruments.

Article 25.

Articles susceptible of use in war as well as for purposes of peace, other than those enumerated in articles 22 and 24, may be added to the list of conditional contraband by a declaration, which must be notified in the manner provided for in the second paragraph of article 23.

Article 26.

If a power waives, so far as it is concerned, the right to treat as contraband of war an article comprised in any of the classes enumerated in articles 22 and 24, such intention shall be announced by a declaration, which must be notified in the manner provided for in the second paragraph of article 23.

Article 27.

Articles which are not susceptible of use in war may not be declared contraband of war.

Article 28.

The following may not be declared contraband of war:
(1) Raw cotton, wool, silk, jute, flax, hemp, and other raw materials of the textile industries, and yarns of the same.
(2) Oil seeds and nuts; copra.
(3) Rubber, resins, gums, and laces; hops.
(4) Raw hides and horns, bones, and ivory.
(5) Natural and artificial manures, including nitrates and phosphates for agricultural purposes.
(6) Metallic ores.
(7) Earths, clays, lime, chalk, stone, including marble, bricks, slates, and tiles.
(8) Chinaware and glass.
(9) Paper and paper-making materials.
(10) Soap, paint, and colors, including articles exclusively used in their manufacture, and varnish.
(11) Bleaching powder, soda ash, caustic soda, salt cake, ammonia, sulphate of ammonia, and sulphate of copper.
(12) Agricultural, mining, textile, and printing machinery.
(13) Precious and semiprecious stones, pearls, mother-of-pearl, and coral.
(14) Clocks and watches other than chronometers.
(15) Fashion and fancy goods.
(16) Feathers of all kinds, hairs, and bristles.
(17) Articles of household furniture and decoration; office furniture and requisites.

Article 29.

Likewise the following may not be treated as contraband of war:
(1) Articles serving exclusively to aid the sick and wounded. They can, however, in case of urgent military necessity and subject to the payment of compensation, be requisitioned if their destination is that specified in article 30.
(2) Articles intended for the use of the vessel in which they are found, as well as those intended for the use of her crew and passengers during the voyage.

Article 30.

Absolute contraband is liable to capture if it is shown to be destined to territory belonging to or occupied by the enemy, or to the armed forces of the enemy. It is immaterial whether the carriage of the goods is direct or entails transhipment or a subsequent transport by land.

Article 31.

Proof of the destination specified in article 30 is complete in the following cases:
(1) When the goods are documented for discharge in an enemy port, or for delivery to the armed forces of the enemy.
(2) When the vessel is to call at enemy ports only, or when she is in touch at any enemy port or meet the armed forces of the enemy before reaching the neutral port for which the goods in question are documented.

Article 32.

When a vessel is carrying absolute contraband her papers are conclusive proof as to the voyage on which she is engaged, unless she is found clearly out of the course indicated by her papers and unable to give adequate reasons to justify such deviation.

Article 33.

Conditional contraband is liable to capture if it is shown to be destined for the use of the armed forces or of a Government department of the enemy State, unless in this latter case the circumstances show that the goods can not in fact be used for the purposes of war in progress. This latter exception does not apply to a consignment coming under article 24 (4).

Article 34.

The destination referred to in article 33 is presumed to exist if the goods are consigned to enemy authorities, or to a contractor established in the enemy country, who, as a matter of common knowledge, supplies articles of this kind to the enemy. A similar presumption arises if the goods are consigned to a fortified place belonging to the enemy, or other place serving as a base for the armed forces of the enemy. No such presumption, however, arises in the case of a merchant vessel bound for one of these places if it is sought to prove that she herself is contraband.
In cases where the above presumptions do not arise the destination is presumed to be innocent.
The presumptions set up by this article may be rebutted.

Article 35.

Conditional contraband is not liable to capture, except when found on board a vessel bound for territory belonging to or occupied by the enemy, or for the armed forces of the enemy, and when it is not to be discharged in an intervening neutral port.
The ship's papers are conclusive proof both as to the voyage on which the vessel is engaged and as to the port of discharge of the goods, unless she is found clearly out of the course indicated by her papers, and unable to give adequate reasons to justify such deviation.

Article 36.

Notwithstanding the provisions of article 35, conditional contraband, if shown to have the destination referred to in article 33, is liable to capture in cases where the enemy country has no seaboard.

Article 37.

A vessel carrying goods liable to capture as absolute or conditional contraband may be captured on the high seas or in the territorial waters of the belligerents throughout the whole of her voyage, even if she is to touch at a port of call before reaching the hostile destination.

Article 38.

A vessel may not be captured on the ground that she has carried contraband on a previous occasion if such carriage is in point of fact at an end.

Article 39.

Contraband goods are liable to condemnation.

Article 40.

A vessel carrying contraband may be condemned if the contraband, reckoned either by value, weight, volume, or freight, forms more than half the cargo.

Article 41.

If a vessel carrying contraband is released, she may be condemned to pay the costs and expenses incurred by the captor in respect of the proceedings in the national prize court and the custody of the ship and cargo during the proceedings.

Article 42.

Goods which belong to the owner of the contraband and are on board the same vessel are liable to condemnation.

Article 43.

If a vessel is encountered at sea while unaware of the outbreak of hostilities or of the declaration of contraband which applies to her cargo, the contraband can not be condemned except on payment of compensation; the vessel herself and the remainder of the cargo are not liable to condemnation or to the costs and expenses referred to in article 41. The same rule applies if the master, after becoming aware of the outbreak of hostilities or of the declaration of contraband, has had no opportunity of discharging the contraband.
A vessel is deemed to be aware of the existence of a state of war, or of a declaration of contraband, if she left a neutral port subsequently to the notification to the power to which such port belongs at the outbreak of hostilities or of the declaration of contraband, respectively, provided that such notification was made in sufficient time. A vessel is also deemed to be aware of the existence of a state of war if she left an enemy port after the outbreak of hostilities.

Article 44.

A vessel which has been stopped on the ground that she is carrying contraband, and which is not liable to condemnation on account of the proportion of contraband on board, may, when the circumstances permit, be allowed to continue her voyage if the master is willing to hand over the contraband to the belligerent warship.
The delivery of the contraband must be entered by the captor on the log book of the vessel stopped, and the master must give the captor duly certified copies of all relevant papers.
The captor is at liberty to destroy the contraband that has been handed over to him under these conditions.

No. 1. American note, August 6, 1914, suggesting the adoption of the declaration of London as a temporary code of naval warfare. (Same to the American embassies at Berlin, Vienna, St. Petersburg, and Paris, and to the American legation at Brussels.)

(The Secretary of State to the American ambassador at London.)

Mr. Bryan instructs Mr. Page to inquire whether the British Government is willing to agree that the laws of naval warfare as laid down by the declaration of London of 1909 shall be applicable to naval warfare during the present conflict in Europe, provided that the Governments with whom Great Britain is or may be at war also agree to such application. Mr. Bryan further instructs Mr. Page to state that the Government of the United States believes that an acceptance of these laws by the belligerents would prevent grave misunderstandings which may arise as to the relations between neutral powers and the belligerents. Mr. Bryan adds that it is earnestly hoped that this inquiry may receive favorable consideration.
(Diplomatic correspondence with belligerent Governments relating to neutral rights and commerce, 5. Issued by the Department of State, May 27, 1915.)

No. 2. Statement, August 22, 1914, regarding the German reply to No. 1. (The dispatch of Aug. 20 herein referred to does not appear to have been published.)

(The American ambassador at Berlin to the Secretary of State.)

Mr. Gerard refers to department's August 19, 4 p. m., and says his August 20, 1 a. m., by way of Copenhagen, states that the German Government will apply the declaration of London, provided its provisions are not disregarded by other belligerents. (Dip. Corr., 5.)

No. 3. British note, August 22, 1914, replying to No. 1:

(The secretary of state for foreign affairs ad interim to the American ambassador.)

YOUR EXCELLENCY: On the 7th instant you were so good as to address to me a note inquiring, pursuant to instructions from the Secretary of State at Washington, whether His Majesty's Government were willing to agree that the laws of naval warfare, as laid down by the declaration of London, 1909, should be applicable to naval warfare during the present European conflict, provided that the Governments with whom Great Britain is at war, or with whom her relations are not normal, also agree to such application.

Your excellency added that it was the belief of your Government that the acceptance of these laws by the belligerents would prevent the possibility of grave misunderstandings as to the relations between belligerents and neutrals.

I have the honor to inform your excellency that His Majesty's Government, who attach great importance to the views expressed in your excellency's note and are animated by a keen desire to consult so far as possible the interests of neutral countries, have given this matter their most careful consideration, and have pleasure in stating that they have decided to adopt generally the rules of the declaration in question, subject to certain modifications and additions which they judge indispensable to the efficient conduct of their naval operations. A detailed explanation of these additions and modifications is contained in the inclosed memorandum.

The necessary steps to carry the above decision into effect have now been taken by the issue of an order in council, of which I have the honor to inclose copies herein for your excellency's information and for transmission to your Government.

I may add that His Majesty's Government, in deciding to adhere to the rules of the declaration of London, subject only to the aforesaid modifications and additions, have not waited to learn the intentions of the enemy Governments, but have been actuated by a desire to terminate at the earliest moment the condition of uncertainty which has been prejudicing the interests of neutral trade.

I have, etc., E. A. CROWE.

(Dip. Corr. 6.)

No. 4. American note, October 22, 1914, withdrawing the suggestion contained in No. 1 and defining the policy of the United States irrespective of the declaration of London.

Inasmuch as the British Government consider that the conditions of the present European conflict make it impossible for them to accept without modification the declaration of London, you are requested to inform His Majesty's Government that in the circumstances the Government of the United States feels obliged to withdraw its suggestion that the declaration of London be adopted as a temporary code of naval warfare to be observed by belligerents and neutrals during the present war; that, therefore, this Government will insist that the rights and duties of the United States and its citizens in the present war be defined by the existing rules of international law and the treaties of the United States irrespective of the provisions of the declaration of London; and that this Government reserves to itself the right to enter a protest or demand in each case in which those rights and duties so defined are violated or their free exercise interfered with by the authorities of His Britannic Majesty's Government.

LANSING.

(Dip. Corr. 8.)

No. 5. American note, October 24, 1914, similar to No. 4. (Same to the American embassies at Vienna, St. Petersburg, and Paris and to the American Legation at Brussels.)

Referring to department's August 6, 1 p. m., and embassy's October 22, relative to the declaration of London, Mr. Lansing instructs Mr. Gerard to inform the German Government that the suggestion of the department to belligerents as to the adoption of declaration for sake of uniformity as to a temporary code of naval warfare during the present conflict has been withdrawn because some of the belligerents are unwilling to accept the declaration without modifications and that this Government will therefore insist that the rights and duties of the Government and citizens of the United States in the present war be defined by existing rules of international law and the treaties of the United States without regard to the provisions of the declaration and that the Government of the United States reserves to itself the right to enter a protest or demand in every case in which the rights and duties so defined are violated or their free exercise interfered with by the authorities of the belligerent Governments.

(Dip. Corr. 8.)

No. 6. British proclamation, October 29, 1914, revising the list of contraband of war.

Whereas on the 4th day of August, 1914, we did issue our royal proclamation specifying the articles which it was our intention to treat as contraband of war during the war between us and the German Emperor; and

Whereas on the 12th day of August, 1914, we did by our royal proclamation of that date extend our proclamation aforementioned to the war between us and the Emperor of Austria, King of Hungary; and

Whereas on the 21st day of September, 1914, we did by our royal proclamation of that date make certain additions to the list of articles to be treated as contraband of war; and

Whereas it is expedient to consolidate the said lists and to make certain additions thereto: Now, therefore,

We do hereby declare, by and with the advice of our privy council, that the list of contraband contained in the schedules to our royal proclamations of the 4th day of August and the 21st day of September aforementioned are hereby withdrawn and that in lieu thereof during the continuance of the war or until we do give further public notice the articles enumerated in schedule 1 hereto will be treated as absolute contraband and the articles enumerated in schedule 2 hereto will be treated conditional contraband.

SCHEDULE 1.

15. Field glasses, telescopes, chronometers, and all kinds of nautical instruments.

(Dip. Corr., 12, 13.)

No. 7. British order in council, October 29, 1914, adopting the declaration of London, exclusive of the lists of contraband and noncontraband, and inclusive of certain other modifications:

Whereas by an order in council, dated the 20th day of August, 1914, His Majesty was pleased to declare that during the present hostilities the convention known as the Declaration of London should, subject to certain additions and modifications therein specified, be adopted and put in force by His Majesty's Government; and

Whereas the said additions and modifications were rendered necessary by the special conditions of the present war; and

Whereas it is desirable and possible now to reenact the said order in council with amendments in order to minimize, so far as possible, the interference with innocent neutral trade occasioned by the war: Now, therefore, His Majesty, by and with the advice of his privy council, is pleased to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:

1. During the present hostilities, the provisions of the convention known as the declaration of London shall, subject to the exclusion of the lists of contraband and noncontraband, and to the modifications hereinafter set out, be adopted and put in force by His Majesty's Government.

The modifications are as follows:

(i) A neutral vessel, with papers indicating a neutral destination, which notwithstanding the destination shown on the papers, proceeds to an enemy port shall be liable to capture and condemnation if she is encountered before the end of her next voyage.

(ii) The destination referred to in article 33 of the said declaration shall (in addition to the presumptions laid down in article 34) be presumed to exist if the goods are consigned to or for an agent of the enemy State.

(iii) Notwithstanding the provisions of article 35 of the said declaration, conditional contraband shall be liable to capture on board a vessel bound to a neutral port if the goods are consigned "to order," or if the ship's papers do not show who is the consignee of the goods, or if they show a consignee of the goods in territory belonging to or occupied by the enemy.

(iv) In the cases covered by the preceding paragraph (iii) it shall lie upon the owners of the goods to prove that their destination was innocent.

2. Where it is shown to the satisfaction of one of His Majesty's principal secretaries of state that the enemy government is drawing supplies for its armed forces from or through a neutral country, he may direct that in respect of ships bound for a port in that country, article 35 of the said declaration shall not apply. Such direction shall be notified in the London Gazette and shall operate until the same is withdrawn. So long as such direction is in force, a vessel which is carrying conditional contraband to a port in that country shall not be immune from capture.

3. The order in council of the 20th August, 1914, directing the adoption and enforcement during the present hostilities of the convention known as the declaration of London, subject to the additions and modifications therein specified, is hereby repealed.

4. This order may be cited as "the declaration of London order in council, No. 2, 1914."

And the lords commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and each of His Majesty's principal secretaries of state, the president of the probate, divorce, and Admiralty division of the high court of justice, all other judges of His Majesty's prize courts, and all governors, officers, and authorities whom it may concern, are to give the necessary directions herein as to them may respectively appertain.

(Dip. Corr., 13, 14.)

No. 8. Announcement of the British Admiralty, November 2, 1914, declaring the North Sea a military area. (Not printed in Dip. Corr., etc.)

During the last week, the German have scattered mines indiscriminately in the open sea on the main trade route from America to Liverpool via the north of Ireland.

Peaceful merchant ships have already been blown up, with loss of life, by this agency.

The White Star liner Olympic escaped disaster by pure luck and but for warnings given by British cruisers other British and neutral merchant and passenger vessels would have been destroyed.

These mines can not have been laid by any German ship of war. They have been laid by some merchant vessel flying a neutral flag, which has come along the trade route as if for purpose of peaceful commerce, and, while profiting to the full by the immunity enjoyed by neutral merchant ships, has wantonly and recklessly endangered the lives of all who travel on the sea.

In these circumstances, having regard to the great interests intrusted to the British navy, to the safety of peaceful commerce on the high seas, and to the maintenance within the limits of international law of trade between neutral countries, the admiralty feels it necessary to adopt exceptional measures appropriate to the novel conditions under which this war is being waged.

It therefore gives notice that the whole of the North Sea must be considered a military area. Within this area merchant shipping of all kinds, traders of all countries, fishing craft and all other vessels will be exposed to the gravest dangers from mines it has been necessary to lay and from warships searching vigilantly by night and day for suspicious craft.

All merchant and fishing vessels of every description are hereby warned of the dangers they encounter by entering this area, except in strict accordance with admiralty directions. Every effort will be made to convey this warning to neutral countries and to vessels on the sea, but from November 5 onward the admiralty announces that all ships passing a line drawn from the northern point of the Hebrides through the Farne Islands to Iceland do so at their own peril.

Ships of all countries wishing to trade to and from Norway, the Baltic, Denmark, and Holland are advised to come, if inward bound, by the English Channel and the Strait of Dover. There they will be given sailing directions which will pass them safely, so far as Great Britain is concerned, up the east coast of England to the Farne Islands, whence a safe route will, if possible, be given to Lindesnas Lighthouse.

From this point they should turn north or south, according to their destination, keeping as near the coast as possible. The converse applies to vessels outward bound.

By strict adherence to these routes the commerce of all coutries will be able to reach its destination in safety so far as Great Britain is concerned, but any straying even for a few miles from the course thus indicated may be followed by fatal consequences. (The New York Tribune, Nov. 3, 1914.

No. 9. German note, November 23, 1914, regarding the British and French modifications of the declaration of London. (Sent also to other neutral powers. Text of American reply not yet published. Summary in the New York Times, November 24, 1914.)

(The German ambassador to the Secretary of State.)

According to an order in council of August 20, 1914, the British Government intends to act, during the present hostilities, in accordance with the provisions of the declaration of London relative to the law of naval warfare of February 26, 1909, subject to some additions and modifications. However, these additions and modifications are of such a nature that they obliterate the said declaration in several vital points and at the same time encroach on the accepted rules of international law. Further modifications of great consequence are contained in the proclamation of September 21, 1914.

First. The most vital modifications of the declaration of London are contained in the rule concerning conditional contraband under Nos. 3 and 5 of the above-mentioned order in council.

Article 33 of the declaration of London defines that there can be no question of conditional contraband except in the case where cargo is destined for the use of the administrative departments or the military forces of the hostile power. Moreover, according to article 35 the question whether goods are conditional contraband or not can under no circumstances arise when the vessel is sailing for a neutral port.

The above provisions which are, in the main, in accordance with the accepted rules of international law and represent the outcome of the just weighing of the interests of the belligerents on the one side and of the neutral countries on the other side, are as good as annulled by the said order in council, for, according to its No. 3, the hostile destination of the cargo is to be presumed in every case where the consignee of the cargo is under the control of the authorities of the hostile State. This, however, means nothing else but that each and every cargo shipped to the hostile country is liable to be seized because all inhabitants of that country are under the control of the authorities. This rule is supplemented by No. 5 of the said order, which sets forth that all vessels on the voyage for neutral ports are liable to be seized for having conditional contraband on board. Thus, the rule of the continuous voyage, applicable only in the case of absolute contraband, is declared applicable also with regard to conditional contraband in contravention of article 35 of the declaration of London. In this manner the more lenient regulations with regard to conditional contraband established by the declaration of London are simply set aside with the result that conditional contraband is virtually on the same footing as absolute contraband. In consequence the supply by neutrals of objects of conditional contraband, especially of foodstuffs, destined only for the consumption of the inhabitants of a belligerent country, which is universally considered legitimate in international law, is practically rendered illusory, whereby the interests of the belligerents as well as neutrals are violated in a manner contrary to the law of nations.

As events at the theaters of naval warfare prove, England proceeds in this respect in the most high-handed manner, even enforcing a control over supplies destined for the countries adjacent to Germany, and thereby endangering their victualing.

Second. The British Government considers itself at liberty to totally disregard the lists of absolute contraband and of merchandise not to be declared contraband (free list) contained in articles 22, 24, and 28 of the declaration of London. In its definition of contraband of August 5, 1914, specially upheld by No. 1 of the said order in council, it has declared airships and parts thereof absolute contraband, while according to No. 8 of article 24 of the declaration of London such objects can only be regarded as conditional contraband. Above all, by proclamation of September 21, 1914, it has declared rubber, hides, and skins, as well as various kinds of iron ore, to be conditional contraband, although these articles are not all, or only in an indirect way suitable for purposes of warfare, and were therefore placed in the free list. (Art. 28, Nos. 3, 4, and 6.) In this manner the universally accepted principle of international law that neutral trade with objects for exclusively peaceful use must not be disturbed by the belligerents is wantonly set aside.

Third. No. 2 of the said order in council contains a further aggravation of the rules concerning contraband. For article 38 of the declaration of London, in accordance with the accepted principle of international law, permits the seizure of a vessel for carrying contraband only as long as such is on board the vessel; whereas the British Government claims the right of seizing the vessel during its entire voyage if carriage of contraband has taken place under false shipping documents. In this manner neutral shipping with the belligerent territory is exposed to constant chicane, since vessels may be seized not only by reason of evident facts, viz, the existence by contraband on board, but also by reason of a frequently not provable affirmation with regard to their previous acts.

Fourth. By the rule established under No. 4 of the said order in council the right of seizure on account of blockade running is unduly extended, since according thereto knowledge of the blockade is to be assumed even in the case that, after a certain time since the notification of the blockade of an enemy port to the local authorities has elapsed, a vessel has sailed from another enemy port. By this rule the British Government attempts, beyond the limits drawn by international law, to put the authorities of the hostile country into the service of the British naval forces and to enforce this service by the capture of neutral vessels.

Fifth. According to an acknowledged principle of international law, confirmed by the declaration of London, only such persons traveling on board of merchant vessels are liable to be made prisoners of war as have already incorporated in the hostile military forces. This rule is clearly established by article 45, No. 2, in conjunction with article 47 of the declaration of London, and is, moreover, treated in detail in the general report of the drafting committee of the conference of London, in the first paragraphs to notes to 45. As it is set forth in the general report, for judicial reasons as well as for practical considerations, it was agreed at the conference that persons belonging to the active military forces exclusively shall be liable to be made prisoners of war when traveling on neutral ships, not, however, persons who, in order to fulfill their military services, are returning to their country, as in the case of members of the reserve. Although the said order in council has acknowledged as binding the above-mentioned two articles, as well as the notes of the general report, the British naval forces have, nevertheless, seized on merchant vessels, sailing under the Dutch, Norwegian, or Italian flag, German subjects liable to do military service but not yet incorporated in the military forces, and made them prisoners of war. In this manner they have not only gravely violated the established principles of international law, as expressed in the declaration of London, but also infringed on an act of their own legislation, i. e., the said order in council.

According to a decree of the President of the French Republic, published in the Journal Officiel of August 6, 1914, France has taken the same stand as Great Britain in the said order in council. Moreover, in the same manner as the British naval forces, the French naval forces have captured German persons liable to do military service on neutral vessels, notably on Dutch and Spanish vessels.

It is thus evident that the regulations issued by Great Britain and France, and even more so their respective naval forces, are disregarding in the most wanton way the provisions embodied in the declaration of London relative to the law of naval warfare.

It is Great Britain's acknowledged aim to hit not only the military but also the commercial power of their adversaries by way of paralyzing netural trade, and in pursuing this purpose they encroach in an unjustifiable manner not only upon the legitimate commerce between the neturals and the enemy but also upon the commerce among the neutral countries themselves. It is true that thus far the declaration of London has not been ratified. However, in its preamble it has been specially acknowledged by the delegates of all its signatory powers, including those of Great Britain and France, that, in the main, the provisions of the declaration of London are in accordance with the generally acknowledged principles of international law, which must be considered much more serious, because in the course of former wars in which she was neutral, notably in the Russo-Japanese war, Great Britain has always protested most emphatically against violations of international law of the indicated order. (See the British Blue Book, Russia No. 1. 1903, correspondence respecting contraband of war, p. 8, etc.)

The imperial German Government has thus far strictly observed the declaration of London and has embodied the contents of its provisions in the German prize-court regulations of September 30, 1914 (cf. Reichsgesetzblatt, 1914, p. 275). It has not changed this attitude even in view of the flagrant violations of law committed by its adversaries.

However, the imperial German Government must now study the question whether it will be able to continue to maintain the above attitude if the enemy powers abide by the procedure observed by them, and if the neutral powers allow such violations of the principles of neutrality to go on to the detriment of German interest.

The imperial German Government considers it, therefore, of interest to learn which position the neutral powers intend to take toward the attitude adopted by Great Britain and France contrary to international law, and particularly whether it is their intention to take measures against the acts of violence committed on board their merchant vessels against German subjects and German property.—(The New York Times, Nov. 24, 1914.)

No. 10. British proclamation, December 23, 1914, again revising the list of contraband of war. (See No. 6.)

Whereas on the 4th day of August, 1914, we did issue our royal proclamation specifying the articles which it was our intention to treat as contraband of war during the war between us and the German Emperor; and

Whereas on the 12th day of August, 1914, we did by our royal proclamation of that date extend our proclamation aforementioned to the war between us and the Emperor of Austria, King of Hungary; and

Whereas on the 21st day of September, 1914, we did by our royal proclamation of that date make certain additions to the list of articles to be treated as contraband of war; and

Whereas on the 29th day of October, 1914, we did by our royal proclamation of that date withdraw the said lists of contraband and substitute therefor the lists contained in the schedules to the said proclamation; and

Whereas it is expedient to make certain alterations in and additions to the said lists:

Now, therefore, we do hereby declare, by and with the advice of our privy council, that the lists of contraband contained in the schedules to our royal proclamation of the 29th day of October aforementioned are hereby withdrawn, and that in lieu thereof during the continuance of the war or until we do give further public notice the articles enumerated in Schedule I hereto will be treated as absolute contraband, and the articles enumerated in Schedule II hereto will be treated as conditional contraband.

SCHEDULE I.

1. Arms of all kinds, including arms for sporting purposes, and their distinctive component parts.
2. Projectiles, charges, and cartridges of all kinds and their distinctive component parts.
3. Powder and explosives specially prepared for use in war.
4. Ingredients of explosives, viz, nitric acid, sulphuric acid, glycerine, acetone, calcium acetate and all other metallic acetates, sulphur, potassium nitrate, the fractions of the distillation products of coal tar between benzol and cresol, inclusive, aniline, methylaniline, dimethylaniline, ammonium perchlorate, sodium perchlorate, sodium chlorate, barium chlorate, ammonium nitrate, cyanamide, potassium chlorate, calcium nitrate, mercury.
5. Resinous products, camphor, and turpentine (oil and spirit).
6. Gun mountings, limber boxes, limbers, military wagons, field forges, and their distinctive component parts.
7. Range finders and their distinctive component parts.
8. Clothing and equipment of a distinctively military character.
9. Saddle, draft, and pack animals suitable for use in war.
10. All kinds of harness of a distinctively military character.
11. Articles of camp equipment and their distinctive component parts.
12. Armor plates.
13. Ferro alloys, including ferrotungsten, ferromolybdenum, ferromanganese, ferrovanadium, ferrochrome.
14. The following metals: Tungsten, molybdenum, vanadium, nickel, selenium, cobalt, hematite, pig iron, manganese.
15. The following ores: Wolframite, scheelite, molybdenite, manganese ore, nickel ore, chrome ore, hematite iron ore, zinc ore, lead ore, bauxite.
16. Aluminum, alumina, and salts of aluminum.
17. Antimony, together with the sulphides and oxides of antimony.
18. Copper, unwrought and part wrought, and copper wire.
19. Lead, pig, sheet, or pipe.
20. Barbed wire and implements for fixing and cutting the same.
21. Warships, including boats and their distinctive component parts of such a nature that they can only be used on a vessel of war.
22. Submarine sound-signaling apparatus.
23. Aeroplanes, airships, balloons, and air crafts of all kinds, and their component parts, together with accessories and articles recognizable as intended for use in connection with balloons and air craft.
24. Motor vehicles of all kinds and their component parts.
25. Tires for motor vehicles and for cycles, together with articles or materials especially adapted for use in the manufacture or repair of tires.
26. Rubber (including raw, waste, and reclaimed rubber) and goods made wholly of rubber.
27. Iron pyrites.
28. Mineral oils and motor spirit, except lubricating oils.
29. Implements and apparatus designed exclusively for the manufacture of munitions of war, for the manufacture or repair of arms, or war material for use on land and sea.

SCHEDULE II.

1. Foodstuffs.
2. Forage and feeding stuffs for animals.
3. Clothing, fabrics for clothing, and boots and shoes suitable for use in war.
4. Gold and silver in coin or bullion; paper money.
5. Vehicles of all kinds, other than motor vehicles, available for use in war, and their component parts.
6. Vessels, craft, and boats of all kinds; floating docks, parts of docks, and their component parts.
7. Railway materials, both fixed and rolling stock, and materials for telegraphs, wireless telegraphs, and telephones.
8. Fuel, other than mineral oils. Lubricants.
9. Powder and explosives not specially prepared for use in war.
10. Horseshoes and shoeing materials.
11. Harness and saddlery.
12. Hides of all kinds, dry or wet; pigskins, raw or dressed; leather, undressed or dressed, suitable for saddlery, harness, or military boots.
13. Field glasses, telescopes, chronometers, and all kinds of nautical instruments.

No. 11. American note, December 26, 1914, in reference to the seizure and detention of American cargoes destined for neutral European ports. (Delivered at London Dec. 28 and published three days later. See Nos. 12 and 17.)

(The Secretary of State to the American ambassador at London.)

The present condition of American foreign trade resulting from the frequent seizures and detentions of American cargoes destined to neutral European ports has become so serious as to require a candid statement of the views of this Government in order that the British Government may be fully informed as to the attitude of the United States toward the policy which has been pursued by the British authorities during the present war.

You will, therefore, communicate the following to His Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, but in so doing you will assure him that it is done in the most friendly spirit and in the belief that frankness will better serve the continuance of cordial relations between the two countries than silence, which may be misconstrued into acquiescence in a course of conduct which this Government can not but consider to be an infringement upon the rights of American citizens.

The Government of the United States has viewed with growing concern the large number of vessels laden with American goods destined to neutral ports in Europe, which have been seized on the high seas, taken into British ports, and detained sometimes for weeks by the British authorities. During the early days of the war this Government assumed that the policy adopted by the British Government was due to the unexpected outbreak of hostilities and the necessity of immediate action to prevent contraband from reaching the enemy. For this reason it was not disposed to judge this policy harshly or protest it vigorously, although it was manifestly very injurious to American trade with the neutral countries of Europe. This Government, relying confidently upon the high regard which Great Britain has so often exhibited in the past for the rights of other nations, confidently awaited amendment of a course of action which denied to neutral commerce the freedom to which it was entitled by the law of nations.

This expectation seemed to be rendered the more assured by the statement of the foreign office early in November that the British Government were satisfied with guaranties offered by the Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish Governments as to nonexportation of contraband goods when consigned to named persons in the territories of those Governments, and that orders had been given to the British fleet and customs authorities to restrict interference with neutral vessels carrying such cargoes so consigned to verification of ship's papers and cargoes.

It is therefore a matter of deep regret that, though nearly five months have passed since the war began, the British Government have not materially changed their policy and do not treat less rigorously ships and cargoes passing between neutral ports in the peaceful pursuit of lawful commerce, which belligerents should protect rather than interrupt. The greater freedom from detention and seizure which was confidently expected to result from consigning shipments to definite consignees, rather than "to order," is still awaited.

It is needless to point out to His Majesty's Government, usually the champion of the freedom of the seas and the rights of trade, that peace, not war, is the normal relation between nations and that the commerce between countries which are not belligerents should not be interfered with by those at war unless such interference is manifestly an imperative necessity to protect their national safety, and then only to the extent that it is a necessity. (Sec. 20.) It is with no lack of appreciation of the momentous nature of the present struggle in which Great Britain is engaged and with no selfish desire to gain undue commercial advantage that this Government is reluctantly forced to the conclusion that the present policy of His Majesty's Government toward neutral ships and cargoes exceeds the manifest necessity of a belligerent and constitutes restrictions upon the rights of American citizens on the high seas which are not justified by the rules of international law or required under the principle of self-preservation.

The Government of the United States does not intend at this time to discuss the propriety of including certain articles in the lists of absolute and conditional contraband which have been proclaimed by His Majesty. Open to objection as some of these seem to this Government, the chief ground of present complaint is the treatment of cargoes of both classes of articles when bound to neutral ports.

Articles listed as absolute contraband, shipped from the United States and consigned to neutral countries, have been seized and detained on the ground that the countries to which they were destined have not prohibited the exportation of such articles. Unwarranted as such detentions are in the opinion of this Government, American exporters are further perplexed by the apparent indecision of the British authorities in applying their own rules to neutral cargoes. For example, a shipment of copper from this country to a specified consignee in Sweden was detained because, as was stated by Great Britain, Sweden had placed no embargo on copper. On the other hand, Italy not only prohibited the export of copper, but, as this Government is informed, put in force a decree that shipments to Italian consignees or "to order" which arrive in ports of Italy can not be exported or transshipped. The only exception Italy makes is of copper which passes through that country in transit to another country. In spite of these decrees, however, the British foreign office has thus far declined to affirm that copper shipments consigned to Italy will not be molested on the high seas. Seizures are so numerous and delays so prolonged that exporters are afraid to send their copper to Italy, steamship lines decline to accept it, and insurers refuse to issue policies upon it. In a word, a legitimate trade is being greatly impaired through uncertainty as to the treatment which it may expect at the hands of the British authorities.

We feel that we are abundantly justified in asking for information as to the manner in which the British Government propose to carry out the policy which they have adopted in order that we may determine the steps necessary to protect our citizens engaged in foreign trade in their rights and from the serious losses to which they are liable through ignorance of the hazards to which their cargoes are exposed.

In case of conditional contraband, the policy of Great Britain appears to this Government to be equally unjustified by the established rules of international conduct. As evidence of this, attention is directed to the fact that a number of the American cargoes which have been seized consist of foodstuffs and other articles of common use in all countries which are admittedly relative contraband. In spite of the presumption of innocent use because destined to neutral territory, the British authorities made these seizures and detentions without, so far as we are informed, being in possession of facts which warranted a reasonable belief that the shipments had in reality a belligerent destination, as that term is used in international law. Mere suspicion is not evidence and doubts should be resolved in favor of neutral commerce, not against it. The effect upon trade in these articles between neutral nations resulting from interrupted voyages and detained cargoes is not entirely cured by reimbursement of the owners for the damages which they have suffered after investigation has failed to establish an enemy destination. The injury is to American commerce with neutral countries as a whole through the hazard of the enterprise and the repeated diversion of goods from established markets.

It also appears that cargoes of this character have been seized by the British authorities because of a belief that, though not originally so intended by the shippers, they will ultimately reach the territory of the enemies of Great Britain. Yet this belief is frequently reduced to a mere fear in view of the embargoes which have been decreed by the neutral countries to which they are destined on the articles composing the cargoes.

That a consignment "to order" of articles listed as conditional contraband and shipped to a neutral port raises a legal presumption of enemy destination appears to be directly contrary to the doctrines previously held by Great Britain and thus stated by Lord Salisbury during the South African war:

"Foodstuffs, though having a hostile destination, can be considered as contraband of war only if they are for the enemy's forces; it is not sufficient that they are capable of being so used, it must be shown that this was in fact their destination at the time of their seizure."

With this statement as to conditional contraband the views of this Government are in entire accord, and upon this historic doctrine, consistently maintained by Great Britain when a belligerent as well as a neutral, American shippers were entitled to rely.

The Government of the United States readily admits the full right of a belligerent to visit and search on the high seas the vessels of American citizens or other neutral vessels carrying American goods and to detain them when there is sufficient evidence to justify a belief that contraband articles are in their cargoes; but His Majesty's Government, judging by their own experience in the past, must realize that this Government can not without protest permit American ships or American cargoes to be taken into British ports and there detained for the purpose of searching generally for evidence of contraband or upon presumptions created by special municipal enactments which are clearly at variance with international law and practice.

This Government believes, and earnestly hopes His Majesty's Government will come to the same belief, that a course of conduct more in conformity with the rules of international usage, which Great Britain has strongly sanctioned for many years, will in the end better serve the interests of belligerents as well as those of neutrals.

Not only is the situation a critical one to the commercial interests of the United States, but many of the great industries of this country are suffering because their products are denied long-established markets in European countries, which, though neutral, are contiguous to the nations at war. Producers and exporters, steamship and insurance companies are pressing, and not without reason, for relief from the menace to trans-Atlantic trade which is gradually but surely destroying their business and threatening them with financial disaster.

The Government of the United States, still relying upon the deep sense of justice of the British Nation, which has been so often manifested in the intercourse between the two countries during so many years of uninterrupted friendship, expresses confidently the hope that His Majesty's Government will realize the obstacles and difficulties which their present policy has placed in the way of commerce between the United States and the neutral countries of Europe, and will instruct its officials to refrain from all unnecessary interference with the freedom of trade between nations which are sufferers, though not participants, in the present conflict, and will in their treatment of neutral ships and cargoes conform more closely to those rules governing the maritime relations between belligerents and neutrals which have received the sanction of the civilized world, and which Great Britain has, in other wars, so strongly and successfully advocated.

In conclusion, it should be impressed upon His Majesty's Government that the present condition of American trade with the neutral European countries is such that, if it does not improve, it may arouse a feeling contrary to that which has so long existed between the American and British peoples. Already it is becoming more and more the subject of public criticism and complaint. There is an increasing belief, doubtless not entirely unjustified, that the present British policy toward American trade is responsible for the depression in certain industries which depend upon European markets. The attention of the British Government is called to this possible result of their present policy to show how widespread the effect is upon the industrial life of the United States and to emphasize the importance of removing the cause of complaint.

BRYAN.

(Dip. Corr. 39–41.)

No. 12. British note, January 7, 1915, replying tentatively to No. 11.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your note of the 28th of December.

It is being carefully examined and the points raised in it are receiving consideration, as the result of which a reply shall be addressed to your excellency dealing in detail with the issues raised and the points to which the United States Government have drawn attention. This consideration and the preparation of the reply will necessarily require some time, and I therefore desire to send without further delay some preliminary observations which will, I trust, help to clear the ground and remove some misconceptions that seem to exist.

Let me say at once that we entirely recognize the most friendly spirit referred to by your excellency and that we desire to reply in the same spirit and in the belief that, as your excellency states, frankness will best serve the continuance of cordial relations between the two countries.

His Majesty's Government cordially concur in the principle enunciated by the Government of the United States that a belligerent, in dealing with trade between neutrals, should not interfere unless such interference is necessary to protect the belligerent's national safety, and then only to the extent to which this is necessary. We shall endeavor to keep our action within the limits of this principle on the understanding that it admits our right to interfere when such interference is, not with "bona fide" trade between the United States and another neutral country, but with trade in contraband destined for the enemy's country; and we are ready, whenever our action may unintentionally exceed this principle, to make redress.

We think that much misconception exists as to the extent to which we have, in practice, interfered with trade. Your excellency's note seems to hold His Majesty's Government responsible for the present condition of trade with neutral countries, and it is stated that, through the action of His Majesty's Goverment, the products of the great industries of the United States have been denied long-established markets in European countries which, though neutral, are contiguous to the seat of war. Such a result is far from being the intention of His Majesty's Government, and they would exceedingly regret that it should be due to their action. I have been unable to obtain complete or conclusive figures showing what the state of trade with these neutral countries has been recently, and I can therefore only ask that some further consideration should be given to the question whether United States trade with these neutral countries has been so seriously affected. The only figures as to the total volume of trade that I have seen are those for the exports from New York for the month of November, 1914, and they are as follows, compared with the month of November, 1913:

Exports from New York for November, 1913, [and] November, 1914, respectively.

Denmark	$558,000	$7,101,000
Sweden	377,000	2,858,000
Norway	477,000	2,318,000
Italy	2,971,000	4,781,000
Holland	4,389,000	3,960,000

It is true that there may have been a falling off in cotton exports, as to which New York figures would be no guide, but His Majesty's Government have been most careful not to interfere with cotton, and its place on the free list has been scrupulously maintained.

We do not wish to lay too much stress upon incomplete statistics; the figures above are not put forward as conclusive; and we are prepared to examine any further evidence with regard to the state of trade with these neutral countries, which may point to a different conclusion or show that it is the action of His Majesty's Government in particular, and not the existence of a state of war and consequent diminution of purchasing power and shrinkage of trade, which is responsible for adverse effects upon trade with the neutral countries.

That the existence of a state of war on such a scale has had a very adverse effect upon certain great industries, such as cotton, is obvious; but it is submitted that this is due to the general cause of diminished purchasing power of such countries as France, Germany, and the United Kingdom, rather than to interference with trade with neutral countries. In the matter of cotton, it may be recalled that the British Government gave special assistance through the Liverpool Cotton Exchange to the renewal of transactions in the cotton trade of not only the United Kingdom but of many neutral countries.

Your excellency's note refers in particular to the detention of copper. The figures taken from official returns for the export of copper from the United States for Italy for the months during which the war has been in progress up to the end of the first three weeks of December are as follows:

1913, 15,202,000 pounds; 1914, 36,285,000 pounds. Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Switzerland are not shown separately for the whole period in the United States returns, but are included in the heading "Other Europe" (that is, Europe other than the United Kingdom, Russia, France, Belgium, Austria, Germany, Holland, and Italy). The corresponding figures under this heading are as follows:

With such figures the presumption is very strong that the bulk of copper consigned to these countries has recently been intended, not for their own use, but for that of a belligerent who can not import it direct. It is therefore an imperative necessity for the safety of this country while it is at war that His Majesty's Government should do all in their power to stop such part of this import of copper as is not genuinely destined for neutral countries.

Your excellency does not quote any particular shipment of copper to Sweden which has been detained. There are, however, four consignments to Sweden at the present time of copper and aluminum which, though definitely consigned to Sweden, are, according to positive evidence in the possession of His Majesty's Government, definitely destined for Germany.

I can not believe that with such figures before them and in such cases as those just mentioned the Government of the United States would question the propriety of the action of His Majesty's Government in taking suspected cargoes to a prize court, and we are convinced that it can not be in accord with the wish either of the Government or of the people of the United States to strain the international code in favor of private interests so as to prevent Great Britain from taking such legitimate means for this purpose as are in her power.

With regard to the seizure of foodstuffs to which your excellency refers, His Majesty's Government are prepared to admit that foodstuffs should not be detained and put into a prize court without presumption that they are intended for the armed forces of the enemy or the enemy Government. We believe that this rule has been adhered to in practice hitherto, but if the United States Government have instances to the contrary we are prepared to examine them, and it is our present intention to adhere to the rule, though we can not give an unlimited and unconditional undertaking in view of the departure by those against whom we are fighting from hitherto accepted rules of civilization and humanity and the uncertainty as to the extent to which such rules may be violated by them in future.

From the 4th of August last to the 3d of January the number of steamships proceeding from the United States for Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and Italy has been 773. Of these there are 45 which have had consignments or cargoes placed in the prize court, while of the ships themselves only 8 have been placed in the prize court, and 1 of these has since been released. It is, however, essential under modern conditions that where there is real ground for suspecting the presence of contraband the vessels should be brought into port for examination; in no other way can the right of search be exercised, and but for this practice it would have to be completely abandoned. Information was received by us that special instructions had been given to ship rubber from the United States under another designation to escape notice, and such cases have occurred in several instances. Only by search in a port can such cases, when suspected, be discovered and proved. The necessity for examination in a port may also be illustrated by a hypothetical instance, connected with cotton, which has not yet occurred. Cotton is not specifically mentioned in your excellency's note, but I have seen public statements made in the United States that the attitude of His Majesty's Government with regard to cotton has been ambiguous, and thereby responsible for depression in the cotton trade. There has never been any foundation for this allegation. His Majesty's Government have never put cotton on the list of contraband; they have throughout the war kept it on the free list; and on every occasion when questioned on the point they have stated their intention of adhering to this practice. But information has reached us that precisely because we have declared our intention of not interfering with cotton, ships carrying cotton will be specially selected to carry concealed contraband; and we have been warned that copper will be concealed in bales of cotton. Whatever suspicions we have entertained, we have not so far made these a ground for detaining any ship carrying cotton, but should we have information giving us real reason to believe in the case of a particular ship that the bales of cotton concealed copper or other contraband the only way to prove our case would be to examine and weigh the bales, a process that could be carried out only by bringing the vessel into a port. In such a case, or if examination justified the action of His Majesty's Government, the case shall be brought before a prize court and dealt with in the ordinary way.

That the decisions of British prize courts hitherto have not been unfavorable to neutrals is evidenced by the decision in the Miramichi case. This case, which was decided against the Crown, laid down that the American shipper was to be paid even when he had sold a cargo c. i. f. and when the risk of loss after the cargo had been shipped did not apply to him at all.

It has further been represented to His Majesty's Government, though this subject is not dealt with in your excellency's note, that our embargoes on the export of some articles, more especially rubber, have interfered with commercial interests in the United States. It is, of course, difficult for His Majesty's Government to permit the export of rubber from British Dominions to the United States at a time when rubber is essential to belligerent countries for carrying on the war, and when a new trade in exporting rubber from the United States in suspiciously large quantities to neutral countries has actually sprung up since the war. It would be impossible to permit the export of rubber from Great Britain unless the right of His Majesty's Government were admitted to submit to a prize court cargoes of rubber exported from the United States which they believe to be destined fot an enemy country, and reasonable latitude of action for this purpose was conceded. But His Majesty's Government have now provisionally come to an arrangement with the rubber exporters in Great Britain which will permit of licenses being given under proper guaranties for the export of rubber to the United States.

We are confronted with the growing danger that neutral countries contiguous to the enemy will become on a scale hitherto unprecedented a base of supplies for the armed forces of our enemies and for materials for manufacturing armament. The trade figures of imports show how strong this tendency is, but we have no complaint to make of the attitude of the Governments of those countries, which, so far as we are aware, have not departed from proper rules of neutrality. We endeavor in the interest of our own national safety to prevent this danger by intercepting goods really destined for the enemy without interfering with those which are "bona fide" neutral.

Since the outbreak of the war the Government of the United States have changed their previous practice and have prohibited the publication of manifests till 30 days after the departure of vessels from the United States ports. We had no "locus standi" for complaining of this change, and did not complain. But the effect of it must be to increase the difficulty of ascertaining the presence of contraband and to render necessary in the interests of our national safety the examination and detention of more ships than would have been the case if the former practice had continued.

Pending a more detailed reply, I would conclude by saying that His Majesty's Government do not desire to contest the general principles of law on which they understand the note of the United States to be based, and desire to restrict their action solely to interferences with contraband destined for the enemy. His Majesty's Government are prepared, whenever a cargo coming from the United States is detained, to explain the case on which such detention has taken place, and would gladly enter into any arrangement by which mistakes can be avoided and reparation secured promptly when any injury to the neutral owners of a ship or cargo has been improperly caused, for they are most desirous in the interest both of the United States and of other neutral countries that British action should not interfere with the normal importation and use by the neutral countries of goods from the United States.

I have, etc., E. GREY.

No. 13. Summary of proclamation of the German Federal Council, January 25, 1915, in reference to foodstuffs.

Available supplies in the Empire of wheat, rye, both unmixed and mixed with other products, also unthrashed, are seized for war. Grain company limited, and wheat, rye, oats, and barley flour are seized for the municipality or district where the products are found. Flour in transportation is to be seized for the municipality in the district of destination.

Exempted from seizure are supplies belonging to the Government's naval or military departments, municipalities, war grain company, central purchasing company, or individual amounts of flour of thrashed grain not exceeding together 220 pounds.

Attached supplies may not be touched, and legal proceedings in their regard are null and void. The feeding of animals with such supplies is particularly forbidden. Owners must take the necessary steps to conserve their supplies.

Sales to the war grain company and to municipalities are allowed. Sales from one municipality to another require the consent of higher administrative authorities and must be reported to the central distributing bureau. An agriculturist may, however, give his employers 9 kilos of breadstuffs per month each, and may keep sufficient seed for sowing.

The admiralty mills are to fulfill contracts for February, 1915, and deliver flour. Dealers and private mills may sell up to half of the flour bought from January 1 to 15. Bakers may prepare three-quarters of the average daily consumption of January 1 to 15. The same applies to flour not seized.

Infringements are punishable with one year's imprisonment or 10,000 marks fine. Persons having, on February 1, supplies of materials mentioned, and oats, must report the amount and ownership. The supplies of seeds must be particularly given. The war grain company and the central purchasing company need not make a report. The Government and military supplies must also be reported. Bakers and mills must report how much is used from January 1 to January 15 and the changes in stores. Verification by officials is permitted.

Competent authorities will regulate the process of dispossession. An adequate price must be paid, but the stores not reported are not paid for when taken. The person dispossessed must look after the materials until the dispossessor is ready to take the same over. For this the person dispossessed obtains recompense. Attachment and dispossession apply also to straw of unthrashed grain.

The war grain company, on request, is bound to supply to the municipality a part of all grain allotted to the district of the latter or to transfer the title in said grain. It is also bound to take over seized flour at the request of the municipality for the latter as far as possible and to oversee the sale of the same. It is also bound, at the wish of the municipality, to keep the quantity of the grain in the district up to the amount assigned and to give it to be milled by the district mills.

The mills will grind the grain given by the war grain company and by the central purchasing company or by the municipality.

Payment for grinding is set by the Government officials. Mills may deliver the flour and their property only to the war grain company or to the municipality. The war grain company may furnish flour to the municipalities and army and navy authorities only. The price is subject to regulation by the Government officials.

Bran from such grain is to be delivered per Government orders and price fixed for same. An Imperial distribution office is established to apportion, with the help of the war grain company, the existing supplies until the next harvest.

A body composed of 16 members of the Bynfesrat (sic) [Bundesrat, i. e., Federal council] and 1 member each of the German agricultural advisory boards and the German national chamber of commerce and the municipal association. The municipalities must furnish to this body facts regarding their grain supplies.

Municipalities will regulate the amount used of supplies in their district, particularly the amounts given to bakers and retailers, but within the limit set by the central distributing bureau. Municipalities can also prescribe all rules and regulations for making and selling bread. Municipalities receive a bonus of 10 per cent of the value of the amount returned of the unused quantity allotted them for any stated period, these bonuses to be used for food for people. Municipalities will fix the prices for flour assigned by them.

The foregoing regulations do not apply to the grain and flour imported after January 31, 1915. Imported grain and flour may be given over by importers only to the war grain company, the central purchasing company, or the municipalities.

Cities and communities of more than 5,000 souls are to take measures for conservation of meat and arrange for the supply of preserved meat. To this end communities may take over the ownership of swine and fix the price therefor. (The New York Times, February 18, 1915.)

No. 14. Announcement of the Germany Admiralty, February 4, 1915, declaring the waters around Great Britain a war zone:

1. The waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland, including the whole English Channel, are hereby declared to be war zone. On and after the 18th of February, 1915, every enemy merchant ship found in the said war zone will be destroyed without its being always possible to avert the dangers threatening the crews and passengers on that account.

2. Even neutral ships are exposed to danger in the war zone, as in view of the misuse of neutral flags, ordered on January 31 by the British Government, and of the accidents of naval war, it can not always be avoided to strike even neutral ships in attacks that are directed at enemy ships.

3. Northward navigation around the Shetland Islands, in the eastern waters of the North Sea, and in a strip of not less than 30 miles width along the Netherlands coast is in no danger. (Dip. Corr. 52–53.)

No. 15. Memorandum of the German Government, February 4, 1915, regarding the declaration of a war zone:

Since the commencement of the present war Great Britain's conduct of commercial warfare against Germany has been a mockery of all the principles of the law of nations. While the British Government have by several orders declared that their naval forces should be guided by the stipulations of the declaration of London, they have in reality repudiated this declaration in the most essential points, notwithstanding the fact that their own delegates at the maritime conference of London acknowledged its acts as forming part of existing international law. The British Government have placed a number of articles on the contraband list which are not at all, or only very indirectly, capable of use in warfare, and consequently can not be treated as contraband either under the declaration of London or under the generally acknowledged rules of international law. In addition they have in fact obliterated the distinction between absolute and conditional contraband by confiscating all articles of conditional contraband destined for Germany, whatever may be the port where these articles are to be unloaded, and without regard to whether they are destined for uses of war or peace. They have not even hesitated to violate the declaration of Paris, since their naval forces have captured on neutral ships German property which was not contraband of war. Furthermore, they have gone further than their own orders respecting the declaration of London and caused numerous German subjects capable of bearing arms to be taken from neutral ships and made prisoners of war. Finally, they have declared the North Sea in its whole extent to be the seat of war, thereby rendering difficult and extremely dangerous, if not impossible, all navigation on the high seas between Scotland and Norway, so that they have in a way established a blockade of neutral coasts and ports, which is contrary to the elementary principles of generally accepted international law. Clearly all these measures are part of a plan to strike not only the German military operations but also the economic system of Germany, and in the end to deliver the whole German people to reduction by famine by intercepting legitimate neutral commerce by methods contrary to international law.

The neutral powers have in the main acquiesced in the measures of the British Government; in particular they have not been successful in securing the release by the British Government of the German subjects and German merchandise illegally taken from their vessels. To a certain extent they have even contributed toward the execution of the measures adopted by England in defiance of the principle of the freedom of the seas by prohibiting the export and transit of goods destined for peaceable purposes in Germany, thus evidently yielding to pressure by England. The German Government have in vain called the attention of the neutral powers to the fact that Germany must seriously question whether it can any longer adhere to the stipulations of the declaration of London, hitherto strictly observed by it, in case England continues to adhere to its practice and the neutral powers persist in looking with indulgence upon all these violations of neutrality, to the detriment of Germany. Great Britain invokes the vital interests of the British Empire, which are at stake, in justification of its violations of the law of nations, and the neutral powers appear to be satisfied with theoretical protests, thus actually admitting the vital interests of a belligerent as a sufficient excuse for methods of waging war, of whatever description.

The time has come for Germany also to invoke such vital interests. It therefore finds itself under the necessity, to its regret, of taking military measures against England in retaliation for the practice followed by England. Just as England declared the whole North Sea between Scotland and Norway to be comprised within the seat of war, so does Germany now declare the waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland, including the whole English Channel, to be comprised within the seat of war, and will prevent by all the military means at its disposal all navigation by the enemy in those waters. To this end it will endeavor to destroy, after February 18 next, any merchant vessels of the enemy which present themselves at the seat of war above indicated, although it may not always be possible to avert the dangers which may menace persons and merchandise. Neutral powers are accordingly forewarned not to continue to intrust their crews, passengers, or merchandise to such vessels. Their attention is furthermore called to the fact that it is of urgency to recommend to their own vessels to steer clear of these waters. It is true that the German Navy has received instructions to abstain from all violence against neutral vessels recognizable as such; but, in view of the hazards of war and of the misuse of the neutral flag ordered by the British Government, it will not always be possible to prevent a neutral vessel from becoming the victim of an attack intended to be directed against a vessel of the enemy. It is expressly declared that navigation in the waters north of the Shetland Islands is outside the danger zone, as well as navigation in the eastern part of the North Sea, and in a zone 30 marine miles wide along the Dutch coast.

The German Government announces this measure at a time permitting enemy and neutral ships to make the necessary arrangements to reach the ports situated at the seat of war. They hope that the neutral powers will accord consideration to the vital interests of Germany equally with those of England, and will on their part assist in keeping their subjects and their goods far from the seat of war; the more so since they likewise have a great interest in seeing the termination at an early day of the war now ravaging. (Dip. Corr. 53.)

No. 16. Statement of the British foreign office, February 7, 1915, regarding the use of neutral flags and the German declaration of a war zone:

The use of a neutral flag is, with certain limitations, well established in practice as a ruse de guerre. The only effect in the case of a merchantman wearing a flag other than her national flag is to compel the enemy to follow the ordinary obligations of naval warfare and satisfy him as to the nationality of the vessel and the character of her cargo by examination before capturing her and taking her into a prize court for adjudication.

The British Government has always considered the use of the British colors by foreign vessels legitimate for the purpose of escaping capture. Such practice not only involves no breach of international law, but it is specifically recognized by the law of this country in the merchant shipping act of 1894.

In instructions to British consuls in 1914 it is stated: "A ship is liable to capture if a British character is improperly assumed, except for the purpose of escaping capture."

As we have in practice not objected to foreign merchant vessels using the British merchant flag as a ruse for the purpose of evading capture at sea at the hands of a belligerent, so we should maintain that in the converse case a British merchant vessel committed no breach of international law in assuming neutral colors for a similar purpose if she thought fit.

By the rules of international law, the customs of war, and the dictates of humanity, it is obligatory upon a belligerent to ascertain the character of the merchant vessel and cargo before capture. Germany has no right to disregard this obligation.

To destroy a ship, noncombatant crew, and cargo, as Germany announced her intention of doing, is nothing less than an act of piracy of the high seas. (The New York Times, Feb. 7, 1915.)

No. 17. British note, February 10, 1915, replying finally to the American note of December 26, 1914 (No. 11), in regard to the seizure and detention of American cargoes: (See No. 12.)

YOUR EXCELLENCY: Your Excellency has already received the preliminary answer, which I handed to you on the 7th January, in reply to your note of the 28th December on the subject of the seizures and detentions of American cargoes destined for neutral European ports.

Since that date I have had further opportunity of examining into the trade statistics of the United States, as embodied in the customs returns, in order to see whether the belligerent action of Great Britain has been in any way the cause of the trade depression which Your Excellency describes as existing in the United States, and also whether the seizures of vessels or cargoes which have been made by the British Navy have inflicted any loss on American owners for which our existing machinery provides no means of redress. In setting out the results of my investigation, I think it well to take the opportunity of giving a general review of the methods employed by His Majesty's Government to intercept contraband trade with the enemy, of their consistency with the admitted right of a belligerent to intercept such trade, and also of the extent to which they have endeavored to meet the representations and complaints from time to time addressed to them on behalf of the United States Government.

Toward the close of your note of the 28th December, your excellency describes the situation produced by the action of Great Britain as a pitiful one to the commercial interests of the United States, and said that many of the great industries of the country were suffering because their products were denied long-established markets in neutral European countries contiguous to the nations at war.

It is unfortunately true that in these days when trade and finance are cosmopolitan any war—particularly a war of any magnitude—must result in a grievous dislocation of commerce, including that of the nations which take no part in the war. Your excellency will realize that in this tremendous struggle, for the outbreak of which Great Britain is in no way responsible, it is impossible for the trade of any country to escape all injury and loss, but for such His Majesty's Government is not to blame.

I do not understand the paragraph which I have quoted from your excellency's note as referring to these indirect consequences of the state of war, but to the more proximate and direct effect of our belligerent action in dealing with neutral ships and cargoes on the high seas. Such action has been limited to vessels on their way to enemy ports or ports in neutral countries adjacent to the theater of war, because it is only through such ports that the enemy introduces the supplies which he requires for carrying on the war.

In my earlier note I set out the number of ships which had sailed from the United States for Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and Italy, and I there stated that only 8 of the 773 had been placed in the prize court, and that only 45 had been temporarily detained to enable particular consignments of cargo to be discharged for the purpose of prize-court proceedings. To measure the effect of such naval action it is necessary to take into consideration the general statistics of the export trade of the United States during the months preceding the outbreak of war and those since the outbreak.

Taking the figures in millions of dollars, the exports of merchandise from the United States for the seven months of January to July, 1914, inclusive, were 1,201, as compared with 1,327 in the corresponding months of 1913, a drop of $126,000,000.

For the months of August, September, October, and November—that is to say, for the four months of the war preceding the delivery of your excellency's note—the figures of the exports of merchandise were $667,000,000 as compared with $923,000,000 in the corresponding months of 1913, a drop of $256,000,000.

If, however, the single article of cotton be eliminated from the comparison, the figures show a very different result. Thus the exports of all articles of merchandise other than cotton from the United States during the first seven months of 1914 were $966,000,000 as against $1,127,000,000 in 1913, a drop of $161,000,000, or 14½ per cent. On the other hand, the exports of the same articles during the months August to November amounted to $608,000,000 as compared with $630,000,000 in 1913, a drop of only $22,000,000, or less than 4 per cent.

It is therefore clear that if cotton be excluded the effect of the war has been not to increase but practically to arrest the decline of American exports which was in progress earlier in the year. In fact, any decrease in American exports which is attributable to the war is essentially due to cotton. Cotton is an article which can not possibly have been affected by the exercise of our belligerent rights, for, as your excellency is aware, it has not been declared by His Majesty's Government to be contraband of war, and the rules under which we are at present conducting our belligerent operations give us no power in the absence of a blockade to seize or interfere with it when on its way to a belligerent country in neutral ships. Consequently no cotton has been touched.

Into the causes of the decrease in the exports of cotton I do not feel that there is any need for me to enter, because whatever may have been the cause it is not to be found in the exercise of the belligerent rights of visit, search, and capture, or in our general right when at war to intercept the contraband trade of our enemy. Imports of cotton to the United Kingdom fell as heavily as those to other countries. No place felt the outbreak of war more acutely than the cotton districts of Lancashire, where for a time an immense number of spindles were idle. Though this condition has now to a large extent passed away, the consumption of the raw material in Great Britain was temporarily much diminished. The same is no doubt true of France.

The general result is to show convincingly that the naval operations of Great Britain are not the cause of any diminution in the volume of American exports, and that if the commerce of the United States is in the unfavorable condition which your excellency describes the cause ought in fairness to be sought elsewhere than in the activities of His Majesty's naval forces.

I may add that the circular issued by the Department of Commerce at Washington on the 23d of January admits a marked improvement in the foreign trade of the United States, which we have noted with great satisfaction. The first paragraph of the circular is worth quoting verbatim:

"A marked improvement in our foreign trade is indicated by the latest reports issued by the Department of Commerce through its Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, sales of foodstuffs and certain lines of manufactures having been unusually large in November, the latest period for which detailed information is at hand. In that month exports aggregated $206,000,000, or double the total for August last, when, by reason of the outbreak of war, our foreign trade fell to the lowest level reached in many years. In December there was further improvement, the month's exports being valued at $246,000,000, compared with $233,000,000 in December, 1913, and within $4,000,000 of the high record established in December, 1912."

A better view of the situation is obtained by looking at the figures month by month. The exports of merchandise for the last five months have been (in millions of dollars):

August	110
September	156
October	194
November	205
December	246

The outbreak of war produced in the United States, as it did in all neutral countries, an acute but temporary disturbance of trade. Since that time there seems to have been a steady recovery, for to-day the exports from the United States stand at a higher figure than on the same date last year.

Before passing away from the statistics of trade, and in order to demonstrate still more clearly if necessary that the naval operations of Great Britain and her allies have had no detrimental effect on the volume of trade between the United States and neutral countries, it is worth while to analyze the figures of the exports to Europe since the outbreak of hostilities. For this purpose the European countries ought to be grouped under three heads: Great Britain and those fighting with her, neutral countries, and enemy countries. It is, however, impossible for me to group the countries in this way satisfactorily, as the figures relating to the export trade of the United States with each country have not yet been published. In the preliminary statement of the export trade of the United States with foreign countries only principal countries are shown, and various countries which are tabulated separately in the more detailed monthly summary of commerce and finance are omitted. Those omitted include not only the Scandinavian countries, the exports to which are of peculiar importance in dealing with this question, but also Austria.

So far as it is possible to distribute the figures under the headings which I have indicated above (all the figures being given in thousands of dollars), the results are as follows:

Total exports to Europe from the 1st of August to the 30th of November, 413,995, as against 597,342 in 1913. Of these, Great Britain and her allies took 288,312, as against 316,805 in 1913. Germany and Belgium took 1,881, as against 177,136 in 1913; whereas neutral countries (among which Austria-Hungary is unavoidably included) took 123,802, as against 103,401 in 1913.

The general complaint in your excellency's note was that the action of Great Britain was affecting adversely the trade of the United States with neutral countries. The naval operations of Great Britain certainly do not interfere with commerce from the United States on its way to the United Kingdom and the allied countries, and yet the exports to Great Britain and her allies during those four months diminished to the extent of over $28,000,000, whereas those to neutral countries and Austria increased by over $20,000,000.

The inference may fairly be drawn from these figures, all of which are taken from the official returns published by the United States Government, that not only has the trade of the United States with the neutral countries in Europe been maintained as compared with previous years, but also that a substantial part of this trade was, in fact, trade intended for the enemy countries going through neutral ports by routes to which it was previously unaccustomed.

One of the many inconveniences to which this great war is exposing the commerce of all neutral countries is undoubtedly the serious shortage in shipping available for ocean transport and the consequential result of excessive freights.

It can not fairly be said that this shortage is caused by Great Britain's interference with neutral ships. At the present time there are only seven neutral vessels awaiting adjudication in the prize courts in this country and three in those in the British dominions. As your excellency is aware, I have already instructed our ambassador at Washington to remind the parties who are interested in these vessels that it is open to them to apply to the court for the release of these ships on bail, and if an application of this sort is made by them it is not likely to be opposed by the Crown. There is therefore no reason why such an application should not be favorably entertained by the court, and, if acceded to, all these vessels will again be available for the carriage of commerce. Only one neutral vessel is now detained in this country in addition to those awaiting adjudication in the prize court.

Every effort has been made in cases in which it has been found necessary to institute proceedings against portions of the cargo to secure the speedy discharge of the cargo and the release of the ship, so as to enable it to resume work. Great Britain is suffering from the shortage of shipping and the rise in freights as acutely as, if not more than, other nations, and His Majesty's Government have taken every step that they could consistently with their belligerent interests to increase the tonnage available for the transport of seaborne commerce. The enemy ships which have been condemned in the prize courts in this country are being sold as rapidly as possible in order that they may become available for use; and those which have been condemned in the prize courts oversea are being brought to this country in order that they may be disposed of here and again placed in active employment.

The difficulties have been accentuated by the unforeseen consequences of the convention which was signed at The Hague in 1907 relative to the status of enemy merchant vessels at the outbreak of war. This convention was a well-intentioned effort to diminish the losses which war must impose upon innocent persons, and provided that enemy merchant ships seized by a belligerent in whose ports they lay at the outbreak of war should not be condemned, but should merely be detained for the period of the war, unless they were liberated in the days of grace. We could come to no arrangement with the German Government for the reciprocal grant of days of grace, and the German merchant vessels lying in British ports when the war broke out have therefore been sentenced to detention in lieu of condemnation. The normal result would have been still further to reduce the volume of shipping available for the commerce of the world. To ease the situation, however, His Majesty's Government are resorting to the power of requisitioning which is given by the convention, so that these ships may again be placed in active service.

Your excellency will see, therefore, that His Majesty's Government are doing all in their power to increase the volume of shipping available. I hope it will be realized that the detention of neutral ships by His Majesty's Government with a view to the capture of contraband trade on its way to the enemy has not contributed nearly so much to the shortage of shipping as has the destruction of neutral vessels by submarine mines indiscriminately laid by the enemy on the high seas, many miles from the coast, in the track of merchant vessels. Up till now 25 neutral vessels have been reported as destroyed by mines on the high seas; quite apart from all questions of the breach of treaties and the destruction of life, there is far more reason for protest on the score of belligerent interference with innocent neutral trade through the mines scattered by the enemy than through the British exercise of the right of seizing contraband.

I trust that what I have said above will be sufficient to convince Your Excellency's Government that the complaints that the naval policy of Great Britain has interfered with the shipments of American products to long-established markets in neutral European countries is founded on a misconception.

In justice to the peoples of both countries, I feel that this opportunity should be taken to explain the lines on which His Majesty's Government has been acting hitherto, so as to show that the line they have followed is in no way inconsistent with the general fundamental principle of international law and to indicate the care with which they have endeavored to meet the representations which have been made by the United States Government from time to time during the war on these questions.

No one in these days will dispute the general proposition that a belligerent is entitled to capture contraband goods on their way to the enemy; that right has now become consecrated by long usage and general acquiescence. Though the right is ancient, the means of exercising it alter and develop with the changes in the methods and machinery of commerce. A century ago the difficulties of land transport rendered it impracticable for the belligerent to obtain supplies of sea-borne goods through a neighboring neutral country. Consequently the belligerent actions of his opponents neither required nor justified any interference with shipments on their way to a neutral port. This principle was recognized and acted on in the decisions in which Lord Stowell laid down the lines on which captures of such goods should be dealt with.

The advent of steam power has rendered it as easy for a belligerent to supply himself through the ports of a neutral contiguous country as through his own and has therefore rendered it impossible for his opponent to refrain from interfering with commerce intended for the enemy merely because it is on its way to a neutral port.

No better instance of the necessity of countering new devices for dispatching contraband goods to an enemy by new methods of applying the fundamental principle of the right to capture such contraband can be given than the steps which the Government of the United States found it necessary to take during the American Civil War. It was at that time that the doctrine of continuous voyage was first applied to the capture of contraband; that is to say, it was then for the first time that a belligerent found himself obliged to capture contraband goods on their way to the enemy, even though at the time of capture they were en route for a neutral port from which they were intended subsequently to continue their journey. The policy then followed by the United States Government was not inconsistent with the general principles already sanctioned by international law, and met with no protest from His Majesty's Government, though it was upon British cargoes and upon British ships that the losses and the inconvenience due to this new development of the application of the old rule of international law principally fell. The criticisms which have been directed against the steps then taken by the United States came, and come, from those who saw in the methods employed in Napoleonic times for the prevention of contraband a limitation upon the right itself, and failed to see that in Napoleonic times goods on their way to a neutral port were immune from capture, not because the immediate destination conferred a privilege, but because capture under such circumstances was unnecessary.

The facilities which the introduction of steamers and railways have given to a belligerent to introduce contraband goods through neutral ports have imposed upon his opponent the additional difficulty, when endeavoring to intercept such trade, of distinguishing between the goods which are really destined for the commerce of that neutral country and the goods which are on their way to the enemy. It is one of the many difficulties with which the United States Government found themselves confronted in the days of the Civil War, and I can not do better than quote the words which Mr. Seward, who was then Secretary of State, used in the course of the diplomatic discussion arising out of the capture of some goods on their way to Matamoros which were believed to be for the insurgents:

"Neutrals engaged in honest trade with Matamoros must expect to experience inconvenience from the existing blockade of Brownsville and the adjacent coast of Texas. While this Government unfeignedly regrets this inconvenience, it can not relinquish any of its belligerent rights to favor contraband trade with insurgent territory by insisting upon those rights, however, it is sure that that necessity for their exercise at all, which must be deplored by every friendly commercial power, will the more speedily be terminated."

The opportunities now enjoyed by a belligerent for obtaining supplies through neutral ports are far greater than they were 50 years ago, and the geographical conditions of the present struggle lend additional assistance to the enemy in carrying out such importation. We are faced with the problem of intercepting such supplies when arranged with all the advantages that flow from elaborate organization and unstinted expenditure. If our belligerent rights are to be maintained, it is of the first importance for us to distinguish between what is really bona fide trade intended for the neutral country concerned and the trade intended for the enemy country. Every effort is made by organizers of this trade to conceal the true destination, and if the innocent neutral trade is to be distinguished from the enemy trade it is essential that His Majesty's Government should be entitled to make, and should make, careful inquiry with regard to the destination of particular shipments of goods even at the risk of some slight delay to the parties interested. If such inquiries were not made either the exercise of our belligerent rights would have to be abandoned, tending to the prolongation of this war and the increase of the loss and suffering which it is entailing upon the whole world, or else it would be necessary to indulge in indiscriminate captures of neutral goods and their detention throughout all the period of the resulting prize court proceedings. Under the system now adopted it has been found possible to release without delay, and consequently without appreciable loss to the parties interested, all the goods of which the destination is shown as the result of the inquiries to be innocent.

It may well be that the system of making such inquiries is to a certain extent a new introduction, in that it has been practiced to a far greater extent than in previous wars; but if it is correctly described as a new departure, it is a departure which is wholly to the advantage of neutrals, and which has been made for the purpose of relieving them so far as possible from loss and inconvenience.

There was a passage in a note which the State Department addressed to the British ambassador at Washington on the 7th November to which I think it may be well to refer:

"In the opinion of this Government, the belligerent right of visit and search requires that the search should be made on the high seas at the time of the visit, and that the conclusion of the search should rest upon the evidence found on the ship under investigation, and not upon circumstances ascertained from external sources."

The principle here enunciated appears to me to be inconsistent with the practice in these matters of the United States Government, as well as of the British Government. It certainly was not the rule upon which the United States Government acted either during the Civil War or during the Spanish-American War, nor has it ever been the practice of the British Government, nor so far as I am aware, of any other Government which has had to carry on a great naval war; as a principle I think it is impossible in modern times. The necessity for giving the belligerent captor full liberty to establish by all the evidence at his disposal the enemy destination with which the goods were shipped was recognized in all the leading decisions in the prize courts of the United States during the Civil War.

No clearer instance could be given than the reporter's statement of the case of the Bermuda (3 Wallace, 514):

"The final destination of the cargo in this particular voyage was left so skillfully open . . . that it was not quite easy to prove, with that certainty which American courts require, the intention, which it seemed plain must have really existed. Thus to prove it required that truth should be collated from a variety of sources, darkened and disguised; from others opened as the cause advanced, and by accident only; from coincidences undesigned, and facts that were circumstantial. Collocations and comparisons, in short, brought largely their collective force in aid of evidence that was more direct."

It is not impossible that the course of the present struggle will show the necessity for belligerent action to be taken in various ways which may at first sight be regarded as a departure from old practice. In my note of the 7th January, I dealt at some length with the question of the necessity of taking vessels into port for the purposes of carrying out an effective search, where search was necessary; to that subject I feel that I need not again recur.

The growth in the size of steamships necessitates in many cases that the vessel should go into calm water, in order that even the right of visit, as apart from the right of search, should be exercised. In modern times a steamer is capable of pursuing her voyage irrespective of the conditions of the weather. Many of the neutral merchantmen which our naval officers are called upon to visit at sea are encountered by our cruisers in places and under conditions which render the launching of a boat impossible. The conditions during winter in the North Atlantic frequently render it impracticable for days together for a naval officer to board a vessel on her way to Scandinavian countries. If a belligerent is to be denied the right of taking a neutral merchantman, met with under such conditions, into calm water in order that the visiting officer may go aboard, the right of visit and of search would become a nullity.

The present conflict is not the first in which this necessity has arisen. As long ago as the Civil War the United States found it necessary to take vessels to United States ports in order to determine whether the circumstances justified their detention.

The same need arose during the Russo-Japanese War and also during the second Balkan War, when it sometimes happened that British vessels were made to deviate from their course and follow the cruisers to some spot where the right of visit and of search could be more conveniently carried out. In both cases this exercise of belligerent rights, although questioned at first by His Majesty's Government, was ultimately acquiesced in.

No power in these days can afford during a great war to forego the exercise of the right of visit and search. Vessels which are apparently harmless merchantmen can be used for carrying and laying mines and even fitted to discharge torpedoes. Supplies for submarines can without difficulty be concealed under other cargo. The only protection against these risks is to visit and search thoroughly every vessel appearing in the zone of operations, and if the circumstances are such as to render it impossible to carry it out at the spot where the vessel was met with the only practicable course is to take the ship to some more convenient locality for the purpose. To do so is not to be looked upon as a new belligerent right, but as an adaptation of the existing right to the modern conditions of commerce. Like all belligerent rights, it must be exercised with due regard for neutral interests, and it would be unreasonable to expect a neutral vessel to make long deviations from her course for this purpose. It is for this reason that we have done all we can to encourage neutral merchantmen on their way to ports contiguous to the enemy country to visit some British port lying on their line of route in order that the necessary examination of the ship's papers, and, if required, of the cargo, can be made under conditions of convenience to the ship herself. The alternative would be to keep a vessel which the naval officers desired to board waiting, it might be for days together, until the weather conditions enabled the visit to be carried out at sea.

No war has yet been waged in which neutral individuals have not occasionally suffered from unjustified belligerent action; no neutral nation has experienced this fact more frequently in the past than Great Britain. The only method by which it is possible to harmonize belligerent action with the rights of neutrals is for the belligerent nation to provide some adequate machinery by which in any such case the facts can be investigated and appropriate redress can be obtained by the neutral individual. In this country such machinery is provided by the powers which are given to the prize court to deal not only with captures, but also with claims for compensation. Order V, rule 2, of the British prize court rules, provides that where a ship has been captured as prize, but has been subsequently released by the captors, or has by loss, destruction, or otherwise ceased to be detained by them, without proceedings for condemnation having been taken, any person interested in the ship (which by Order I, rule 2, includes goods) wishing to make a claim for costs and damages in respect thereof, shall issue a writ as provided by Order II. A writ so issued will initiate a proceeding which will follow its ordinary course in the prize court.

This rule gives the prize court ample jurisdiction to deal with any claim for compensation by a neutral arising from the interference with a ship or goods by our naval forces. The best evidence that can be given of the discrimination and the moderation with which our naval officers have carried out their duties is to be found in the fact that up to this time no proceedings for the recovery of compensation have been initiated under the rule which I have quoted.

It is the common experience of every war that neutrals whose attempts to engage in suspicious trading are frustrated by a belligerent are wont to have recourse to their Government to urge that diplomatic remonstrances should be made on their behalf, and that redress should be obtained for them in this way. When an effective mode of redress is open to them in the courts of a civilized country by which they can obtain adequate satisfaction for any invasion of their rights which is contrary to the law of nations, the only course which is consistent with sound principle is that they should be referred to that mode of redress, and that no diplomatic action should be taken until their legal remedies have been exhausted, and they are in a position to show prima facie denial of justice.

The course adopted by His Majesty's Government during the American Civil War was in strict accordance with this principle. In spite of remonstrances from many quarters, they placed full reliance on the American prize courts to grant redress to the parties interested in cases of alleged wrongful capture by American ships of war, and put forward no claims until the opportunities for redress in those courts had been exhausted. The same course was adopted in the Spanish-American War, when all British subjects who complained of captures or detentions of their ships were referred to the prize courts for relief.

Before leaving the subject may I remind your excellency of the fact that at your request you are now supplied immediately by this department with particulars of every ship under American colors which is detained, and of every shipment of cargo in which an American citizen appears to be the party interested. Not only is the fact of detention notified to your excellency, but so far as is practicable the grounds upon which the vessel or cargo has been detained are also communicated to you—a concession which enables any United States citizen to take steps at once to protect his interests.

His Majesty's Government have also done all that lies in their power to insure rapid action when ships are reported in British ports. They realize that the ship and cargo owners may reasonably expect an immediate decision to be taken as to whether the ship may be allowed to proceed, and whether her cargo or any part of it must be discharged and put into the prize court. Realizing that the ordinary methods of interdepartmental correspondence might cause delays which could be obviated by another method of procedure, they established several months ago a special committee, on which all the departments concerned are represented. This committee sits daily, and is provided with a special clerical staff. As soon as a ship reaches port full particulars are telegraphed to London, and the case is dealt with at the next meeting of the committee, immediate steps being taken to carry out the action decided upon. By the adoption of this procedure it has been found possible to reduce to a minimum the delays to which neutral shipping is exposed by the exercise of belligerent rights, and by the necessity, imposed by modern conditions, of examining with care the destination of contraband articles.

Particular attention is directed in your excellency's note to the policy we are pursuing with regard to conditional contraband, especially foodstuffs, and it is there stated that a number of American cargoes have been seized without, so far as your excellency's Government are informed, our being in possession of facts which warranted a reasonable belief that the shipments had in reality a belligerent destination, and in spite of the presumption of innocent use due to their being destined to neutral territory. The note does not specify any particular seizures as those which formed the basis of this complaint, and I am therefore not aware whether the passage refers to cargoes which were detained before or since the order in council of the 29th October was issued.

Your excellency will no doubt remember that soon after the outbreak of war an order of His Majesty in council was issued under which no distinction was drawn in the application of the doctrine of continuous voyage between absolute contraband and conditional contraband, and which also imposed upon the neutral owner of contraband somewhat drastic conditions as to the burden of proof of the guilt or innocence of the shipment.

The principle that the burden of proof should always be imposed upon the captor has usually been admitted as a theory. In practice, however, it has almost always been otherwise, and any student of the prize courts' decisions of the past or even of modern wars will find that goods seldom escape condemnation unless their owner was in a position to prove that their destination was innocent. An attempt was made some few years ago, in the unratified declaration of London, to formulate some definite rules upon this subject, but time alone can show whether the rules there laid down will stand the test of modern warfare.

The rules which His Majesty's Government published in the order in council of the 20th August, 1914, were criticised by the United States Government as contrary to the generally recognized principles of international law, and as inflicting unnecessary hardship upon neutral commerce, and your excellency will remember the prolonged discussion which took place between us through the month of October with a view to finding some new formulæ which should enable us to restrict supplies to the enemy forces, and to prevent the supply to the enemy of materials essential for the making of munitions of war, while inflicting the minimum of injury and interference with neutral commerce. It was with this object that the order in council of the 29th October was issued, under the provisions of which a far greater measure of immunity is conferred upon neutral commerce. In that order the principle of noninterference with conditional contraband on its way to a neutral port is in large measure admitted; only in three cases is the right to seize maintained, and in all those cases the opportunity is given to the claimants of the goods to establish their innocence.

Two of those cases are where the ship's papers afford no information as to the person for whom the goods are intended. It is only reasonable that a belligerent should be entitled to regard as suspicious cases where the shippers of the goods do not choose to disclose the name of the individual who is to receive them. The third case is that of goods addressed to a person in the enemy territory. In the peculiar circumstances of the present struggle, where the forces of the enemy comprise so large a proportion of the population, and where there is so little evidence of shipments on private as distinguished from Government account, it is most reasonable that the burden of proof should rest upon the claimant.

The most difficult questions in connection with conditional contraband arise with reference to the shipment of foodstuffs. No country has maintained more stoutly than Great Britain in modern times the principle that a belligerent should abstain from interference with the foodstuffs intended for the civil population. The circumstances of the present struggle are causing His Majesty's Government some anxiety as to whether the existing rules with regard to conditional contraband, framed as they were with the object of protecting so far as possible the supplies which were intended for the civil population, are effective for the purpose or suitable to the conditions present. The principle which I have indicated above is one which His Majesty's Government have constantly had to uphold against the opposition of continental powers. In the absence of some certainty that the rule would be respected by both parties to this conflict, we feel great doubt whether it should be regarded as an established principle of international law.

Your excellency will, no doubt, remember that in 1885, at the time when His Majesty's Government were discussing with the French Government this question of the right to declare foodstuffs not intended for the military forces to be contraband, and when public attention had been drawn to the matter, the Kiel Chamber of Commerce applied to the German Government for a statement of the latter's views on the subject. Prince Bismarck's answer was as follows:

"In answer to their representation of the 1st instant, I reply to the chamber of commerce that any disadvantage our commercial and carrying interests may suffer by the treatment of rice as contraband of war does not justify our opposing a measure which it has been thought fit to take in carrying on a foreign war. Every war is a calamity, which entails evil consequences not only on the combatants but also on neutrals. These evils may easily be increased by the interference of a neutral power with the way in which a third carries on the war, to the disadvantage of the subjects of the interfering power, and by this means German commerce might be weighed with far heavier losses than a transitory prohibition of the rice trade in Chinese waters. The measure in question has for its object the shortening of the war by increasing the difficulties of the enemy and is a justifiable step in war if impartially enforced against all neutral ships."

His Majesty's Government are disposed to think that the same view is still maintained by the German Government.

Another circumstance which is now coming to light is that an elaborate machinery has been organized by the enemy for the supply of foodstuffs for the use of the German Army from overseas. Under these circumstances it would be absurd to give any definite pledge that in cases where the supplies can be proved to be for the use of the enemy forces they should be given complete immunity by the simple expedient of dispatching them to an agent in a neutral port.

The reason for drawing a distinction between foodstuffs intended for the civil population and those for the armed forces or enemy Government disappears when the distinction between the civil population and the armed forces itself disappears.

In any country in which there exists such a tremendous organization for war as now obtains in Germany there is no clear division between those whom the Government is responsible for feeding and those whom it is not. Experience shows that the power to requisition will be used to the fullest extent in order to make sure that the wants of the military are supplied, and however much goods may be imported for civil use it is by the military that they will be consumed if military exigencies require it, especially now that the German Government have taken control of all the foodstuffs in the country.

I do not wish to overburden this note with statistics, but in proof of my statement as to the unprecedented extent to which supplies are reaching neutral ports I should like to instance the figures of the exports of certain meat products to Denmark during the months of September and October. Denmark is a country which in normal times imports a certain quantity of such products, but exports still more. In 1913, during the above two months, the United States exports of lard to Denmark were nil, as compared with 22,652,598 pounds in the same two months of 1914. The corresponding figures with regard to bacon were: 1913, nil; 1914, 1,022,195 pounds; canned beef, 1913, nil; 1914, 151,200 pounds; pickled and cured beef, 1913, 42,901 pounds; 1914, 156,143 pounds; pickled pork, 1913, nil; 1914, 812,872 pounds.

In the same two months the United States exported to Denmark 280,176 gallons of mineral lubricating oil in 1914, as compared with 179,252 in 1913; to Norway, 335,468 gallons in 1914, as against 154,179 gallons in 1913; to Sweden, 896,193 gallons in 1914, as against 385,476 gallons in 1913.

I have already mentioned the framing of the order in council of the 20th October, and the transmission to your excellency of particulars of ships and cargoes seized as instances of the efforts which we have made throughout the course of this war to meet all reasonable complaints made on behalf of American citizens, and in my note of the 7th January I alluded to the decision of our prize court in the case of the Miramichi as evidencing the liberal principles adopted toward neutral commerce.

I should also like to refer to the steps which we took at the beginning of the war to insure the speedy release of cargo claimed by neutrals on board enemy ships which were captured or detained at the outbreak of war. Under our prize court rules release of such goods can be obtained without the necessity of entering a claim in the prize court if the documents of title are produced to the officer representing His Majesty's Government and the title to the goods is established to his satisfaction. It was shortly found, however, that this procedure did not provide for the case where the available evidence was so scanty that the officer representing the Crown was not justified in consenting to a release. In order, therefore, to ameliorate the situation we established a special committee, with full powers to authorize the release of goods without insisting on full evidence of title being produced. This committee dealt with the utmost expedition with a large number of claims. In the great majority of cases the goods claimed were released at once. In addition to the cases dealt with by this committee a very large amount of cargo was released at once by the procurator general on production of documents. Claimants therefore obtained their goods without the necessity of applying to the prize court and of incurring the expense involved in retaining lawyers and without the risk, which was in some cases a considerable one, of the goods being eventually held to be enemy property and condemned. We have reason to know that our action in this matter was highly appreciated by many American citizens.

Another instance of the efforts which His Majesty's Government have made to deal as leniently as possible with neutral interests may be found in the policy which we have followed with regard to the transfer to a neutral flag of enemy ships belonging to companies which were incorporated in the enemy country, but all of whose shareholders were neutral. The rules applied by the British and by the American prize courts have always treated the flag as conclusive in favor of the captors in spite of neutral proprietary interests. (See the case of the Pedro, 175 U. S., 354.) In several cases, however, we have consented to waive our belligerent rights to treat as enemy vessels ships belonging to companies incorporated in Germany which were subsidiary to and owned by American corporations. The only condition which we have imposed is that these vessels should take no further part in trade with the enemy country.

I have given these indications of the policy which we have followed, because I can not help feeling that if the facts were more fully known as to the efforts which we have made to avoid inflicting any avoidable injury on neutral interests, many of the complaints which have been received by the administration in Washington, and which led to the protest which your excellency handed to me on the 29th December would never have been made. My hope is that when the facts which I have set out above are realized, and when it is seen that our naval operations have not diminished American trade with neutral countries, and that the lines on which we have acted are consistent with the fundamental principles of international law, it will be apparent to the Government and people of the United States that His Majesty's Government have hitherto endeavored to exercise their belligerent rights with every possible consideration for the interests of neutrals.

It will still be our endeavor to avoid injury and loss to neutrals, but the announcement by the German Government of their intention to sink merchant vessels and their cargoes without verification of their nationality or character, and without making any provision for the safety of noncombatant crews or giving them a chance of saving their lives, has made it necessary for His Majesty's Government to consider what measures they should adopt to protect their interests. It is impossible for one belligerent to depart from rules and precedents and for the other to remain bound by them.

I have the honor, etc.,

E. GREY.

(Dip. Corr. 44–52.)

No. 18. American note, February 10, 1915, regarding the German declaration of a war zone.

(The Secretary of State to the American ambassador at Berlin.)

Please address a note immediately to the Imperial German Government to the following effect:

The Government of the United States, having had its attention directed to the proclamation of the German Admiralty issued on the 4th of February, that the waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland, including the whole of the English Channel, are to be considered as comprised within the seat of war; that all enemy merchant vessels found in those waters after the 18th instant will be destroyed, although it may not always be possible to save crews and passengers; and that neutral vessels expose themselves to danger within this zone of war because, in view of the misuse of neutral flags said to have been ordered by the British Government on the 31st of January and of the contingencies of maritime warfare, it may not be possible always to exempt neutral vessels from attacks intended to strike enemy ships, feels it to be its duty to call the attention of the Imperial German Government, with sincere respect and the most friendly sentiments but very candidly and earnestly, to the very serious possibilities of the course of action apparently contemplated under that proclamation.

The Government of the United States views those possibilities with such grave concern that it feels it to be its privilege, and indeed its duty in the circumstances, to request the Imperial German Government to consider before action is taken the critical situation in respect of the relations between this country and Germany which might arise were the German naval forces, in carrying out the policy foreshadowed in the Admiralty's proclamation, to destroy any merchant vessel of the United States or cause the death of American citizens.

It is of course not necessary to remind the German Government that the sole right of a belligerent in dealing with neutral vessels on the high seas is limited to visit and search, unless a blockade is proclaimed and effectively maintained, which this Government does not understand to be proposed in this case. To declare or exercise a right to attack and destroy any vessel entering a prescribed area of the high seas without first certainly determining its belligerent nationality and the contraband character of its cargo would be an act so unprecedented in naval warfare that this Government is reluctant to believe that the Imperial Government of Germany in this case contemplates it as possible. The suspicion that enemy ships are using neutral flags improperly can create no just presumption that all ships traversing a prescribed area are subject to the same suspicion. It is to determine exactly such questions that this Government understands the right of visit and search to have been recognized.

This Government has carefully noted the explanatory statement issued by the Imperial German Government at the same time with the proclamation of the German Admiralty, and takes this occasion to remind the Imperial German Government very respectfully that the Government of the United States is open to none of the criticisms for unneutral action to which the German Government believe the governments of certain other neutral nations have laid themselves open; that the Government of the United States has not consented to or acquiesced in any measures which may have been taken by the other belligerent nations in the present war which operate to restrain neutral trade, but has, on the contrary, taken in all such matters a position which warrants it in holding those governments responsible in the proper way for any untoward effects upon American shipping which the accepted principles of international law do not justify; and that it, therefore, regards itself as free in the present instance to take with a clear conscience and upon accepted principles the position indicated in this note.

If the commanders of German vessels of war should act upon the presumption that the flag of the United States was not being used in good faith and should destroy on the high seas an American vessel or the lives of American citizens, it would be difficult for the Government of the United States to view the act in any other light than as an indefensible violation of neutral rights which it would be very hard indeed to reconcile with the friendly relations now so happily subsisting between the two Governments.

If such a deplorable situation should arise, the Imperial German Government can readily appreciate that the Government of the United States would be constrained to hold the Imperial German Government to a strict accountability for such acts of their naval authorities and to take any steps it might be necessary to take to safeguard American lives and property and to secure to American citizens the full enjoyment of their acknowledged rights on the high seas.

The Government of the United States, in view of these considerations, which it urges with the greatest respect and with the sincere purpose of making sure that no misunderstanding may arise and no circumstance occur that might even cloud the intercourse of the two Governments, expresses the confident hope and expectation that the Imperial German Government can and will give assurance that American citizens and their vessels will not be molested by the naval forces of Germany otherwise than by visit and search, though their vessels may be traversing the sea area delimited in the proclamation of the German Admiralty.

It is added for the information of the Imperial Government that representations have been made to His Britannic Majesty's Government in respect to the unwarranted use of the American flag for the protection of British ships.

(Dip. Corr. 54–55.)

No. 19. American memorandum, February 10, 1915, concerning the use of the American flag by British vessels. (See No. 24.)

The department has been advised of the declaration of the German Admiralty on February 4, indicating that the British Government had on January 31 explicitly authorized the use of neutral flags on British merchant vessels presumably for the purpose of avoiding recognition by German naval forces. The department's attention has also been directed to reports in the press that the captain of the Lusitania, acting upon orders or information received from the British authorities, raised the American flag as his vessel approached the British coasts, in order to escape anticipated attacks by German submarines. To-day's press reports also contain an alleged official statement of the foreign office defending the use of the flag of a neutral country by a belligerent vessel in order to escape capture or attack by an enemy.

Assuming that the foregoing reports are true, the Government of the United States, reserving for future consideration the legality and propriety of the deceptive use of the flag of a neutral power in any case for the purpose of avoiding capture, desires very respectfully to point out to His Britannic Majesty's Government the serious consequences which may result to American vessels and American citizens if this practice is continued.

The occasional use of the flag of a neutral or an enemy under the stress of immediate pursuit and to deceive an approaching enemy, which appears by the press reports to be represented as the precedent and justification used to support this action, seems to this Government a very different thing from an explicit sanction by a belligerent government for its merchant ships generally to fly the flag of a neutral power within certain portions of the high seas which are presumed to be frequented with hostile warships. The formal declaration of such a policy of general misuse of a neutral's flag jeopardizes the vessels of the neutral visiting those waters in a peculiar degree by raising the presumption that they are of belligerent nationality regardless of the flag which they may carry.

In view of the announced purpose of the German Admiralty to engage in active naval operations in certain delimited sea areas adjacent to the coasts of Great Britain and Ireland, the Government of the United States would view with anxious solicitude any general use of the flag of the United States by British vessels traversing those waters. A policy such as the one which His Majesty's Government is said to intend to adopt, would, if the declaration of the German Admiralty is put in force, it seems clear, afford no protection to British vessels, while it would be a serious and constant menace to the lives and vessels of American citizens.

The Government of the United States, therefore, trusts that His Majesty's Government will do all in their power to restrain vessels of British nationality from the deceptive use of the flag of the United States in the sea area defined in the German declaration, since such practice would greatly endanger the vessels of a friendly power navigating those waters and would even seem to impose upon the Government of Great Britain a measure of responsibility for the loss of American lives and vessels in case of an attack by a German naval force.

Please present a note to Sir Edward Grey in the sense of the foregoing and impress him with the grave concern which this Government feels in the circumstances in regard to the safety of American vessels and lives in the war zone declared by the German Admiralty.

You may add that this Government is making earnest representations to the German Government in regard to the danger to American vessels and citizens if the declaration of the German Admiralty is put into effect.

BRYAN.

(Dip. Corr. 55.)

No. 20. American note, February 15, 1915, regarding the Wilhelmina. (See also Nos. 25 and 40.)

(The Secretary of State to the American ambassador at London.)

The department notes that you have been informed by the British Government that the cargo of the American steamer Wilhelmina has been sent to prize court, but is not yet unloaded. The Government of the United States, of course, has no intention of interfering with the proper course of judicial procedure in the British prize courts, but it deems it proper to bring to the attention of the British Government information which has been received in relation to the character and destination of the cargo and to point out certain considerations prompting the supposition that the seizure may not be justified.

This Government is informed that the W. L. Green Commission Co., an American corporation organized in 1891, which in the past has made extensive shipments of goods to Germany, is the sole owner of the cargo which consists entirely of foodstuffs consigned to the W. L. Green Commission Co., Hamburg, and that the company's manager, now in Europe, has instructions to sell the cargo solely to the civilian population of Hamburg. A copy of the ship's manifest has been submitted to this Government, accompanied by a sworn statement from the company's manager in which he represents that he was instructed to proceed to Germany to dispose of the cargo to private purchasers in that country, and not to any belligerent government nor armed forces of such government, nor to any agent of a belligerent government or of its armed forces.

According to well-established practice among nations, admitted, as this Government understands by the Government of Great Britain, the articles of which the Wilhelmina's cargo is said to consist, are subject to seizure as contraband only in case they are destined for the use of a belligerent government or its armed forces. The Government of the United States understands that the British authorities consider the seizure of the cargo justified on the ground that a recent order of the Federal Council of Germany, promulgated after the vessel sailed, required the delivery of imported articles to the German Government. The owners of the cargo have represented to this Government that such a position is untenable. They point out that, by a provision of the order in question as originally announced, the regulations in relation to the seizure of food products are made inapplicable to such products imported after January 31, 1915. They further represent that the only articles shipped on the Wilhelmina which are embraced within the terms of these regulations are wheat and bran, which constitute about 15 per cent of the cargo as compared with 85 per cent consisting of meats, vegetables, and fruits. The owners also assert that the regulations contemplate the disposition of foodstuffs to individuals through municipalities; that municipalities are not agents of the Government, and that the purpose of the regulations is to conserve the supply of food products and to prevent speculation and inflation of prices to noncombatants.

The German Government has addressed a formal communication to the Government of the United States in relation to the effect of the decree issued by the German Federal Council, and this Government deems it pertinent to call to the attention of the British Government a material portion of this communication, which is as follows:

"1. The federal council's decision concerning the seizure of food products, which England alleges to be the cause of food products shipped to Germany being treated as contraband, bears exclusively on wheat, rye, both unmixed and mixed with other products, and also wheat, rye, oats, and barley flour.

"2. The federal council makes an express exception in section 45 of the order. Section 45 provides as follows: The stipulations of this regulation do not apply to grain or flour imported from abroad after January 31.

"3. Conjunctively with that saving clause the federal council's order contains a provision under which imported cereals and flours would be sold exclusively to the municipalities or certain specially designated organizations by the importers. Although that provision had for its object simply to throw imported grain and flours into such channels as supply the private consumption of civilians and, in consequence of that provision, the intent and purpose of the federal council's order which was to protect the civilian population from speculators and engrossers were fully met, it was nevertheless rescinded so as to leave no room for doubt.

"4. My Government is amenable to any proposition looking to control by a special American organization under the supervision of the American consular officers and, if necessary, will itself make a proposition in that direction.

"5. The German Government further calls attention to the fact that municipalities do not form part of or belong to the Government but are self-administrative bodies, which are elected by the inhabitants of the commune in accordance with fixed rules and therefore exclusively represent the private part of the population and act as it directs. Although those principles are generally known and obtain in the United States as well as in England itself, the German Government desired to point out the fact so as to avoid any further unnecessary delay.

"6. Hence it is absolutely assured that imported food products will be consumed by the civilian population in Germany exclusively."

It will be observed that it is stated in this communication, which appears to confirm the contentions of the cargo owners, that a part of the order of the German Federal Council relating to imported food products has now been rescinded.

This Government has received another communication from the German Government giving formal assurance to the Government of the United States that all goods imported into Germany from the United States, directly or indirectly, which belong to the class of reiative contraband, such as foodstuffs, will not be used by the German army or navy or by Government authorities, but will be left to the free consumption of the German civilian population, excluding all Government purveyors.

If the British authorities have not in their possession evidence, other than that presented to this Government as to the character and destination of the cargo of the Wilhelmina, sufficient to warrant the seizure of this cargo, the Government of the United States hopes that the British Government will release the vessel together with her cargo and allow her to proceed to her port of destination.

Please communicate with the British Government in the sense of the foregoing.

BRYAN.

No. 21. German note, February 15, 1915, in reference to the proclamation of January 25 concerning foodstuffs (No. 13).

(The German ambassador to the Secretary of State.)

1. The federal council's decision concerning the seizure of food products, which England alleges to be the cause of food products shipped to Germany being treated as contraband, is exclusively on "wheat, rye, both unmixed and mixed with other products," and also "wheat, rye, oats, and barley flour."

2. The federal council makes an express exception in section 45 of the order. Section 45 provides as follows "The stipulations of this regulation do not apply to grain or flour imported from abroad after January 31."

3. Conjunctively with that saving clause, the federal council's order contains a provision under which imported cereals and flours could be sold exclusively to the municipalities of certain specially designated organizations by the importers. Although that provision had for its object simply to throw imported grain and flour into such channels as supply the private consumption of civilians, and, in consequence of that provision, the intent and purpose of the federal council's order, which was to protect the civilian population from speculators and engrossers, were fully met, it was nevertheless rescinded so as to leave no room for doubt.

4. My Government is amenable to any proposition looking to control by a special American organization under the supervision of the American consular officers, and, if necessary, will itself make a proposition in that direction.

5. The German Government further calls attention to the fact that municipalities do not form part of or belong to the Government, but are "self-administrative bodies," which are elected by the inhabitants of the commune in accordance with fixed rules, and, therefore, exclusively represent the private part of the population and act as it directs. Although these principles are generally known and obtain in the United States, as well as in England itself, the German Government desired to point out the fact so as to avoid any further unnecessary delay.

6. Hence it is absolutely assured that imported food products will be consumed by the civilian population in Germany exclusively, and there remains no doubt upon which England can prevent the exportation of food products from America to Germany for the use of civilians.

The Imperial Government expresses the firm hope that the American Government will stand on its right in this matter. (The New York Times, Feb. 18, 1915.)

No. 22. German statement, February 15, 1915, in regard to armed British merchantmen, the use of neutral flags and the mining of the war zone.

(Paraphrase of a note from the German ambassador to the Secretary of State.)

According to absolutely reliable information British merchant ships intend to oppose armed resistance to German men-of-war in the area declared as war zone by the German Admiralty.

Some of these ships were already armed with British naval guns. Now all the others are speedily being equipped in a similar way. Merchant ships have been instructed to sail in groups, and to ram German submarines, while the examination is proceeding, or should the submarines lie alongside, to throw bombs upon them, or else to attempt to overpower the examining party coming on board.

A very high premium has been offered for the destruction of the first German submarine by a British merchant vessel. Therefore, British merchant ships can not any more be considered as undefended, so that they may be attacked by German war vessels without warning or search. The British admitted that instructions had been given to misuse neutral flags. It is almost certain that British merchant vessels will by all means try to conceal their identity. Thereby, it also becomes almost impossible to ascertain the identity of neutral ships, unless they sail in daylight under convoy, as all measures suggested by neutrals, for instance painting of the ships in the national colors, may be promptly imitated by British ships. The attacks to be expected by masked British merchant vessels make a search impossible, as the examining party and the submarines themselves would thereby be exposed to destruction.

Under the circumstances, the safety of neutral shipping in the war zone around the British Isles is seriously threatened. There is also an increased danger resulting from mines, as these will be laid in the war zone to a great extent. Accordingly, neutral ships are urgently warned against entering that area, while the course around Scotland will be safe.

Germany has been compelled to resort to this kind of warfare by the murderous ways of British naval warfare, which aims at the destruction of legitimate neutral trade and at the starvation of the German people. Germany will be obliged to adhere to these announced principles till England submits to the recognized rules of warfare established by the declarations of Paris and London, or till she is compelled to do so by the neutral powers. (The New York Times, Feb. 16, 1915.)

No. 23. German note, February 16, 1915, replying to the American note of February 10 (No. 18), in regard to the declaration of a war zone.

(The minister for foreign affairs to the American ambassador.)

In reference to the note of the 12th instant, foreign office No. 2260, relative to the German measures respecting the theater of war in the waters surrounding England, the undersigned has the honor to reply to his excellency the ambassador of the United States, James W. Gerard, as follows:

The Imperial German Government have examined the communication of the Government of the United States in the same spirit of good will and friendship which seems to have prompted this communication.

The Imperial German Government are in entire accord with the Government of the United States that it is in the highest degree desirable for all parties to avoid the misunderstanding which might arise from the measures announced by the German Admiralty and to avert the intrusion of events calculated to interrupt the most friendly relations which have so happily existed between the two Governments up to this time.

On this assurance the German Government believe that they may depend on full understanding on the part of the United States, all the more because the action announced by the German Admiralty, as was dwelt upon at length in the note of the 4th instant, is in no wise directed against the legitimate trade and navigaton of neutral States, but merely represents an act of self-defense which Germany's vital interests force her to take against England's method of conducting maritime war in defiance of international law, which no protest on the part of neutrals has availed to bring into accordance with the legal status generally recognized before the outbreak of hostilities.

In order to exclude all possible doubt on this cardinal point the German Government beg to set forth once more the actual situation.

Up to now Germany has scrupulously observed the existing provisions of international law relative to maritime war. In particular she assented without delay to the proposal made by the American Government directly after the war began to ratify the declaration of London, and embodied the contents thereof without change in her prize law, even without formally binding herself in this direction. The German Government have adhered to these provisions, even where they conflicted with military interests. Our Government at the same time have permitted the supply of food by Denmark to England until the present, although they could well have prevented this traffic by reason of their naval forces.

In direct opposition to this, England has not shrunk from grave violations of international law wherever she could thereby cripple Germany's peaceable trade with neutral countries. It will not be necessary for the German Government to go into great detail on this point, especially since the American note to the British Government dated December 28, 1914, which has been brought to their knowledge, has dealt with this point very aptly if not very exhaustively on the ground of the experiences of months.

It is conceded that the intention of all these aggressions is to cut off Germany from all supplies, and thereby to deliver up to death by famine a peaceful civilian population, a procedure contrary to law of war and every dictate of humanity.

The neutrals have not been able to prevent this interception of different kinds of trade with Germany contrary to international law. It is true that the American Government have protested against England's procedure, and Germany is glad to acknowledge this; but, in spite of this protest and the protests of the other neutral Governments, England has not allowed herself to be dissuaded from the course originally adopted. Thus, the American ship Wilhelmina was recently brought into port by England, although her cargo was destined solely for the civil population of Germany and was to be used only for this purpose, according to an express declaration of the German Government.

In this way the following has been created: Germany is to all intents and purposes cut off from over-sea supplies with the toleration, tacit or protesting, of the neutrals, regardless of whether it is a question of goods which are absolute contraband or only conditional contraband or not contraband at all, following the law generally recognized before the outbreak of the war. On the other hand, England, with the indulgence of neutral Governments, is not only being provided with such goods as are not contraband or merely conditional contraband, namely, foodstuffs, raw material, etc., although these are treated by England when Germany is in question as absolute contraband, but also with goods which have been regularly and unquestionably acknowledged to be absolute contraband. The German Government believe that they are obliged to point out very particularly and with the greatest emphasis that a trade in arms exists between American manufacturers and Germany's enemies which is estimated at many hundred million marks.

The German Government have given due recognition to the fact that as a matter of form the exercise of rights and the toleration of wrong on the part of neutrals is limited by their pleasure alone and involves no formal breach of neutrality. The German Government have not, in consequence, made any charge of formal breach of neutrality. The German Government can not, however, do otherwise, especially in the interest of absolute clearness in the relations between the two countries, than to emphasize that they, in common with the public opinion of Germany, feel themselves placed at a great disadvantage through the fact that the neutral powers have hitherto achieved no success or only an unmeaning success in their assertion of the right to trade with Germany, acknowledged to be legitimate by international law, whereas they make unlimited use of their right to tolerate trade in contraband with England and our other enemies. Conceded that it is the formal right of neutrals not to protect their legitimate trade with Germany, and even to allow themselves knowingly and willingly to be induced by England to restrict such trade, it is, on the other hand, not less their good right, although unfortunately not exercised, to stop trade in contraband, especially the trade in arms, with Germany's enemies.

In view of this situation the German Government see themselves compelled, after six months of patience and watchful waiting, to meet England's murderous method of conducting maritime war with drastic counter measures. If England invokes the powers of famine as an ally in its struggle against Germany with the intention of leaving a civilized people the alternative of perishing in misery or submitting to the yoke of England's political and commercial will, the German Government are to-day determined to take up the gantlet and to appeal to the same grim ally. They rely on the neutrals who have hitherto tacitly or under protest submitted to the consequences, detrimental to themselves, of England's war of famine to display not less tolerance toward Germany, even if the German measures constitute new forms of maritime war, as has hitherto been the case with the English measures.

In addition to this, the German Government are determined to suppress with all the means at their disposal the supply of war material to England and her allies and assume at the same time that it is a matter of course that the neutral Governments which have hitherto undertaken no action against the trade in arms which (sic) [with] Germany's enemies do not intend to oppose the forcible suppression of this trade by Germany.

Proceeding from these points of view, the German Admiralty has declared the zone prescribed by it the seat of war; it will obstruct this area of maritime war by mines wherever possible and also endeavor to destroy the merchant vessels of the enemy in any other way.

It is very far, indeed, from the intention of the German Government, acting in obedience to these compelling circumstances, ever to destroy neutral lives and neutral property; but, on the other hand, they can not be blind to the fact that dangers arise through the action to be carried out against England which menace without discrimination all trade within the area of maritime war. This applies, as a matter of course, to war mines, which place any ship approaching a mined area in danger, even if the limits of international law are adhered to most strictly.

The German Government believe that they are all the more justified in the hope that the neutral powers will become reconciled with this, just as they have with the serious injury caused them thus far by England's measures, because it is their will to do everything in any way compatible with the accomplishment of their purpose for the protection of neutral shipping even within the area of maritime war.

They furnish the first proof of their good will by announcing the measures intended by them at a time not less than two weeks beforehand in order to give neutral shipping an opportunity to make the necessary arrangements to avoid the threatening danger. The safest method of doing this is to stay away from the area of maritime war. Neutral ships entering the closed waters in spite of this announcement, given so far in advance, and which seriously impairs the accomplishment of the military purpose against England, bear their own responsibility for any unfortunate accidents. The German Government, on their side, expressly decline all responsibility for such accidents and their consequences.

Furthermore, the German Government announced merely the destruction of enemy merchant vessels found within the area of maritime war and not the destruction of all merchant vessels, as the American Government appear to have erroneously understood. This limitation which the German Government have imposed upon themselves impairs the military purpose, especially since the presumption will prevail, even in the case of netural ships, that they have contraband on board, in view of the interpretation of the idea of contraband in which the English Government have indulged as regards Germany and which the German Government will accordingly apply against England.

Naturally, the imperial Government are not willing to waive the right to establish the presence of contraband in the cargoes of neutral ships and, in cases requiring it, to take any action necessary on the grounds established. Finally, the German Government are prepared to accord, in conjunction with the American Government, the most earnest consideration to any measure that might be calculated to insure the safety of legitimate shipping of neutrals within the seat of war. They can not, however, overlook the fact that all efforts in this direction are considerably hampered by two circumstances: First, by the misuse of the neutral flag by English merchant vessels, which, in the meantime, has probably been established beyond a doubt by the American Government likewise; second, by the above-mentioned trade in contraband, especially war materials, by neutral merchant vessels. In regard to the latter point, the German Government ventures to hope that the American Government, upon reconsideration, will see their way clear to a measure of intervention in accordance with the spirit of true neutrality.

As regards the first point, the secret order of the British Admiralty has already been communicated to the American Government by Germany. It recommends English merchant vessels to use neutral flags and has in the meantime been confirmed by a statement of the British foreign office, which refers to the municipal law of England and characterizes such action as quite unobjectionable. The English merchant marine has followed this counsel without delay, as is probably known to the American Government from the cases of the Lusitania and Laertes. Moreover, the British Government have armed English merchant vessels and instructed them to resist by force the German submarines. In these circumstances it is very difficult for the German submarines to recognize neutral merchant vessels as such, for even a search will not be possible in the majority of cases, since the attacks to be anticipated in the case of a disguised English ship would expose the commanders conducting a search and the boat itself to the danger of destruction.

The British Government would then be in a position to render the German measures illusory if their merchant marine persists in the misuse of neutral flags and neutral vessels are not marked in some other manner admitting of no possible doubt. Germany must, in the exigency into which she has unlawfully been forced, make her measures effective at all events in order thereby to compel her adversary to conduct maritime warfare in accordance with international law, and thus to reastablish the freedom of the seas, which she has ever advocated and for which she is fighting likewise to-day.

The German Government, therefore, welcomes the fact that the American Government have made representations to the British Government relative to the use of their flag contrary to law, and give expression to the expectation that this action will cause England to respect the American flag in future.

In this expectation the commanders of the German submarines have been instructed, as was already stated in the note of the 4th instant, to abstain from violence to American merchant vessels when they are recognized as such.

In order to meet in the safest manner all the consequences of mistaking an American for a hostile merchant vessel, the German Government recommended that (although this would not apply in the case of danger from mines) the United States convoy their ships carrying peaceable cargoes and traversing the English seat of maritime war in order to make them recognizable. In this connection the German Government believe it should be made a condition that only such ships should be convoyed as carry no merchandise which would have to be considered as contraband, according to the interpretation applied by England against Germany. The German Government are prepared to enter into immediate negotiations with the American Government relative to the manner of convoy. They would, however, be particularly grateful if the American Government would urgently advise their merchant vessels to avoid the English seat of maritime war, at any rate until the flag question is settled.

The German Government resign themselves to the confident hope that the American Government will recognize the full meaning of the severe struggle which Germany is conducting for her very existence, and will gain full understanding of the reasons which prompt Germany and the aims of the measures announced by her from the above explanations and promises.

The German Government repeat that in the scrupulous consideration for neutrals hitherto practiced by them they have determined upon the measures planned only under the strongest compulsion of national self-preservation. Should the American Government at the eleventh hour succeed in removing, by virtue of the weight which they have the right and ability to throw into the scales of the fate of peoples, the reasons which have made it the imperative duty of the German Government to take the action indicated, should the American Government in particular find a way to bring about the observation of the declaration of London on the part of the powers at war with Germany and thereby to render possible for Germany the legitimate supply of foodstuffs and industrial raw materials, the German Government would recognize this as a service which could not be too highly estimated in favor of more humane conduct of war, and would gladly draw the necessary conclusions from the new situation thus created.

The undersigned requests the ambassador to bring the above to the attention of the American Government and avails himself of the opportunity to renew, etc.

VON JAGOW.

(Dip. Corr. 56–59.)

No. 24. British memorandum, February 19, 1915, concerning the use of the American flag by British vessels. (See No. 19.)

The memorandum communicated on the 11th of February calls attention in courteous and friendly terms to the action of the captain of the British S. S. Lusitania in raising the flag of the United States of America when approaching British waters and says that the Government of the United States feel a certain anxiety in considering the possibility of any general use of the flag of the United States by British vessels traversing those waters since the effect of such a policy might be to bring about a menace to the lives and vessels of United States citizens.

It was understood that the German Government had announced their intention of sinking British merchant vessels at sight by torpedoes without giving any opportunity of making any provision for saving the lives of noncombatant crews and passengers. It was in consequence of this threat that the Lusitania raised the United States flag on her inward voyage and on her subsequent outward voyage. A request was made by the United States passengers who were embarking on board her that the United States flag should be hoisted presumably to insure their safety. Meanwhile the memorandum from your excellency had been received. His Majesty's Government did not give any advice to the company as to how to meet this request, and it is understood that the Lusitania left Liverpool under the British flag.

It seems unnecessary to say more as regards the Lusitania in particular regard to the use of foreign flags by merchant vessels. The British merchant shipping act makes it clear that the use of the British flag by foreign merchant vessels is permitted in time of war for the purpose of escaping capture. It is believed that in the case of some other nations there is a similar recognition of the same practice with regard to their flags and that none have forbidden it. It would therefore be unreasonable to expect His Majesty's Government to pass legislation forbidding the use of foreign flags by British merchant vessels to avoid capture by the enemy. Now that the German Government have announced their intention to sink merchant vessels at sight with their noncombatant crews, cargoes, and papers, a proceeding hitherto regarded by the opinion of the world not as war, but as piracy, it is felt that the United States Government could not fairly ask the British Government to order British merchant vessels to forego the means—always hitherto permitted—of escaping not only capture, but the much worse fate of sinking and destruction. Great Britain has always when neutral accorded to the vessels of other States at war liberty to use the British flag as a means of protection against capture, and instances are on record when United States vessels availed themselves of this facility during the American Civil War. It would be contrary to fair expectation if now when the conditions are reversed the United States and neutral nations were to grudge to British ships liberty to take similar action. The British Government have no intention of advising their merchant shipping to use foreign flags as general practice or to resort to them otherwise than for escaping capture or destruction.

The obligation upon a belligerent warship to ascertain definitely for itself the nationality and character of a merchant vessel before capturing it and a fortiori before sinking and destroying it has been universally recognized. If that obligation is fulfilled hoisting a neutral flag on board a British vessel can not possibly endanger neutral shipping, and the British Government hold that if loss to neutrals is caused by disregard of this obligation it is upon the enemy vessel disregarding it and upon the government giving orders that it should be disregarded that the sole responsibility for injury to neutrals ought to rest. (Dip. Corr. 59.)

No. 25. British memorandum, February 19, 1915, regarding the Wilhelmina. (See No. 20.)

The communication made by the United States ambassador in his note to Sir Edward Grey, of the 16th instant, has been carefully considered, and the following observations are offered in reply:

2. At the time when His Majesty's Government gave directions for the seizure of the cargo of the steamship Wilhelmina as contraband they had before them the text of the decree made by the German Federal Council on the 25th of January, under article 45 of which all grain and flour imported into Germany after the 31 of January was declared deliverable only to certain organizations under direct government control or to municipal authorities. The vessel was bound for Hamburg, one of the free cities of the German Empire, the government of which is vested in the municipality. This was one of the reasons actuating His Majesty's Government in deciding to bring the cargo of the Wilhelmina before the prize court.

3. Information has only now reached them that by a subsequent decree, dated the 6th of February, the above provision in article 45 of the previous decree was repealed, it would appear for the express purpose of rendering difficult the anticipated proceedings against the Wilhelmina. The repeal was not known to His Majesty's Government at the time of detention of the cargo, or indeed, until now.

4. How far the ostensible exception of imported supplies from the general Government monopoly of all grain and flour set up by the German Government may affect the question of the contraband nature of the shipment seized is a matter which will most suitably be investigated by the prize court.

5. It is, however, necessary to state that the German decree is not the only ground on which the submission of the cargo of the Wilhelmina to a prize court is justified. The German Government have in public announcements claimed to treat practically every town or port on the English east coast as a fortified place and base of operations. On the strength of this contention they have subjected to bombardment the open towns of Yarmouth, Scarborough, and Whitby, among others. On the same ground a number of neutral vessels sailing for English ports on the east coast with cargoes of goods on the German list of conditional contraband have been seized by German cruisers and brought before the German prize court. Again, the Dutch vessel Maria, having sailed from California with a cargo of grain consigned to Dublin and Belfast, was sunk in September last by the German cruiser Karlsruhe. This could only have been justified if, among other things, the cargo could have been proved to be destined for the British Government or armed forces, and if a presumption to this effect had been established owing to Dublin or Belfast being considered a fortified place or a base for the armed forces.

6. The German Government can not have it both ways. If they consider themselves justified in destroying by bombardment the lives and property of peaceful civil inhabitants of English open towns and watering places and in seizing and sinking ships and cargoes of conditional contraband on the way thither on the ground that they were consigned to a fortified place or base, "a fortiori," His Majesty's Government must be at liberty to treat Hamburg, which is in part protected by the fortifications at the mouth of the Elbe, as a fortified town and a base of operations and supply for the purposes of article 34 of the declaration of London. If the owners of the cargo of the Wilhelmina desire to question the validity in international law of the action taken by order of His Majesty's Government, they will have every opportunity of establishing their case in due course before the prize court, and His Majesty's Government would in this connection recall the attention of the United States Government to the considerations put forward in Sir Edward Grey's note to Mr. Page of the 10th instant as to the propriety of awaiting the result of prize-court proceedings before diplomatic action is initiated. It will be remembered that they have from the outset given a definite assurance that the owners of the Wilhelmina, as well as the owners of her cargo, if found not to be contraband, would be equitably indemnified.

7. There is one further observation to which His Majesty's Government think it right and appropriate in the present connection to give expression. They have not so far declared foodstuffs to be absolute contraband. They have not interfered with any neutral vessels on account of their carrying foodstuffs, except on the basis of such foodstuffs being liable to capture if destined for the enemy forces or Governments. In so acting they have been guided by the general principle, of late universally upheld by civilized nations and observed in practice, that the civil populations of countries at war are not to be exposed to the treatment rightly reserved for combatants. This distinction has to all intents and purposes been swept away by the novel doctrines proclaimed and acted upon by the German Government.

8. It is unnecessary here to dwell upon the treatment that has been meted out to the civil population of Belgium and those parts of France which are in German occupation. When Germany, long before any mines had been laid by British authorities, proceeded to sow mines upon the high seas, and by this means sunk a considerable number not only of British but also of neutral merchantmen, with their unoffending crews, it was, so His Majesty's Government held, open to them to take retaliatory measures, even if such measures were of a kind to involve pressure of the civil population—not, indeed, of neutral States, but of their enemies. They refrained from doing so.

9. When subsequently English towns and defenseless British subjects, including women and children, were deliberately and systematically fired upon and killed by ships flying the flag of the Imperial German Navy, when quiet country towns and villages void of defenses and possessing no military or naval importance were bombarded by German airships, His Majesty's Government still abstained from drawing the logical consequences from this form of attack on defenseless citizens. Further steps in the same direction are now announced, and, in fact, have already been taken by Germany. British merchant vessels have been torpedoed at sight, without any attempt being made to give warning to the crew or any opportunity being given to save their lives; a torpedo has been fired against a British hospital ship in daylight, and similar treatment is threatened to all British merchant vessels in future, as well as to any neutral ships that may happen to be found in the neighborhood of the British Isles.

10. Faced with this situation, His Majesty's Government consider it would be altogether unreasonable that Great Britain and her allies should be expected to remain indefinitely bound, to their grave detriment, by rules and principles of which they recognize the justice if impartially observed as between belligerents, but which are at the present moment openly set at defiance by their enemy.

11. If, therefore, His Majesty's Government should hereafter feel constrained to declare foodstuffs absolute contraband or to take other measures for interfering with German trade by way of reprisals, they confidently expect that such action will not be challenged on the part of neutral States by appeals to laws and usages of war whose validity rests on their forming an integral part of that system of international doctrine which as a whole their enemy frankly boasts the liberty and intention to disregard, so long as such neutral States can not compel the German Government to abandon methods of warfare which have not in recent history been regarded as having the sanction of either law or humanity. (Dip. Corr., 82–83.)

No. 26. American note, February 20, 1915, proposing mutual concessions in the conduct of naval warfare:

(The Secretary of State to the American ambassador at London. Same to the American ambassador at Berlin. See German answer, No. 27; English, No. 32.)

You will please deliver to Sir Edward Grey the following identic note, which we are sending England and Germany:

In view of the correspondence which has passed between this Government and Great Britain and Germany, respectively, relative to the declaration of a war zone by the German Admiralty and the use of neutral flags by British merchant vessels, this Government ventures to express the hope that the two belligerent Governments may, through reciprocal concessions, find a basis for agreement which will relieve neutral ships engaged in peaceful commerce from the great dangers which they will incur in the high seas adjacent to the coasts of the belligerents.

The Government of the United States respectfully suggests that an agreement in terms like the following might be entered into. This suggestion is not to be regarded as in any sense a proposal made by this Government, for it, of course, fully recognizes that it is not its privilege to propose terms of agreement between Great Britain and Germany, even though the matter be one in which it and the people of the United States are directly and deeply interested. It is merely venturing to take the liberty which it hopes may be accorded a sincere friend desirous of embarrassing neither nation involved and of serving, if it may, the common interests of humanity. The course outlined is offered in the hope that it may draw forth the views and elicit the suggestions of the British and German Governments on a matter of capital interest to the whole world.

Germany and Great Britain to agree:

1. That neither will sow any floating mines, whether upon the high seas or in territorial waters; that neither will plant on the high seas anchored mines except within cannon range of harbors for defensive purposes only; and that all mines shall bear the stamp of the Government planting them and be so constructed as to become harmless if separated from their moorings.

2. That neither will use submarines to attack merchant vessels of any nationality except to enforce the right of visit and search.

3. That each will require their respective merchant vessels not to use neutral flags for the purpose of disguise or ruse de guerre.

Germany to agree:

That all importations of food or foodstuffs from the United States (and from such other neutral countries as may ask it) into Germany shall be consigned to agencies to be designated by the United States Government; that these American agencies shall have entire charge and control without interference on the part of the German Government, of the receipt and distribution of such importations, and shall distribute them solely to retail dealers bearing licenses from the German Government entitling them to receive and furnish such food and foodstuffs to noncombatants only; that any violation of the terms of the retailers' licenses shall work a forfeiture of their rights to receive such food and foodstuffs for this purpose; and that such food and foodstuffs will not be requisitioned by the German Government for any purpose whatsoever or be diverted to the use of the armed forces of Germany.

Great Britain to agree:

That food and foodstuffs will not be placed upon the absolute contraband list and that shipments of such commodities will not be interfered with or detained by British authorities if consigned to agencies designated by the United States Government in Germany for the receipt and distribution of such cargoes to licensed German retailers for distribution solely to the noncombatant population.

In submitting this proposed basis of agreement this Government does not wish to be understood as admitting or denying any belligerent or neutral right established by the principles of international law, but would consider the agreement, if acceptable to the interested powers, a modus vivendi based upon expediency rather than legal right and as not binding upon the United States either in its present form or in a modified form until accepted by this Government.

No. 27. German note, February 28, 1915, accepting in substance the American proposal of February 20 (No. 26).

The undersigned has the honor to inform his excellency, Mr. James W. Gerard, ambassador of the United States of America, in reply to the note of the 22d instant that the Imperial German Government have taken note with great interest of the suggestion of the American Government that certain principles for the conduct of maritime war on the part of Germany and England be agreed upon for the protection of neutral shipping. They see therein new evidence of the friendly feelings of the American Government toward the German Government which are fully reciprocated by Germany.

It is in accordance with Germany's wishes also to have maritime war conducted according to rules which without discriminately restricting one or the other of the belligerent powers in the use of their means of warfare are equally considerate of the interests of neutrals and the dictates of humanity. Consequently it was intimated in the German note of the 16th instant that observation of the declaration of London on the part of Germany's adversaries would create a new situation from which the German Government would gladly draw the proper conclusions.

Proceeding from this view, the German Government have carefully examined the suggestion of the American Government and believe that they can actually see in it a suitable basis for the practical solution of the questions which have arisen.

With regard to the various points of the American note they beg to make the following remarks:

1. With regard to the sowing of mines, the German Government would be willing to agree as suggested not to use floating mines and to have anchored mines constructed as indicated. Moreover, they agree to put the stamp of the Government on all mines to be planted. On the other hand, it does not appear to them to be feasible for the belligerents wholly to forego the use of anchored mines for offensive purposes.

2. The German Government would undertake not to use their submarines to attack mercantile of any flag except when necessary to enforce the right of visit and search. Should the enemy nationality of the vessel or the presence of contraband be ascertained submarine would proceed in accordance with the general rules of international law.

3. As provided in the American note, this restriction of the use of the submarines is contingent on the fact that enemy mercantile abstain from the use of the neutral flag and other neutral distinctive marks. It would appear to be a matter of course that such mercantile also abstain from arming themselves and from all resistance by force, since such procedure contrary to international law would render impossible any action of the submarines in accordance with international law.

4. The regulation of legitimate importations of food into Germany suggested by the American Government appears to be in general acceptable. Such regulation would, of course, be confined to importations by sea, but that would, on the other hand, include indirect importations by way of neutral ports. The German Government would therefore be willing to make the declarations of the nature provided in the American note so that the use of the imported food and foodstuffs solely by the noncombatant population would be guaranteed. The Imperial Government must, however, in addition (* * *) (apparent omission) having the importation of other raw material used by the economic system of noncombatants including forage permitted. To that end the enemy Governments would have to permit the free entry into Germany of the raw materials mentioned in the free list of the declaration of London, and to treat materials included in the list of conditional contraband according to the same principles as food and foodstuffs.

The German Government ventures to hope that the agreement for which the American Government has paved the way may be reached after due consideration of the remarks made above, and that in this way peaceable neutral shipping and trade will not have to suffer any more than is absolutely necessary from the unavoidable effects of maritime war. These effects could be still further reduced if, as was pointed out in the German note of the 16th instant, some way could be found to exclude the shipping of munitions of war from neutral countries to belligerents on ships of any nationality.

The German Government must, of course, reserve a definite statement of their position until such time as they may receive further information from the American Government enabling them to see what obligations the British Government are on their part willing to assume.

The undersigned avails himself of this occasion, etc.

No. 28. British and French declaration, March 1, 1915, in restraint of sea-borne commerce with Germany. (Statement read by the British prime minister in the House of Commons and communicated to the neutral powers.)

(The British ambassador at Washington to the Secretary of State.)

Germany has declared that the English Channel, the north and west coasts of France, and the waters around the British Isles are a war area, and has officially notified that all enemy ships found in that area will be destroyed and that neutral vessels may be exposed to danger. This is in effect a claim to torpedo at sight, without regard to the safety of the crew or passengers, any merchant vessel under any flag. As it is not in the power of the German admiralty to maintain any surface craft in these waters, this attack can only be delivered by submarine agency.

The law and custom of nations in regard to attacks on commerce have always presumed that the first duty of the captor of a merchant vessel is to bring it before a prize court where it may be tried, where the regularity of the capture may be challenged, and where neutrals may recover their cargoes. The sinking of prizes is in itself a questionable act, to be resorted to only in extraordinary circumstances and after provision has been made for the safety of all the crew or passengers, if there are passengers on board. The responsibility for discriminating between neutral and enemy vessels and between neutral and enemy cargo, obviously rests with the attacking ship, whose duty it is to verify the status and character of the vessel and cargo and to preserve all papers before sinking or even capturing it. So also is the humane duty of providing for the safety of the crews of merchant vessels, whether neutral or enemy, an obligation upon every belligerent.

It is upon this basis that all previous discussions of the law for regulating warfare at sea have proceeded. A German submarine, however, fulfills none of these obligations; she enjoys no local command of the waters in which she operates; she does not take her captures within the jurisdiction of a prize court; she carries no prize crew which she can put on board a prize; she uses no effective means of discriminating between a neutral and an enemy vessel; she does not receive on board for safety the crew and passengers of the vessel she sinks; her methods of warfare are therefore entirely outside the scope of any of the international instruments regulating operations against commerce in time of war. The German declaration substitutes indiscriminate destruction for regulated capture. Germany is adopting these methods against peaceful traders and noncombatant crews with the avowed object of preventing commodities of all kinds, including food for the civil population from reaching or leaving the British Isles or northern France.

Her opponents are therefore driven to frame retaliatory measures in order in their turn to prevent commodities of any kind from reaching or leaving Germany. These measures will, however, be enforced by the British and French Governments without risk to neutral ships or to neutral or noncombatant life and in strict observance of the dictates of humanity. The British and French Governments will therefore hold themselves free to detain and take into port ships carrying goods of presumed enemy destination, ownership, or origin. It is not intended to confiscate such vessels or cargoes unless they would otherwise be liable to condemnation. The treatment of vessels and cargoes which have sailed before this date will not be affected.

No. 29. Resolution of Congress, March 4, 1915, safeguarding the neutrality of American waters.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this resolution, and during the existence of a war to which the United States is not a party and in order to prevent the neutrality of the United States from being violated by the use of its territory, its ports, or its territorial waters, as the base of operations for the armed forces of a belligerent, contrary to the obligations imposed by the law of nations, the treaties to which the United States is a party, or contrary to the statutes of the United States, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to direct the collectors of customs under the jurisdiction of the United States to withhold clearance from any vessel of American or foregin registry, or license, which he has reasonable cause to believe to be about to carry fuel, arms, ammunition, men, or supplies to any warship, or tender, or supply ships of a belligerent nation in violation of the obligations of the United States as a neutral nation.

In case any such vessel of American register or license shall depart or attempt to depart from the jurisdiction of the United States, without clearance, for any of the purposes, the owner or master, or person or persons having charge or command of such vessel, shall severally be liable to a fine of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 or to imprisonment not to exceed two years, or both; and in addition such vessels shall be forfeited to the United States.

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to employ such part of the land or naval forces of the United States as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution.

That the provisions of this resolution shall be deemed to extend to all lands and water, continental or insular, within the jurisdiction of the United States. (The New York Times, Mar. 4, 1915.)

No. 30. American note, March 5, 1915, inquiring how the restraint upon sea-borne commerce with Germany is to be effected. (See Nos. 28, 33, 34, and 35.)

(The Secretary of State to the American ambassador at London.)

In regard to the recent communications received from the British and French Governments concerning restraints upon commerce with Germany, please communicate with the British foreign office in the sense following:

The difficulty of determining action upon the British and French declarations of intended retaliation upon commerce with Germany lies in the nature of the proposed measures in their relation to commerce by neutrals.

While it appears that the intention is to interfere with and take into custody all ships both outgoing and incoming, trading with Germany, which is in effect a blockade of German ports, the rule of blockade, that a ship attempting to enter or leave a German port regardless of the character of its cargo may be condemned, is not asserted.

The language of the declaration is: "The British and French Governments will therefore hold themselves free to detain and take into port ships carrying goods of presumed enemy destination, ownership, or origin. It is not intended to confiscate such vessels or cargoes unless they would otherwise be liable to condemnation."

The first sentence claims a right pertaining only to a state of blockade. The last sentence proposes a treatment of ships and cargoes as if no blockade existed. The two together present a proposed course of action previously unknown to international law.

As a consequence neutrals have no standard by which to measure their rights or to avoid danger to their ships and cargoes. The paradoxical situation thus created should be changed and the declaring powers ought to assert whether they rely upon the rules governing a blockade or the rules applicable when no blockade exists.

The declaration presents other perplexities.

The last sentence quoted indicates that the rules of contraband are to be applied to cargoes detained. The rule covering noncontraband articles carried in neutral bottoms is that the cargoes shall be released and the ships allowed to proceed. This rule can not, under the first sentence quoted, be applied as to destination. What then is to be done with a cargo of noncontraband goods detained under the declaration? The same question may be asked as to conditional contraband cargoes.

The foregoing comments apply to cargoes destined for Germany. Cargoes coming out of German ports present another problem under the terms of the declaration. Under the rules governing enemy exports only goods owned by enemy subjects in enemy bottoms are subject to seizure and condemnation. Yet by the declaration it is purposed to seize and take into port all goods of enemy "ownership and origin." The word "origin" is particularly significant. The origin of goods destined to neutral territory on neutral ships is not and never has been a ground for forfeiture except in case a blockade is declared and maintained. What then would the seizure amount to in the present case except to delay the delivery of the goods? The declaration does not indicate what disposition would be made of such cargoes if owned by a neutral or if owned by an enemy subject. Would a different rule be applied according to ownership? If so, upon what principles of international law would it rest? And upon what rule if no blockade is declared and maintained could the cargo of a neutral ship sailing out of a German port be condemned? If it is not condemned, what other legal course is there but to release it?

While this Government is fully alive to the possibility that the methods of modern naval warfare, particularly in the use of the submarine for both defensive and offensive operations, may make the former means of maintaining a blockade a physical impossibility, it feels that it can be urged with great force that there should be also some limit to "the radius of activity," and especially so if this action by the belligerents can be construed to be a blockade. It would certainly create a serious state of affairs if, for example, an American vessel laden with a cargo of German origin should escape the British patrol in European waters only to be held up by a cruiser off New York and taken into Halifax.

No. 31. British proclamation, March 11, 1915, once more revising the list of contraband of war. (See No. 10.)

Whereas on the 23d day of December, 1914, we did issue our royal proclamation specifying the articles which it was our intention to treat as contraband during the continuance of hostilities or until we did give further public notice; and

Whereas it is expedient to make certain additions to the lists contained in the said proclamation:

Now, therefore, we do hereby declare, by and with the advice of our privy council, that during the continuance of the war or until we do give further public notice the following articles will be treated as absolute contraband in addition to those set out in our royal proclamation aforementioned:

Raw wool, wool tops, and noils, and woolen and worsted yarns.
Tin, chloride of tin, tin ore.
Castor oil.
Paraffin wax.
Copper iodide.
Lubricants.
Hides of cattle, buffaloes, and horses; skins of calves, pigs, sheep, goats, and deer; leather, undressed or dressed, suitable for saddlery, harness, military boots, or military clothing.
Ammonia and its salts, whether simple or compound; ammonia liquor, urea, aniline, and their compounds.

And we do hereby declare that the following articles will be treated as conditional contraband in addition to those set out in our royal proclamation aforementioned:

Tanning substances of all kinds (including extracts for use in tanning).

And we do hereby further declare that the terms "foodstuffs" and "feeding stuffs for animals" in the list of conditional contraband contained in our royal proclamation aforementioned shall be deemed to include oleaginous seeds, nuts, and kernels; animal and vegetable oils and fats (other than linseed oil) suitable for use in the manufacture of margarine; and cakes and meals made from oleaginous seeds, nuts, and kernels. No. 32. British memorandum, March 13, 1915, rejecting the American proposal of February 20 (No. 26).

On the 22d of February last I received a communication from your excellency of the identic note addressed to His Majesty's Government and to Germany, respecting an agreement on certain points as to the conduct of the war at sea. The reply of the German Government to this note has been published, and it is not understood from the reply that the German Government are prepared to abandon the practice of sinking British merchant vessels by submarines, and it is evident from their reply that they will not abandon the use of mines for offensive purposes on the high seas as contrasted with the use of mines for defensive purposes only within cannon range of their own harbors, as suggested by the Government of the United States. This being so, it might appear unnecessary for the British Government to make any further reply than to take note of the German answer. We desire, however, to take the opportunity of making a fuller statement of the whole position and of our feeling with regard to it. We recognize with sympathy the desire of the Government of the United States to see the European war conducted in accordance with the previously recognized rules of international law and the dictates of humanity. It is thus that the British forces have conducted the war, and we are not aware that these forces, either naval or military, can have laid to their charge any improper proceedings, either in the conduct of hostilities or in the treatment of prisoners or wounded. On the German side it has been very different.

1. The treatment of civilian inhabitants in Belgium and the north of France has been made public by the Belgian and French Governments and by those who have had experience of it at first hand. Modern history affords no precedent for the sufferings that have been inflicted on the defenseless and noncombatant population in the territory that has been in German military occupation. Even the food of the population was confiscated until in Belgium an international commission, largely influenced by American generosity and conducted under American auspices, came to the relief of the population and secured from the German Government a promise to spare what food was still left in the country, though the Germans still continue to make levies in money upon the defenseless population for the support of the German army.

2. We have from time to time received most terrible accounts of the barbarous treatment to which British officers and soldiers have been exposed after they have been taken prisoner while being conveyed to German prison camps; one or two instances have already been given to the United States Government founded upon authentic and first-hand evidence which is beyond doubt. Some evidence has been received of the hardships to which British prisoners of war are subjected in the prison camps, contrasting, we believe, most unfavorably with the treatment of German prisoners in this country. We have proposed, with the consent of the United States Government, that a commission of United States officers should be permitted in each country to inspect the treatment of prisoners of war. The United States Government have been unable to obtain any reply from the German Government to this proposal, and we remain in continuing anxiety and apprehension as to the treatment of British prisoners of war in Germany.

3. At the very outset of the war a German mine layer was discovered laying a mine field on the high seas. Further mine fields have been laid from time to time without warning, and, so far as we know, are still being laid on the high seas, and many neutral as well as British vessels have been sunk by them.

4. At various times during the war German submarines have stopped and sunk British merchant vessels, thus making the sinking of merchant vessels a general practice, though it was admitted previously, if at all, only as an exception, the general rule to which the British Government have adhered being that merchant vessels, if captured, must be taken before a prize court. In one case already quoted in a note to the United States Government a neutral vessel carrying foodstuffs to a unfortified town in Great Britain has been sunk. Another case is now reported in which a German armed cruiser has sunk an American vessel, the William P. Frye, carrying a cargo of wheat from Seattle to Queenstown. In both cases the cargoes were presumably destined for the civil population. Even the cargoes in such circumstances should not have been condemned without the decision of a prize court, much less should the vessels have been sunk. It is to be noted that both these cases occurred before the detention by the British authorities of the Wilhelmina and her cargo of foodstuffs which the German Government allege is the justification for their own action. The Germans have announced their intention of sinking British merchant vessels by torpedo without notice and without any provision for the safety of the crew. They have already carried out this intention in the case of neutral as well as of British vessels, and a number of noncombatant and innocent lives on British vessels, unarmed and defenseless, have been destroyed in this way.

5. Unfortified, open, and defenseless towns, such as Scarborough, Yarmouth, and Whitby, have been deliberately and wantonly bombarded by German ships of war, causing in some cases considerable loss of civilian life, including women and children.

6. German air craft have dropped bombs on the east coast of England where there were no military or strategic points to be attacked. On the other hand, I am aware of but two criticisms that have been made on British action in all these respects: (1) It is said that the British naval authorities also have laid some anchored mines on the high seas. They have done so, but the mines were anchored and so constructed that they would be harmless if they went adrift, and no mines whatever were laid by the British naval authorities till many weeks after the Germans had made a regular practice of laying mines on the high seas. (2) It is said that the British Government have departed from the view of international law which they had previously maintained that foodstuffs destined for the civil population should never be interfered with, this charge being founded on the submission to a prize court of the cargo of the Wilhelmina. The special considerations affecting this cargo have already been presented in a memorandum to the United States Government, and I need not repeat them here. Inasmuch as the stoppage of all foodstuffs is an admitted consequence of blockade, it is obvious that there can be no universal rule based on considerations of morality and humanity which is contrary to this practice. The right to stop foodstuffs destined for the civil population must therefore in any case be admitted if an effective "cordon" controlling intercourse with the enemy is drawn, announced, and maintained. Moreover, independently of rights arising from belligerent action in the nature of blockade, some other nations, differing from the opinion of the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, have held that to stop the food of the civil population is a natural and legitimate method of bringing pressure to bear on an enemy country, as it is upon the defense of a besieged town. It is also upheld on the authority of both Prince Bismarck and Count Caprivi, and therefore presumably is not repugnant to German morality. The following are the quotations from Prince Bismarck and Count Caprivi on this point. Prince Bismarck, in answering, in 1885, an application from the Kiel Chamber of Commerce for a statement of the view of the German Government on the question of the right to declare as contraband foodstuffs that were not intended for military forces, said: "I reply to the chamber of commerce that any disadvantage our commercial and carrying interests may suffer by the treatment of rice as contraband of war does not justify our opposing a measure which it has been though fit to take in carrying on a foreign war. Every war is a calamity which entails evil consequences, not only on the combatants but also on neutrals. These evils may easily be increased by the interference of a neutral power with the way in which a third carries on the war to the disadvantage of the subjects of the interfering power, and by this means German commerce might be weighted with far heavier losses than a transitory prohibition of the rice trade in Chinese waters. The measure in question has for its object the shortening of the war by increasing the difficulties of the enemy, and is a justifiable step in war if impartially enforced against all neutral ships." Count Caprivi, during a discussion in the German Reichstag on the 4th of March, 1892, on the subject of the importance of international protection for private property at sea, made the following statements: "A country may be dependent for her food or for her raw products upon her trade. In fact, it may be absolutely necessary to destroy the enemy's trade." * * * "The private introduction of provisions into Paris was prohibited during the siege, and in the same way a nation would be justified in preventing the import of food and raw produce." The Government of Great Britain have frankly declared, in concert with the Government of France, their intention to meet the German attempt to stop all supplies of every kind from leaving or entering British or French ports by themselves stopping supplies going to or Germany by sea. The difference between the two policies is, however, effectively controlling by cruiser "cordon" all passage to and from Germany by sea. To different between the two policies is, however, that while our object is the same as that of Germany, we propose to attain it without sacrificing neutral ships or noncombatant lives or inflicting upon neutrals the damage that must be entailed when a vessel and its cargo are sunk without notice, examination, or trial. I must emphasize again that this measure is a natural and necessary consequence of the unprecedented methods, repugnant to all law and morality, which have been described above, which Germany began to adopt at the very outset of the war, and the effects of which have been constantly accumulating. (Dip. Corr. 64–65.)

No. 33. British note, March 15, 1915, replying to the American inquiry about the restraint on sea-borne commerce with Germany (No. 30).

1. His Majesty's Government have had under careful consideration the inquiries which, under instructions from your Government, your excellency addressed to me on the 8th instant regarding the scope and mode of application of the measures, foreshadowed in the British and French declarations of the 1st of March, for restricting the trade of Germany. Your excellency explained and illustrated by reference to certain contingencies the difficulty of the United States Government in adopting a definite attitude toward these measures by reason of uncertainty regarding their bearing upon the commerce of neutral countries.

2. I can at once assure your excellency that subject to the paramount necessity of restricting German trade His Majesty's Government have made it their first aim to minimize inconvenience to neutral commerce. From the accompanying copy of the order in council, which is to be published to-day, you will observe that a wide discretion is afforded to the prize court in dealing with the trade of neutrals in such manner as may in the circumstances be deemed just and that full provision is made to facilitate claims by persons interested in any goods placed in the custody of the marshal of the prize court under the order. I apprehend that the perplexities to which your excellency refers will for the most part be dissipated by the perusal of this document and that it is only necessary for me to add certain explanatory observations.

3. The effect of the order in council is to confer certain powers upon the executive officers of His Majesty's Government. The extent to which those powers will be actually exercised and the degree of severity with which the measures of blockade authorized will be put into operation are matters which will depend on the administrative orders issued by the Government and the decisions of the authorities specially charged with the duty of dealing with individual ships and cargoes, according to the merits of each case. The United States Government may rest assured that the instructions to be issued by His Majesty's Government to the fleet and to the customs officials and executive committees concerned will impress upon them the duty of acting with the utmost dispatch consistent with the object in view and of showing in every case such consideration for neutrals as may be compatible with that object which is, succinctly stated, to establish a blockade to prevent vessels from carrying goods for or coming from Germany.

4. His Majesty's Government have felt most reluctant at the moment of initiating a policy of blockade to exact from neutral ships all the penalties attaching to a breach of blockade. In their desire to alleviate the burden which the existence of a state of war at sea must inevitably impose on neutral sea-borne commerce, they declare their intention to refrain altogether from the exercise of the right to confiscate ships or cargoes which belligerents have always claimed in respect of breaches of blockade. They restrict their claim to the stopping of cargoes destined for or coming from the enemy's territory.

5. As regards cotton, full particulars of the arrangements contemplated have already been explained. It will be admitted that every possible regard has been had to the legitimate interests of the American cotton trade.

6. Finally, in reply to the penultimate paragraph of your excellency's note, I have the honor to state that it is not intended to interfere with neutral vessels carrying enemy cargo of noncontraband nature outside European waters, including the Mediterranean. (Dip. Corr. 65.)

No. 34. British order in council, March 15, 1915, in restraint of sea-borne commerce with Germany.

Whereas the German Government has issued certain orders which, in violation of the usages of war, purport to declare the waters surrounding the United Kingdom a military area, in which all British and allied merchant vessels will be destroyed, irrespective of the safety of the lives of passengers and crew, and in which neutral shipping will be exposed to similar danger in view of the uncertainties of naval warfare; and

Whereas in a memorandum accompanying the said orders neutrals are warned against entrusting crews, passengers, or goods to British or allied ships; and

Whereas such attempts on the part of the enemy give to His Majesty an unquestionable right of retaliation; and

Whereas His Majesty has therefore decided to adopt further measures in order to prevent commodities of any kind from reaching or leaving Germany, though such measures will be enforced without risk to neutral ships or to neutral or noncombatant life and in strict observance of the dictates of humanity; and

Whereas the allies of His Majesty are associated with him in the steps now to be announced for restricting further the commerce of Germany;

His Majesty is therefore pleased, by and with the advice of his privy council, to order and it is hereby ordered as follows:

1. No merchant vessel (sic) which sailed from her port of departure after the 1st March, 1915, shall be allowed to proceed on her voyage to any German port.

Unless the vessel receives a pass enabling her to proceed to some neutral or allied port to be named in the pass, goods on board any such vessel must be discharged in a British port and placed in the custody of the marshal of the prize court. Goods so discharged, not being contraband of war, shall, if not requisitioned for the use of His Majesty, be restored by order of the court, upon such terms as the court may in the circumstances deem to be just, to the person entitled thereto.

2. No merchant vessel which sailed from any German port after the 1st March, 1915, shall be allowed to proceed on her voyage with any goods on board laden at such port.

All goods laden at such port must be discharged in a British or allied port. Goods so discharged in a British port shall be placed in the custody of the marshal of the prize court, and if not requisitioned for the use of His Majesty shall be detained or sold under the direction of the prize court. The proceeds of goods so sold shall be paid into court and dealt with in such manner as the court may in the circumstances deem to be just.

Provided, That no proceeds of the sale of such goods shall be paid out of court until the conclusion of peace, except on the application of the proper officer of the Crown, unless it be shown that the goods had become neutral property before the issue of this order.

Provided also, That nothing herein shall prevent the release of neutral property laden at such enemy port on the application of the proper officer of the Crown.

3. Every merchant vessel which sailed from her port of departure after the 1st of March, 1915, on her way to a port other than a German port, carrying goods with an enemy destination or which are enemy property, may be required to discharge such goods in a British or allied port. Any goods so discharged in a British port shall be placed in the custody of the marshal of the prize court, and, unless they are contraband of war, shall, if not requisitioned for the use of His Majesty, be restored by order of the court upon such terms as the court may in the circumstances deem to be just to the person entitled thereto.

Provided, That this article shall not apply in any case falling within articles 2 or 4 of this order.

4. Every merchant vessel which sailed from a port other than a German port after the 1st of March, 1915, having on board goods which are of enemy origin or are enemy property may be required to discharge such goods in a British or allied port. Goods so discharged in a British port shall be placed in the custody of the marshal of the prize court, and if not requisitioned for the use of His Majesty shall be detained or sold under the direction of the prize court. The proceeds of goods so sold shall be paid into court and dealt with in such manner as the court may in the circumstances deem to be just.

Provided that no proceeds of sale of such goods shall be paid out of court until the conclusion of peace, except on the application of the proper officer of the Crown, unless it be shown that the goods had become neutral property before the issue of this order.

Provided, also, that nothing herein shall prevent the release of neutral property of enemy origin on the application of the proper officer of the Crown.

5. Any person claiming to be interested in, or to have any claim in respect of, any goods (not being contraband of war) placed in the custody of the marshal of the prize court under this order, or in the proceeds of such goods, may forthwith issue a writ in the prize court against the proper officer of the Crown and apply for an order that the goods should be restored to him, or that their proceeds should be paid to him, or for such other order as the circumstances of the case may require.

The practice and procedure of the prize court shall, so far as applicable, be followed mutatis mutandis in any proceedings consequential upon this order.

6. A merchant vessel which has cleared for a neutral port from a British or allied port, or which has been allowed to pass, having an ostensible destination to a neutral port, and proceeds to an enemy port, shall, if captured on any subsequent voyage, be liable to condemnation.

7. Nothing in this order shall be deemed to affect the liability of any vessel or goods to capture or condemnation independently of this order.

8. Nothing in this order shall prevent the relaxation of the provisions of this order in respect of the merchant vessels of any country which declares that no commerce intended for or originating in Germany or belonging to Germany (sic) subjects shall enjoy the protection of its flag. (Dip. Corr., 66.)

No. 35. British order in council, March 23, 1915, authorizing the requisition of neutral ships. (Presented by the solicitor of the Crown in an argument in favor of requisitioning the cargo of foodstuffs on the Wilhelmina. See Nos. 20 and 25):

Whereas by section 3 of the prize courts act, 1894, His Majesty in council is authorized to make rules of court for regulating, subject to the provisions of the naval prize act, 1864, and the said act, the procedure and practice of prize courts within the meaning of the naval prize act, 1864, and the duties and conduct of the officers of the courts and of the practitioners therein, and for regulating the fees to be taken by the officers thereof, and the costs, charges, and expenses to be allowed to the practitioners therein; and

Whereas in pursuance of the prize courts act, 1894, certain rules were made by the order of His Majesty in Council, dated the 5th day of August, 1914, and amended by the orders of His Majesty in council of the 30th day of September, 1914, and the 28th day of November, 1914, respectively, which said rules and amended rules were by the said orders in council directed to take effect provisionally in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of the rules publication act, 1893, from the dates of the said orders in council, respectively; and

Whereas the provisions of section 1 of the rules publication act, 1893, were duly complied with in respect of the said rules and amended rules, and the same were finally made by the orders of His Majesty in council, dated, respectively, the 17th day of September, 1914, the 28th day of November, 1914, and the 3d day of February, 1915; and

Whereas it is expedient that the said rules and amended rules should be further amended; and

Whereas on account of urgency this order should come into immediate operation:

Now, therefore, His Majesty, by virtue of the powers in this behalf by the said act or otherwise in him vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of his privy council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:

1. That in order 9 (discovery, inspection, and admission of documents and facts) of the said rules:

In rule 1, the words "upon filing an affidavit" shall be omitted.

In rule 1, instead of the words "any other party" there shall be substituted the words "any party other than the proper officer of the Crown."

2. That in order 11 (sale, appraisement, safe custody, and insnection of prize) of the said rules, in rule 1, the following words shall be omitted: "On account of the condition of a ship, or on application of a claimant, and on or after condemnation."

3. That in order 15 (evidence and hearing) of the said rules the following rule shall be added:

"21. Nothwithstanding anything contained in these rules the proper officer of the Crown may apply to the judge for leave to administer interrogatories for the examination of any person whether a party to the cause or not."

4. That order 29 (requisition by Admiralty) of the said rules, as amended by His Majesty's order in council dated the 28th day of November, 1914, shall be, and the same is hereby, revoked, and in lieu thereof the following order shall have effect:

"ORDER 29.—REQUISITION.

"1. Where it is made to appear to the judge on the application of the proper officer of the Crown that it is desired to requisition on behalf of His Majesty a ship in respect of which no final decree of condemnation has been made, he shall order that the ship shall be appraised, and that upon an undertaking being given in accordance with rule 5 of this order, the ship shall be released and delivered to the Crown.

"2. Where a decree for the detention of a ship has been made in accordance with order 28, the proper officer of the Crown may file a notice (Appendix A, Form No. 55) that the Crown desires to requisition the same, and thereupon a commission (Appendix A, Form No. 56) to the marshal directing him to appraise the ship shall issue. Upon an undertaking being given in accordance with rule 5 of this order the ship shall be released and delivered to the Crown. Service of this notice shall not be required before filing, but copies thereof shall be served upon the parties by the proper officer of the Crown as soon thereafter as possible.

"3. Where in any case of requisition under this order it is made to appear to the judge on behalf of the Crown that the ship is required for the service of His Majesty forthwith, the judge may order the same to be forthwith released and delivered to the Crown without appraisement.

"4. In any case where a ship has been requisitioned under the provisions of this order, and whether or not an appraisement has been made, the court may, on the application of any party, fix the amount to be paid by the Crown in respect of the value of the ship.

"5. In every case of requisition under this order an undertaking in writing shall be filed by the proper officer of the Crown for payment into court on behalf of the Crown of the appraised value of the ship, or of the amount fixed under rule 4 of this order, as the case may be, at such time or times as the court shall declare by order that the same or any part thereof is required for the purpose of payment out of court.

"6. Where in any case of requisition under this order it is made to appear to the judge on behalf of the Crown that the Crown desires to requisition the ship temporarily, the court may, in lieu of an order of release, make an order for the temporary delivery of the ship to the Crown, and subject as aforesaid the provisions of this order shall apply to such a requisition; provided that, in the event of the return of the ship to the custody of the court, the court may make such order as it thinks fit for the release of the undertaking given on behalf of the Crown or the reduction of the amount undertaken to be paid thereby, as the case may be; and provided also that, where the ship so requisitioned is subject to the provisions of order 28, rule 1, relating to detention, the amount for which the Crown shall be considered liable in respect of such requisition shall be the amount of the damage, if any, which the ship has suffered by reason of such temporary delivery as aforesaid.

"7. The proceedings in respect of a ship requisitioned under this order shall continue notwithstanding the requisition.

"8. In any case of requisition of a ship in respect of which no cause has been instituted, any person interested in such ship may, without issuing a writ, provided he does not intend to make a claim for restitution or damages, apply by summons for an order that the amount to be paid in respect of such ship be fixed by the court, and the judge may, on the hearing of such summons, order the ship to be appraised or to be valued, or give such other directions for fixing the amount as he may think fit."

5. That in form 4 in appendix A to the said rules there shall be omitted the words "commander of our ship of war" and the words "taken and seized as prize by our said ship of war."

6. This order shall take effect provisionally in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of the rules-publication act, 1893, from the date hereof. (Dip. Corr., 72–73.)

No. 36. American note, March 30, 1915, regarding British violation of neutral rights. (See No. 54; also No. 61.)

(The Secretary of State to the American ambassador at London.)

You are instructed to deliver the following to His Majesty's Government in reply to your Nos. 1795 and 1798 of March 15:

The Government of the United States has given careful consideration to the subjects treated in the British notes of March 13 and March 15, and to the British order in council of the latter date.

These communications contain matters of grave importance to neutral nations. They appear to menace their rights of trade and intercourse not only with belligerents but also with one another. They call for frank comment in order that misunderstandings may be avoided. The Government of the United States deems it its duty, therefore, speaking in the sincerest spirit of friendship, to make its own view and position with regard to them unmistakably clear.

The order in council of the 15th of March would constitute, were its provisions to be actually carried into effect as they stand, a practical assertion of unlimited belligerent rights over neutral commerce within the whole European area, and an almost unqualified denial of the sovereign rights of the nations now at peace.

This Government takes it for granted that there can be no question what those rights are. A nation's sovereignty over its own ships and citizens under its own flag on the high seas in time of peace is, of course, unlimited; and that sovereignty suffers no diminution in time of war, except in so far as the practice and consent of civilized nations has limited it by the recognition of certain now clearly determined rights, which it is conceded may be exercised by nations which are at war.

A belligerent nation has been conceded the right of visit and search, and the right of capture and condemnation if, upon examination, a neutral vessel is found to be engaged in unneutral service or to be carrying contraband of war intended for the enemy's government or armed forces. It has been conceded the right to establish and maintain a blockade of an enemy's ports and coasts and to capture and condemn any vessel taken in trying to break the blockade. It is even conceded the right to detain and take to its own ports for judicial examination all vessels which it suspects for substantial reasons to be engaged in unneutral or contraband service, and to condemn them if the suspicion is sustained. But such rights, long clearly defined both in doctrine and practice, have hitherto been held to be the only permissible exceptions to the principle of universal equality of sovereignty on the high seas as between belligerents and nations not engaged in war.

It is confidently assumed that His Majesty's Government will not deny that it is a rule sanctioned by general practice that, even though a blockade should exist and the doctrine of contraband as to unblockaded territory be rigidly enforced, innocent shipments may be freely transported to and from the United States through neutral countries to belligerent territory without being subject to the penalties of contraband traffic or breach of blockade, much less to detention, requisition, or confiscation.

Moreover the rules of the Declaration of Paris of 1856—among them that free ships make free goods—will hardly at this day be disputed by the signatories of that solemn agreement.

His Majesty's Government, like the Government of the United States, have often and explicitly held that these rights represent the best usage of warfare in the dealings of belligerents with neutrals at sea. In this connection I desire to direct attention to the opinion of the Chief Justice of the United States in the case of the Peterhof, which arose out of the Civil War, and to the fact that that opinion was unanimously sustained in the award of the arbitration commission of 1871, to which the case was presented at the request of Great Britain. From that time to the declaration of London of 1909, adopted with modifications by the order in council of the 23d of October last, these rights have not been seriously questioned by the British Government. And no claim on the part of Great Britain of any justification for interfering with these clear rights of the United States and its citizens as neutrals could be admitted. To admit it would be to assume an attitude of unneutrality toward the present enemies of Great Britain which would be obviously inconsistent with the solemn obligations of this Government in the present circumstances; and for Great Britain to make such a claim would be for her to abandon and set at naught the principles for which she has consistently and earnestly contended in other times and circumstances.

The note of His Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs which accompanies the order in council, and which bears the same date, notifies the Government of the United States of the establishment of a blockade which is, if defined by the terms of the order in council, to include all the coasts and ports of Germany and every port of possible access to enemy territory. But the novel and quite unprecedented feature of that blockade, if we are to assume it to be properly so defined, is that it embraces many neutral ports and coasts, bars access to them, and subjects all neutral ships seeking to approach them to the same suspicion that would attach to them were they bound for the ports of the enemies of Great Britain, and to unusual risks and penalties.

It is manifest that such limitations, risks, and liabilities placed upon the ships of a neutral power on the high seas, beyond the right of visit and search and the right to prevent the shipment of contraband already referred to, are a distinct invasion of the sovereign rights of the nation whose ships, trade, or commerce is interfered with.

The Government of the United States is, of course, not oblivious to the great changes which have occurred in the conditions and means of naval warfare since the rules hitherto governing legal blockade were formulated. It might be ready to admit that the old form of "close" blockade with its cordon of ships in the immediate offing of the blockaded ports is no longer practicable in face of an enemy possessing the means and opportunity to make an effective defense by the use of submarines, mines, and air craft; but it can hardly be maintained that, whatever form of effective blockade may be made use of, it is impossible to conform at least to the spirit and principles of the established rules of war. If the necessities of the case should seem to render it imperative that the cordon of blockading vessels be extended across the approaches to any neighboring neutral port or country, it would seem clear that it would still be easily practicable to comply with the well-recognized and reasonable prohibition of international law against the blockading of neutral ports by according free admission and exit to all lawful traffic with neutral ports through the blockading cordon. This traffic would of course include all outward-bound traffic from the neutral country and all inward-bound traffic to the neutral country except contraband in transit to the enemy. Such procedure need not conflict in any respect with the rights of the belligerent maintaining the blockade since the right would remain with the blockading vessels to visit and search all ships either entering or leaving the neutral territory which they were in fact but not of right investing.

The Government of the United States notes that in the order in council His Majesty's Government give as their reason for entering upon a course of action, which they are aware is without precedent in modern warfare, the necessity they conceive themselves to have been placed under to retaliate upon their enemies for measures of a similar nature which the latter have announced in their intention to adopt and which they have to some extent adopted; but the Government of the United States, recalling the principles upon which His Majesty's Government have hitherto been scrupulous to act, interprets this as merely a reason for certain extraordinary activities on the part of His Majesty's naval forces and not as an excuse for or prelude to any unlawful action. If the course pursued by the present enemies of Great Britain should prove to be in fact tainted by illegality and disregard of the principles of war sanctioned by enlightened nation, it can not be supposed, and this Government does not for a moment suppose, that His Majesty's Government would wish the same taint to attach to their own actions or would cite such illegal acts as in any sense or degree a justification for similar practices on their part in so far as they affect neutral rights.

It is thus that the Government of the United States interprets the language of the note of His Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs which accompanies the copy of the order in council which was handed to the ambassador of the United States near the Government in London and by him transmitted to Washington.

This Government notes with gratification that "wide discretion is afforded to the prize court in dealing with the trade of neutrals in such manner as may in the circumstances be deemed just, and that full provision is made to facilitate claims by persons interested in any goods placed in the custody of the marshal of the prize court under the order"; that "the effect of the order in council is to confer certain powers upon the executive officers of His Majesty's Government"; and that "the extent to which these powers will be actually exercised and the degree of severity with which the measures of blockade authorized will be put into operation are matters which will depend on the administrative orders issued by the Government and the decisions of the authorities especially charged with the duty of dealing with individual ships and cargoes according to the merits of each case." This Government further notes with equal satisfaction the declaration of the British Government that "the instructions to be issued by His Majesty's Government to the fleet and to the customs officials and executive committees concerned will impress upon them the duty of acting with the usual dispatch consistent with the object in view, and of showing in every case such consideration for neutrals as may be compatible with that object, which is, succinctly stated, to establish a blockade to prevent vessels from carrying goods for or coming from Germany."

In view of these assurances formally given to this Government it is confidently expected that the extensive powers conferred by the order in council on the executive officers of the Crown will be restricted by "orders issued by the Government" directing the exercise of their discretionary powers in such a manner as to modify in practical application those provisions of the order in council which, if strictly enforced, would violate neutral rights and interrupt legitimate trade. Relying on the faithful performance of these voluntary assurances by His Majesty's Government the United States takes it for granted that the approach of American merchantmen to neutral ports situated upon the long line of coast affected by the order in council will not be interfered with when it is known that they do not carry goods which are contraband of war or goods destined to or proceeding from ports within the belligerent territory affected.

The Government of the United States assumes with the greater confidence that His Majesty's Government will thus adjust their practice to the recognized rules of international law, because it is manifest that the British Government have adopted an extraordinary method of "stopping cargoes destined for or coming from the enemy's territory," which, owing to the existence of unusual conditions in modern warfare at sea, it will be difficult to restrict to the limits which have been heretofore required by the law of nations. Though the area of operations is confined to "European waters, including the Mediterranean," so great an area of the high seas is covered and the cordon of ships is so distant from the territory affected that neutral vessels must necessarily pass through the blockading force in order to reach important neutral ports which Great Britain as a belligerent has not the legal right to blockade and which, therefore, it is presumed she has no intention of claiming to blockade. The Scandinavian and Danish ports, for example, are open to American trade. They are also free, so far as the actual enforcement of the order in council is concerned, to carry on trade with German Baltic ports, although it is an essential element of blockade that it bear with equal severity upon all neutrals.

This Government, therefore, infers that the commanders of His Majesty's ships of war engaged in maintaining the so-called blockade will be instructed to avoid an enforcement of the proposed measures of nonintercourse in such a way as to impose restrictions upon neutral trade more burdensome than those which have been regarded as inevitable when the ports of a belligerent are actually blockaded by the ships of its enemy.

The possibilities of serious interruption of American trade under the order in council are so many and the methods proposed are so unusual and seem liable to constitute so great an impediment and embarrassment to neutral commerce that the Government of the United States, if the order in council is strictly enforced, apprehends many interferences with its legitimate trade which will impose upon His Majesty's Government heavy responsibilities for acts of the British authorities clearly subversive of the rights of neutral nations on the high seas. It is therefore expected that His Majesty's Government, having considered these possibilities, will take the steps necessary to avoid them, and, in the event that they should unhappily occur, will be prepared to make full reparation for every act which under the rules of international law constitutes a violation of neutral rights.

As stated in its communication of October 22, 1914, "this Government will insist that the rights and duties of the United States and its citizens in the present war be defined by the existing rules of international law and the treaties of the United States, irrespective of the provisions of the declaration of London, and that this Government reserves to itself the right to enter a protest or demand in each case in which those rights and duties so defined are violated or their free exercise interfered with by the authorities of the British Government.

In conclusion, you will reiterate to His Majesty's Government that this statement of the views of the Government of the United States is made in the most friendly spirit, and in accordance with the uniform candor which has characterized the relations of the two Governments in the past, and which has been in large measure the foundation of the peace and amity existing between the two nations without interruption for a century.

No. 37. First American note, March 31, 1915, in regard to the William P. Frye. (See 39, 43, 52, 55, and 62.)

You are instructed to present the following note to the German Foreign Office:

Under instructions from my Government I have the honor to present a claim for $228,059,54, with interest from January 28, 1915, against the German Government on behalf of the owners and captain of the American sailing vessel William P. Frye for damages suffered by them on account of the destruction of that vessel on the high seas by the German armed cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich, on January 28, 1915.

The facts upon which this claim arises and by reason of which the German Government is held responsible by the Government of the United States for the attendant loss and damages are briefly as follows:

The William P. Frye, a steel sailing vessel of 3,374 tons gross tonnage, owned by American citizens and sailing under the United States flag and register, cleared from Seattle, Wash., November 4, 1914, under charter to M. H. Houser, of Portland, Oreg., bound for Queenstown, Falmouth, or Plymouth for orders, with a cargo consisting solely of 180,950 bushels of wheat owned by the aforesaid Houser and consigned "unto order or to its assigns," all of which appears from the ship's papers which were taken from the vessel at the time of her destruction by the commander of the German cruiser.

On January 27, 1915, the Prinz Eitel Friedrich encountered the Frye on the high seas, compelled her to stop, and sent on board an armed boarding party, who took possession. After an examination of the ship's papers the commander of the cruiser directed that the cargo be thrown overboard, but subsequently decided to destroy the vessel, and on the following morning, by his order, the Frye was sunk.

The claim of the owners and captain consists of the following items:

Value of ship, equipment, and outfit	$150,000.00
Actual freight, as per freight list, 5,034 1,000/2,240 tons, at 32s. 6d.—£8,180 19s. 6d.; at $4.86	39,759.54
Traveling and other expenses of Capt. Kiehne and Arthur Sewall & Co., agents of ship, in connection with making affidavits, preparing and filing claim	500.00
Personal effects of Capt. H. H. Kiehne	300.00
Damages covering loss due to deprivation of use of ship	37,500.00
Total	228,059.54

By direction of my government, I have the honor to request that full reparation be made by the German Government for the destruction of the William P. Frye by the German cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich.

(Dip. Corr. 87.)

No. 38. German memorandum, April 4, 1915, concerning the British restraint of sea-borne commerce with Germany and the American exportation of war material. (See 41.)

(The German ambassador to the Secretary of State.)

The various British orders in council have one-sidedly modified the generally recognized principles of international law in a way which arbitrarily stops the commerce of neutral nations with Germany. Even before the last British order in council, the shipment of conditional contraband, especially food supplies, to Germany was practically impossible. Prior to the protest sent by the American to the British Government on December 28 last, such a shipment did not actually take place in a single case. Even after this protest the Imperial Embassy knows of only a single case in which an American shipper has ventured to make such a shipment for the purpose of legitimate sale to Germany. Both ship and cargo were immediately seized by the English and are being held in an English port under the pretext of an order of the German federal council (Bundesrat) regarding the grain trade, although this resolution of the federal council relates exclusively to grain and flour, and not to other foodstuffs, besides making an express exception with respect to imported foodstuffs, and although the German Government gave the American Government an assurance, and proposed a special organization whereby the exclusive consumption by the civilian population is absolutely guaranteed.

Under the circumstances, the seizure of the American ship was inadmissible according to recognized principles of international law. Nevertheless the United States Government has not to date secured the release of the ship and cargo, and has not, after a duration of the war of eight months, succeeded in protecting its lawful trade with Germany.

Such a long delay, especially in matters of food supply, is equivalent to an entire denial.

The Imperial Embassy must therefore assume that the United States Government acquiesces in the violations of international law by Great Britain.

Then, there is also the attitude of the United States in the question of the exportation of arms. The Imperial Government feels sure that the United States Government will agree that in questions of neutrality it is necessary to take into consideration not only the formal aspect of the case, but also the spirit in which the neutrality is carried out.

The situation in the present war differs from that of any previous war. Therefore any reference to arms furnished by Germany in former wars is not justified, for then it was not a question whether war material should be supplied to the belligerents, but who should supply it in competition with other nations. In the present war all nations having a war-material industry worth mentioning are either involved in the war themselves or are engaged in perfecting their own armaments, and have therefore laid an embargo against the exportation of war material. The United States is, accordingly, the only neutral country in a position to furnish war materials. The conception of neutrality is thereby given a new purport, independently of the formal question of hitherto existing law. In contradiction thereto, the United States is building up a powerful arms industry in the broadest sense, the existing plants not only being worked but enlarged by all available means, and new ones built. The international conventions for the protection of the rights of neutral nations doubtless sprang from the necessity of protecting the existing industries of neutral nations as far as possible from injury in their business. But it can in no event be in accordance with the spirit of true neutrality if, under the protection of such international stipulations, an entirely new industry is created in a neutral state, such as is the development of the arms industry in the United States, the business whereof, under the present conditions, can benefit only the belligerent powers.

This industry is actually delivering goods only to the enemies of Germany. The theoretical willingness to supply Germany also if shipments thither were possible, does not alter the case. If it is the will of the American people that there shall be a true neutrality, the United States will find means of preventing this one-sided supply of arms or at least of utilizing it to protect legitimate trade with Germany, especially that in foodstuffs. This view of neutrality should all the more appeal to the United States Government, because the latter enacted a similar policy toward Mexico. On February 4, 1914, President Wilson, according to a statement of a Representative in Congress in the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of December 30, 1914, upon the lifting of the embargo on arms to Mexico, declared that "we should stand for genuine neutrality, considering the surrounding facts of the case * * *." He then held that "in that case, because Carranza had no ports, while Huerta had them and was able to import these materials, that it was our duty as a nation to treat Carranza and Huerta upon an equality if we wished to observe the true spirit of neutrality, as compared with a mere paper neutrality."

If this view were applied to the present case, it would lead to an embargo on the exportation of arms. (Dip. Corr., 73–74.)

No. 39. First German note, April 5, 1915, in regard to the William P. Frye. (See No. 37.)

The undersigned has the honor to make reply to the note of his excellency Mr. James W. Gerard, ambassador, the United States of America, dated the 3d instant, foreign office No. 2892, relative to claims for damages for the sinking of the American merchant vessel William P. Frye by the German auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich.

According to the reports which have reached the German Government, the commander of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich stopped the William

P. Frye on the high seas January 27, 1915, and searched her. He found on board a cargo of wheat consigned to Queenstown, Falmouth, or Plymouth, to order. After he had first tried to remove the cargo from the William P. Frye he took the ship's papers and her crew on board and sank ship.

It results from these facts that the German commander acted quite in accordance with the principles of international law as laid down in the declaration of London and the German prize ordinance. The ports of Queenstown, Falmouth, and Plymouth, whither the ship visited was bound, are strongly fortified English coast places, which, moreover, serve as bases for the British naval forces. The cargo of wheat being food or foodstuffs, was conditional contraband within the meaning of article 24, No. 1, of the Declaration of London, and article 23, No. 1, of the German prize ordinance, and was therefore to be considered as destined for the armed forces of the enemy, pursuant to articles 33 and 34 of the Declaration of London and articles 32 and 33 of the German prize ordinance, and to be treated as contraband pending proof of the contrary. This proof was certainly not capable of being adduced at the time of the visiting of the vessel, since the cargo papers read "to order." This, however, furnished the conditions under which, pursuant to article 49 of the Declaration of London and article 113 of the German prize ordinance, the sinking of the ship was permissible, since it was not possible for the auxiliary cruiser to take the prize into a German port without involving danger to its own security or the success of its operations. The duties devolving upon the cruiser before destruction of the ship, pursuant to article 50 of the Declaration of London and article 116 of the German prize ordinance, were fulfilled by the cruiser in that it took on board all the persons found on the sailing vessel as well as the ship's papers.

The legality of the measures taken by the German commander is, furthermore, subject to examination by the German prize court, pursuant to article 51 of the Declaration of London and section 1, No. 2, of the German Code of Prize Procedure. These prize proceedings will be instituted before the prize court at Hamburg as soon as the ship's papers are received, and will comprise the settlement of questions whether the destruction of the cargo and the ship was necessary within the meaning of article 49 of the Declaration of London; whether the property sunk was liable to capture; and whether, or to what extent, indemnity is to be awarded the owners. In the trial the owners of ship and cargo would be at liberty, pursuant to article 34, paragraph 3, of the Declaration of London, to adduce proof that the cargo of wheat had an innocent destination and did not, therefore, have the character of contraband. If such proof is not adduced, the German Government would not be liable for any compensation whatever, according to the general principles of international law.

However, the legal situation is somewhat different in the light of the special stipulations applicable to the relations between Germany and the United States, since article 13 of the Prussian-American treaty of friendship and commerce of July 11, 1799, taken in connection with article 12 of the Prussian-American treaty of commerce and navigation of May 1, 1828, provides that contraband belonging to the subjects or citizens of either party can not be confiscated by the other in any case, but only detained or used in consideration of payment of the full value of the same. On the ground of this treaty stipulation, which is, as a matter of course, binding on the German prize court, the American owners of ship and cargo would receive compensation even if the court should declare the cargo of wheat to be contraband. Nevertheless, the approaching prize proceedings are not rendered superfluous, since the competent prize court must examine into the legality of the capture and destruction and also pronounce upon the standing of the claimants and the amount of indemnity.

The undersigned begs to suggest that the ambassador bring the above to the knowledge of his Government, and avails himself, etc.

JAGOW.

(Dip. Corr. 87–88.)

No. 40. British memorandum, April 8, 1915, in reference to the Wilhelmina. (See Nos. 20, 25, and 54.)

(The prime minister to the American ambassador.)

His Majesty's Government share the desire of the United States Government for an immediate settlement of the case of the Wilhelmina. This American ship, laden with foodstuffs, left New York for Hamburg on January 22. She called at Falmouth of her own accord on February 9, and her cargo was detained as prize on February 11. The writ instituting prize-court proceedings was issued on February 27, and claimed that the cargo should be condemned as contraband of war. No proceedings were taken or even threatened against the ship herself, and in the ordinary course the cargo would have been unloaded when seized, so that the ship would be free to leave. The owners of the cargo, however, have throughout objected to the discharge of the cargo, and it is because of this objection that the ship is still at Falmouth with the cargo on board.

His Majesty's Government have formally undertaken that, even should the condemnation of the cargo as contraband be secured in the prize court, they would none the less compensate the owners for any loss sustained in consequence of the ship having been stopped and proceedings taken against the cargo.

It was understood at the time that the proceedings in the prize court would be in the nature of a test case, the decision in which would govern the treatment of any subsequent shipments of food supplies to Germany in similar circumstances. Since then the situation has, however, materially changed by the issue of the order in council of March 11, 1915, and the measures taken thereunder which prevent further supplies being sent from America to Germany, whether contraband or not.

In these circumstances there is no longer an object in continuing the judicial proceedings in the case of the Wilhelmina, for it can no longer serve as a test case, and it is really agreed that the owners of the cargo, even if proved to have no claim, are to be treated as if their claim was good. Nothing therefore remains but to settle the claim on proper and just conditions, and this would, in the opinion of His Majesty's Government, be secured most expeditiously and with the least inconvenience to all parties by an agreement between the Crown and the claimants for the disposal of the whole matter. His Majesty's Government accordingly propose that such an agreement be arrived at on the following terms: "His Majesty's Government having undertaken to compensate the claimants by paying for the cargo seized on the basis of the loss of the profit the claimants would have made if the ship had proceeded in due course to Hamburg, and by indemnifying them for the delay caused to the ship so far as this delay has been due to the action of the British authorities, all proceedings in the prize court shall be stayed on the understanding that His Majesty's Government buy the cargo from the claimants on the above terms. The cargo shall be discharged and delivered to the proper officer of the Crown forthwith. The sum to be paid shall be assessed by a single America and his Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, who shall certify the total amount after making such inquiries as he may think fit, but without formal hearing or arbitration." His Majesty's Government would be grateful if the United States ambassador would inform the claimants of the above proposal at his early convenience and obtain their acceptance.

No. 41. American note, April 21, 1915, replying to No. 38.

EXCELLENCY: I have given thoughtful consideration to your excellency's note of the 4th of April, 1915, inclosing a memorandum of the same date, in which your excellency discusses the action of this Government with regard to trade between the United States and Germany and the attitude of this Government with regard to the exportation of arms from the United States to the nations now at war with Germany.

I must admit that I am somewhat at a loss how to interpret your excellency's treatment of these matters. There are many circumstances connected with these important subjects to which I would have expected your excellency to advert, but of which you make no mention, and there are other circumstances to which you do refer which I would have supposed to be hardly appropriate for discussion between the Government of the United States and the Government of Germany.

I shall take the liberty, therefore, of regarding your excellency's references to the course pursued by the Government of the United States with regard to interferences with trade from this country, such as the Government of Great Britain has attempted, as intended merely to illustrate more fully the situation to which you desire to call our attention and not as an invitation to discuss that course. Your excellency's long experience in international affairs will have suggested to you that the relations of the two Governments with one another can not wisely be made a subject of discussion with a third Government, which can not be fully informed as to the facts and which can not be fully cognizant of the reasons for the course pursued. I believe, however, that I am justified in assuming that what you desire to call forth is a frank statement of the position of this Government in regard to its obligations as a neutral power. The general attitude and course of policy of this Government in the maintenance of its neutrality I am particularly anxious that your excellency should see in their true light. I had hoped that this Government's position in these respects had been made abundantly clear, but I am of course perfectly willing to state it again. This seems to me the more necessary and desirable because, I regret to say, the language which your excellency employs in your memorandum is susceptible of being construed as impugning the good faith of the United States in the performance of its duties as a neutral. I take it for granted that no such implication was intended, but it is so evident that your excellency is laboring under certain false impressions that I can not be too explicit in setting forth the facts as they are, when fully reviewed and comprehended.

In the first place, this Government has at no time and in no manner yielded any one of its rights as a neutral to any of the present belligerents. It has acknowledged, as a matter of course, the right of visit and search and the right to apply the rules of contraband of war to articles of commerce. It has, indeed, insisted upon the use of visit and search as an absolutely necessary safeguard against mistaking neutral vessels for vessels owned by an enemy and against mistaking legal cargoes for illegal. It has admitted also the right of blockade if actually exercised and effectively maintained. These are merely the well-known limitations which war places upon neutral commerce on the high seas. But nothing beyond these has it conceded. I call your excellency's attention to this, notwithstanding it is already known to all the world as a consequence of the publication of our correspondence in regard to these matters with several of the belligerent nations, because I can not assume that you have official cognizance of it.

In the second place, this Government attempted to secure from the German and British Governments mutual concessions with regard to the measures those Governments respectively adopted for the interruption of trade on the high seas. This it did, not of right, but merely as exercising the privileges of a sincere friend of both parties and as indicating its impartial good will. The attempt was unsuccessful; but I regret that your excellency did not deem it worthy of mention in modification of the impressions you expressed. We had hoped that this act on our part had shown our spirit in these times of distressing war, as our diplomatic correspondence had shown our steadfast refusal to acknowledge the right of any belligerent to alter the accepted rules of war at sea in so far as they affect the rights and interests of neutrals.

In the third place, I note with sincere regret that, in discussing the sale and exportation of arms by citizens of the United States to the enemies of Germany, your excellency seems to be under the impression that it was within the choice of the Government of the United States, notwithstanding its professed neutrality and its diligent efforts to maintain it in other particulars, to inhibit this trade, and that its failure to do so manifested an unfair attitude toward Germany. This Government holds, as I believe your excellency is aware, and as it is constrained to hold in view of the present indisputable doctrines of accepted international law, that any change in its own laws of neutrality during the progress of a war which would affect unequally the relations of the United States with the nations at war would be an unjustifiable departure from the principle of strict neutrality by which it has consistently sought to direct its actions, and I respectfully submit that none of the circumstances urged in your excellency's memorandum alters the principle involved. The placing of an embargo on the trade in arms at the present time would constitute such a change and be a direct violation of the neutrality of the United States. It will, I feel assured, be clear to your excellency that, holding this view and considering itself in honor bound by it, it is out of the question for this Government to consider such a course.

I hope that your excellency will realize the spirit in which I am drafting this reply. The friendship between the people of the United States and the people of Germany is so warm and of such long standing, the ties which bind them to one another in amity are so many and so strong, that this Government feels under a special compulsion to speak with perfect frankness when any occasion arises which seems likely to create any misunderstanding, however slight or temporary, between those who represent the Governments of the two countries. It will be a matter of gratification to me if I have removed from your excellency's mind any misapprehension you may have been under regarding either the policy or the spirit and purposes of the Government of the United States. Its neutrality is founded upon the firm basis of conscience and good will.

Accept, etc.,

W. J. BRYAN.

No. 42. Announcement of the German Embassy, April 22, 1915, warning against embarkation on vessels belonging to Great Britain or its allies.

NOTICE.

Travelers intending to embark on the Atlantic voyage are reminded that a state of war exists between Germany and her allies and Great Britain and her allies; that the zone of war includes the waters adjacent the British Isles; that, in accordance with formal notice given by the Imperial German Government, vessels flying the flag of Great Britain, or of any of her allies, are liable to destruction in those waters, and that travelers sailing in the war zone on ships of Great Britain or her allies do so at their own risk.

IMPERIAL GERMAN EMBASSY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22, 1915.

(The New York Times, May 8, 1915.)

No. 43. Second American note, April 28, 1915, in regard to the William P. Frye. (See Nos. 37 and 39.)

You are instructed to present the following note to the German Foreign Office:

In reply to your excellency's note of the 5th instant, which the Government of the United States understands admits the liability of the Imperial German Government for the damages resulting from the sinking of the American sailing vessel William P. Frye by the German auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich on January 28 last, I have the honor to say, by direction of my Government, that while the promptness with which the Imperial German Government has admitted its liability is highly appreciated, my Government feels that it would be inappropriate in the circumstances of this case, and would involve unnecessary delay to adopt the suggestion in your note that the legality of the capture and destruction, the standing of the claimants, and the amount of indemnity should be submitted to a prize court.

Unquestionably the destruction of this vessel was a violation of the obligations imposed upon the Imperial German Government under existing treaty stipulations between the United States and Prussia, and the United States Government, by virtue of its treaty rights, has presented to the Imperial German Government a claim for indemnity on account of the resulting damages suffered by American citizens. The liability of the Imperial German Government and the standing of the claimants as American citizens and the amount of indemnity are all questions which lend themselves to diplomatic negotiation between the two Governments, and happily the question of liability has already been settled in that way. The status of the claimants and the amount of the indemnity are the only questions remaining to be settled, and it is appropriate that they should be dealt with in the same way.

The Government of the United States fully understands that, as stated in your excellency's note, the German Government is liable under the treaty provisions above mentioned for the damages arising from the destruction of the cargo as well as from the destruction of the vessel. But it will be observed that the claim under discussion does not include damages for the destruction of the cargo, and the question of the value of the cargo therefore is not involved in the present discussion.

The Government of the United States recognizes that the German Government will wish to be satisfied as to the American ownership of the vessel, and the amount of the damages sustained in consequence of her destruction.

These matters are readily ascertainable and if the German Government desires any further evidence in substantiation of the claim on these points in addition to that furnished by the ship's papers, which are already in the possession of the German Government, any additional evidence found necessary will be produced. In that case, however, inasmuch as any evidence which the German Government may wish to have produced is more accessible and can more conveniently be examined in the United States than elsewhere, on account of the presence there of the owners and captain of the William P. Frye and their documentary records, and other possible witnesses, the Government of the United States ventures to suggest the advisability of transferring the negotiations for the settlement of these points to the Imperial German Embassy at Washington.

In view of the admission of liability by reason of specific treaty stipulations, it has become unnecessary to enter into a discussion of the meaning and effect of the Declaration of London, which is given some prominence in Your Excellency's note of April 5, further than to say that, as the German Government has already been advised, the Government of the United States does not regard the Declaration of London as in force.

(Dip. Corr. 88.)

No. 44. German note, May 10, 1915, expressing regret for the loss of American lives through the sinking of the Lusitania.

(The German foreign office to the German Embassy at Washington.)

Please communicate the following to the State Department: The German Government desires to express its deepest sympathy at the loss of lives on board the Lusitania. The responsibility rests, however, with the British Government, which, through its plan of starving the civilian population of Germany, has forced Germany to resort to retaliatory measures.

In spite of the German offer to stop the submarine war in case the starvation plan was given up, British merchant vessels are being generally armed with guns and have repeatedly tried to ram submarines, so that a previous search was impossible.

They can not, therefore, be treated as ordinary merchant vessels. A recent declaration made to the British Parliament by the Parliamentary Secretary in answer to a question by Lord Charles Beresford said that at the present practically all British merchant vessels were armed and provided with hand grenades.

Besides, it has been openly admitted by the English press that the Lusitania on previous voyages repeatedly carried large quantities of war material. On the present voyage the Lusitania carried 5,400 cases of ammunition, while the rest of her cargo also consisted chiefly of contraband.

If England, after repeated official and unofficial warnings, considered herself able to declare that that boat ran no risk and thus light-heartedly assumed responsibility for the human life on board a steamer which, owing to its armament and cargo was liable to destruction, the German Government, in spite of its heartfelt sympathy for the loss of American lives, can not but regret that Americans felt more inclined to trust to English promises rather than to pay attention to the warnings from the German side.

FOREIGN OFFICE.

(The New York Times, May 11, 1915.)

No. 45. German statement, May 11, 1915, in regard to the treatment of neutral vessels in the war zone.

(The German minister for foreign affairs to the American ambassador.)

First. The Imperial German Government has naturally no intention of causing to be attacked by submarines or aircraft such neutral ships of commerce in the zone of naval warfare, more definitely described in the notice of the German Admiralty staff of February 4 last, as have been guilty of no hostile act. On the contrary, the most definite instructions have repeatedly been issued to German war vessels to avoid attacks on such ships under all circumstances. Even when such ships have contraband of war on board they are dealt with by submarines solely according to the rules of international law applying to prize warfare.

Second. Should a neutral ship nevertheless come to harm through German submarines or aircraft on account of an unfortunate (X) [mistake?] in the above-mentioned zone of naval warfare, the German Government will unreservedly recognize its responsibility therefor. In such a case it will express its regrets and afford damages without first instituting a prize-court action.

Third. It is the custom of the German Government as soon as the sinking of a neutral ship in the above-mentioned zone of naval warfare is ascribed to German war vessels to institute an immediate investigation into the cause. If grounds appear thereby to be given for association of such a hypothesis, the German navy places itself in communication with the interested neutral Government so that the latter may also institute an investigation. If the German Government is thereby convinced that the ship has been destroyed by Germany's war vessels, it will not delay in carrying out the provisions of paragraph 2 above. In case the German Government, contrary to the viewpoint of the neutral Government, is not convinced by the result of the investigation, the German Government has already on several occasions declared itself ready to allow the question to be decided by an international investigation commission, according to chapter 3 of The Hague Convention of October 18, 1907, for the peaceful solution of international disputes. (The New York Times, May 12, 1915.)

No. 46. First American note, May 13, 1915, regarding the loss of American lives and the injury to American commerce incidental to the naval warfare. (See Nos. 50, 53, 56, and 60.)

Please call on the minister of foreign affairs and after reading to him this communication leave with him a copy.

In view of recent acts of the German authorities in violation of American rights on the high seas which culminated in the torpedoing and sinking of the British steamship Lusitania on May 7, 1915, by which over 100 American citizens lost their lives, it is clearly wise and desirable that the Government of the United States and the Imperial German Government should come to a clear and full understanding as to the grave situation which has resulted.

The sinking of the British passenger steamer Falaba by a German submarine on March 28, through which Leon C. Thrasher, an American citizen, was drowned; the attack on April 28 on the American vessel Cushing by a German aeroplane; the torpedoing on May 1 of the American vessel Gulflight by a German submarine, as a result of which two or more American citizens met their death; and, finally, the torpedoing and sinking of the steamship Lusitania, constitute a series of events which the Government of the United States has observed with growing concern, distress, and amazement.

Recalling the humane and enlightened attitude hitherto assumed by the Imperial German Government in matters of international right, and particularly with regard to the freedom of the seas; having learned to recognize the German views and the German influence in the field of international obligation as always engaged upon the side of justice and humanity; and having understood the instructions of the Imperial German Government to its naval commanders to be upon the same plane of humane action prescribed by the naval codes of other nations, the Government of the United States was loath to believe—it can not now bring itself to believe—that these acts, so absolutely contrary to the rules, the practices, and the spirit of modern warfare, could have the countenance or sanction of that great Government. It feels it to be its duty, therefore, to address the Imperial German Government concerning them with the utmost frankness and in the earnest hope that it is not mistaken in expecting action on the part of the Imperial German Government which will correct the unfortunate impressions which have been created and vindicate once more the position of that Government with regard to the sacred freedom of the seas.

The Government of the United States has been apprised that the Imperial German Government considered themselves to be obliged by the extraordinary circumstances of the present war and the measures adopted by their adversaries in seeking to cut Germany off from all commerce, to adopt methods of retaliation which go much beyond the ordinary methods of warfare at sea, in the proclamation of a war zone from which they have warned neutral ships to keep away. This Government has already taken occasion to inform the Imperial German Government that it can not admit the adoption of such measures or such a warning of danger to operate as in any degree an abbreviation of the rights of American shipmasters or of American citizens bound on lawful errands as passengers on merchant ships of belligerent nationality; and that it must hold the Imperial German Government to a strict accountability for any infringement of those rights, intentional or incidental. It does not understand the Imperial German Government to question those rights. It assumes, on the contrary, that the Imperial Government accept, as of course, the rule that the lives of noncombatants, whether they be of neutral citizenship or citizens of one of the nations at war, can not lawfully or rightfully be put in jeopardy by the capture or destruction of an unarmed merchantman, and recognize also, as all other nations do, the obligation to take the usual precaution of visit and search to ascertain whether a suspected merchantman is in fact of belligerent nationality or is in fact carrying contraband of war under a neutral flag.

The Government of the United States, therefore, desires to call the attention of the Imperial German Government with the utmost earnestness to the fact that the objection to their present method of attack against the trade of their enemies lies in the practical impossibility of employing submarines in the destruction of commerce without disregarding those rules of fairness, reason, justice, and humanity, which all modern opinion regards as imperative. It is practically impossible for the officers of a submarine to visit a merchantman at sea and examine her papers and cargo. It is practically impossible for them to make a prize of her; and, if they can not put a prize crew on board of her, they can not sink her without leaving her crew and all on board of her to the mercy of the sea in her small boats. These facts, it is understood, the Imperial German Government frankly admit. We are informed that in the instances of which we have spoken time enough for even that poor measure of safety was not given, and in at least two of the cases cited not so much as a warning was received. Manifesty, submarines can not be used against merchantmen, as the last few weeks have shown, without an inevitable violation of many sacred principles of justice and humanity.

American citizens act within their indisputable rights in taking their ships and in traveling wherever their legitimate business calls them upon the high seas, and exercise those rights in what should be the well-justified confidence that their lives will not be endangered by acts done in clear violation of universally acknowledged international obligations, and certainly in the confidence that their own Government will sustain them in the exercise of their rights.

There was recently published in the newspapers of the United States, I regret to inform the Imperial German Government, a formal warning, purporting to come from the Imperial German Embassy at Washington, addressed to the people of the United States, and stating, in effect, that any citizen of the United States who exercised his right of free travel upon the seas would do so at his peril if his journey should take him within the zone of waters within which the Imperial German Navy was using submarines against the commerce of Great Britain and France, notwithstanding the respectful but very earnest protest of his Government, the Government of the United States. I do not refer to this for the purpose of calling the attention of the Imperial German Government at this time to the surprising irregularity of a communication from the Imperial German Embassy at Washington addressed to the people of the United States through the newspapers, but only for the purpose of pointing out that no warning that an unlawful and inhumane act will be committed can possibly be accepted as an excuse or palliation for that act or as an abatement of the responsibility for its commission.

Long acquaintance as this Government has been with the character of the Imperial German Government and with the high principles of equity by which the yahev in the past been accentuated and guided, the Government of the United States can not believe that the commanders of the vessels which committed these acts of lawlessness did so except under a misapprehension of the orders issued by the Imperial German naval authorities. It takes it for granted that, at least within the practical possibilities of every such case, the commanders even of submarines were expected to do nothing that would involve the lives of noncombatants or the safety of neutral ships, even at the cost of failing of their object of capture or destruction. It confidently expects, therefore, that the Imperial German Government will disavow the acts of which the Government of the United States complains; that they will make reparation so far as reparation is possible for injuries which are without measure; and that they will take immediate steps to prevent the recurrence of anything so obviously subversive of the principles of warfare for which the Imperial German Government have in the past so wisely and so firmly contended.

The Government and people of the United States look to the Imperial German Government for just, prompt, and enlightened action in this vital matter with the greater confidence because the United States and Germany are bound together not only by special ties of friendship but also by the explicit stipulations of the treaty of 1828 between the United States and the Kingdom of Prussia.

Expressions of regret and offers of reparation in case of the destruction of neutral ships sunk by mistake, while they may satisfy international obligations, if no loss of life results, can not justify or excuse a practice the natural and necessary effect of which is to subject neutral nations and neutral persons to new and immeasurable risks.

The Imperial German Government will not expect the Government of the United States to omit any word or any act necessary to the performance of its sacred duty of maintaining the rights of the United States and its citizens and of safeguarding their free exercise and enjoyment.

BRYAN.

(Dip. Corr. 75–77.)

No. 47. British memorandum, May 20, 1915, in reference to the detention of American ships and cargoes. (The memorandum has a paragraph attached comparing the exports of the United States to belligerent and neutral countries in January and February, 1914, with those in the same months of 1915. An additional table shows an increase in the American exportation of bacon and lard to neutral countries in March, 1915.)

First. There are at the present moment three American ships detained in this country. Two of them are cotton ships, which are dealt with below. The third is the steamer Joseph W. Fordney. This vessel, with a cargo of foodstuffs consigned to E. Klingener at Malmo (Sweden), was brought into Kirkwall on April 8. She had been sighted by His Majesty's ships about 10 miles from the Norwegian coast, and had thereupon endeavored, with the evident desire to evade search, to escape rapidly into Norwegian territorial waters, but without success.

On the vessel's arrival in Kirkwall inquiries were at once addressed to His Majesty's minister at Stockholm with regard to the consignee of the cargo, and a reply was received to the effect that no person of that name could be identified at Malmo, though there was a person of that name who resided at Gothenburg, and was manager of the Gothenburg branch of Hugo Hartvig, and who had stated that the consignments addressed to him on board the Joseph W. Fordney were intended for storage in Malmo.

Second. The suspicious conduct of the vessel in endeavoring to elude His Majesty's patrols and the known connections of the consignee of her cargo have tended to confirm other evidence which has come to the knowledge of His Majesty's Government that the foodstuffs were in reality destined for Germany. It was accordingly decided that the cargo must be placed in the prize court, and the vessel is at present discharging at Portishead, England, on the completion of which operation she will be released.

His Majesty's Government feel satisfied that in the circumstances of this case undue interference with American interests can not with reason be imputed to them.

Third. The number of neutral vessels carrying American cargoes and at present held up is 36. Of these 23 carry cargoes of American cotton. The United States Government are aware that since the enforcement of the blockade measures announced in the supplement to the London Gazette of the 12th of March last His Majesty's Government have acted as regards shipments of American cotton in accordance with the provisions of an arrangement arrived at in collaboration with representatives of the American cotton interests. The terms of the arrangement are as follows:

A. All cotton for which contracts, sale, and freight engagements already have been made before March 2 is to be allowed free transit or bought at the contract price if stopped, provided the ship sails not later than the 31st of March.

B. Similar treatment is to be accorded all cotton insured before the 2d of March, provided it is put aboard not later than the 16th of March.

C. All shipments of cotton claiming the above protection are to be declared before sailing and documents produced and certificates obtained from consular officers or other authorities fixed by the Government.

Fourth. In accepting this scheme, which, it may be noted, applies to shipments of cotton for a neutral destination only, the principal representatives of the American cotton interests described it to His Majesty's ambassador at Washington as conceding all that the American interests could properly ask. It was never suggested that vessels or cargoes with an enemy destination should be allowed to proceed. His Majesty's Government were, moreover, given to understand that the provisions of the arrangement were acceptable to the United States Government.

Fifth. It is intended shortly to furnish a statement showing precisely what cargoes or portions of cargoes His Majesty's Government have dealt with under the above arrangement, and as regards those which they have decided to purchase at the contract price under the terms of paragraph A of the arrangement direct discussions have already been opened with the special representatives of the American parties interested in London.

Sixth. A considerable portion of the cotton has already been sold, and arrangements are being made for handing over the proceeds to the parties entitled to receive the total value as a first installment of the completed transaction. It is obvious that all these arrangements require some time for adjustment. Meanwhile it is not believed that the original owners can, as appears to be apprehended, be suffering acutely by the delay of full payment. It is to be presumed that in accordance with the customs of trade the owners drew bills to the value of their goods before or at the time of shipment; and, if such bills have been negotiated in the usual way, it is difficult to understand why the drawers should be put to inconvenience on this account, at least before the date when the bills fall due.

Seventh. On an impartial review of the facts it will, His Majesty's Government feel sure, be admitted that no arbitrary interference with American interests has, in regard to these cargoes, occurred, seeing that His Majesty's Government has acted throughout in conformity with the terms of an arrangement agreeable to the interests concerned and that United States citizens will suffer no pecuniary loss.

Eighth. As regards other American cargoes or portions of cargoes which have been placed in the prize court, His Majesty's Government resort to this measure in cases where either the goods concerned are contraband or there is evidence that although ostensibly consigned to a person in neutral countries they are in reality destined to the enemy in contravention of the rules of blockade. The right to submit such cases to the public investigation of a judicial tribunal is one which His Majesty's Government can not forego, and they feel convinced that the enlightened opinion in the United States can not adversely criticise their course of action in this respect.

Ninth. It is true that a number of these cases have been pending in the prize court for some time. This is notably the case in regard to certain vessels carrying large shipments of meat and lard ostensibly consigned to Scandinavian ports. The United States Government are, however, no doubt aware that much of the delay involved in these instances is due to the fact that the negotiations have been carried on for many weeks with a representative of the principal American meat packers, for an arrangement designated to limit importation into neutral countries adjacent to Germany, to quantities actually required in those countries for bona fide home consumption. The American meat packers have demanded as a part of the settlement to be agreed upon, that His Majesty's Government should buy the cargoes of several ships now held up in the prize court. Hence the delay in bringing these cases to adjudication.

The negotiations for an amicable settlement have, unfortunately, come to a standstill owing to the exorbitant terms insisted upon by the representative of the American packers. This stage having now been reached His Majesty's Government have decided to go on with the prize-court proceedings in these cases, and it is not expected that a decision will be much longer delayed.

Tenth. It may finally be pointed out that repeated complaint, as to injury suffered generally by American trade in consequence of interference due to British naval measures, derives little substance from the published American trade returns. A table of figures taken from these returns and showing the amount of recent American trade with Germany and with neutral countries supplying Germany, is annexed hereto. It certainly tends to disprove any contention that American trade with neutral countries has recently suffered. It will be seen that whereas American exports to Germany and Austria in February, 1915, fell by $21,500,000, as compared with the same month in 1914, American exports to Scandinavia, Holland, and Italy rose by the enormous figure of $61,100,000.

Eleventh. Similar figures for the month of March have not yet reached His Majesty's Government, but they have received statistics for that month of the value of exports and imports through New York, as issued by the collector of the port, and while pointing out a large increase in the value of exports in 115, compared with those of 1914, as shown in the tables annexed, they desire especially to call attention to a separate statement indicating the increase in the amount of the export to Scandinavian and Dutch ports of two commodities only—bacon and lard. These figures show that as against 1,253 boxes of bacon and 9,816 tierces of lard exported to the ports noted in the above countries in March, 1914, there were exported in March, 1915, 32,222 boxes of bacon and 95,676 tierces of lard.

Twelfth. His Majesty's Government consider that the abnormal increase in supplies imported by neutral countries, as shown in these statistics, alone justifies their assumption as to the ultimate destination of many items in cargoes consigned to one or the other of the countries in question in the vessels which they have detained, but they would call attention to the fact that it is only when they have believed themselves to be in possession of conclusive evidence of the enemy destination of a cargo that they have seized such a cargo, and that American interests, as for instance in the case of cotton, have received especially sympathetic consideration. (The New York Times, May 21, 1915.)

No. 48. Statement of the Secretary of State, May 21, 1915, regarding an error in No. 47.

The foreign-trade advisers' attention has been called to the statement of the foreign office of Great Britain, published in this morning's papers, an extract from which follows:

"Fourth. In accepting this scheme, which, it may be noted, applies to shipments of cotton for a neutral destination only, the principal representatives of the American interests described it to His Majesty's ambassador at Washington as conceding all that the American interests could properly ask. It was never suggested that vessels or cargoes with an enemy destination should be allowed to proceed. His Majesty's Government were, moreover, given to understand that the provisions of the arrangements were acceptable to the United States Government."

The plan referred to is the one which was entered into between the cotton shippers of this country and the British embassy, a portion of which is quoted in the statement of the British foreign office.

Without discussing at this time the statement that "it was never suggested that vessels or cargoes with an enemy destination should be allowed to proceed," the foreign-trade advisers, who informally and unofficially represented the cotton shippers in the negotiations which led to the so-called cotton arrangement, state that it was distinctly understood between Sir Arthur Cecil Spring-Rice, the British ambassador, and Robert F. Rose, the foreign-trade adviser conducting this discussion on behalf of the American cotton exporters, that nothing done by the foreign-trade advisers should be regarded as official, and that everything done was to be considered as informal and unofficial, and in no way binding the United States Government to any arrangement reached, or be construed as a recognition of the order in council to be issued or the declaration of March 1 which has been issued. This statement was made to the British ambassador on March 3 when the first conference in the matter was held, was repeated at each subsequent conference, and each time the absolute assurance from the British ambassador was received that, in acting for the cotton shippers in any way, the foreign-trade advisers were to be regarded as not representing the United States Government in any manner. (The New York Times, May 22, 1915.)

No. 49. Statement of the British embassy, May 21, 1915, correcting the error in No. 47.

The terms of the arrangement quoted in the British statement as telegraphed were arrived at in London between a private representative of the American cotton interests in London and British officials in London. The reference to the British ambassador in paragraph 4 is, therefore, an error.

The arrangement in question formed the subject of conversations between the ambassador and representatives of the cotton interests in this country. There never was any question of a formal and official understanding between the United States Government and the British Embassy. (The New York Times, May 22, 1915.)

No. 50. First German note, May 28, 1915, regarding the loss of American lives and the injury to American commerce incidental to the naval warfare. (See No. 46.)

The undersigned has the honor to make the following reply to the note of his excellency, Mr. James W. Gerard, ambassador of the United States of America, dated the 15th instant, on the subject of the impairment of many American interests by the German submarine war.

The Imperial Government has subjected the statements of the Government of the United States to a careful examination, and has the lively wish on its part also to contribute in a convincing and friendly manner to clear up any misunderstandings which may have entered into the relations of the two Governments through the events mentioned by the American Government.

With regard firstly to the cases of the American steamers Cushing and Gulflight, the American Embassy has already been informed that it is far from the German Government to have any intention of ordering attacks by submarines or flyers on neutral vessels in the zone which have not been guilty of any hostile act; on the contrary, the most explicit instructions have been repeatedly given the German armed forces to avoid attacking such vessels. If neutral vessels have come to grief through the German submarine war during the past few months by mistake, it is a question of isolated and exceptional cases, which are traceable to the misuse of flags by the British Government in connection with carelessness or suspicious actions on the part of the captains of the vessels. In all cases where a neutral vessel through no fault of its own has come to grief through the German submarine or flyers according to the facts as ascertained by the German Government, this Government has expressed its regret at the unfortunate occurrence and promised indemnification where the facts justified it. The German Government will treat the cases of the American steamers Cushing and Gulflight according to the same principles. An investigation of these cases is in progress. Its results will be communicated to the embassy shortly. The investigation might, if thought desirable, be supplemented by an international commission of inquiry, pursuant to title 3 of The Hague convention of October 18, 1907, for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

In the case of the sinking of the English steamer Falaba, the commander of the German submarine had the intention of allowing passengers and crew ample opportunity to save themselves.

It was not until the captain disregarded the order to lay to and took to flight, sending up rocket signals for help, that the German commander ordered the crew and passengers, by signals and megaphone, to leave the ship within 10 minutes. As a matter of fact he allowed them 23 minutes and did not fire the torpedo until suspicious steamers were hurrying to the aid of the Falaba.

With regard to the loss of life when the British passenger steamer Lusitania was sunk, the German Government has already expressed its deep regret to the neutral Governments concerned that nationals of those countries lost their lives on that occasion. The Imperial Government must state for the rest the impression that certain important facts most directly connected with the sinking of the Lusitania may have escaped the attention of the Government of the United States. It therefore considers it necessary in the interest of the clear and full understanding aimed at by either Government primarily to convince itself that the reports of the facts which are before the two Governments are complete and in agreement.

The Government of the United States proceeds on the assumption that the Lusitania is to be considered as an ordinary unarmed merchant vessel. The Imperial Government begs in this connection to point out that the Lusitania was one of the largest and fastest English commerce steamers, constructed with Government funds as auxiliary cruisers, and is expressly included in the navy list published by British Admiralty. It is, moreover, known to the Imperial Government, from reliable information furnished by its officials and neutral passengers, that for some time practically all the more valuable English merchant vessels have been provided with guns, ammunition, and other weapons, and reinforced with a crew specially practiced in manning guns. According to reports at hand here, the Lusitania when she left New York undoubtedly had guns on board which were mounted under decks and masked.

The Imperial Government furthermore has the honor to direct the particular attention of the American Government to the fact that the British Admiralty, by a secret instruction of February of this year, advised the British merchant marine not only to seek protection behind neutral flags and markings, but even when so disguised to attack German submarines by ramming them. High rewards have been offered by the British Government as a special incentive for the destruction of the submarines by merchant vessels, and such rewards have already been paid out. In view of these facts, which are satisfactorily known to it, the Imperial Government is unable to consider English merchant vessels any longer as "undefended territory" in the zone of maritime war designated by the admiralty staff of the Imperial German Navy; the German commanders are consequently no longer in a position to observe the rules of capture otherwise usual and with which they invariably complied before this. Lastly, the Imperial Government must specially point out that on her last trip the Lusitania, as on earlier occasions, had Canadian troops and munitions on board, including no less than 5,400 cases of ammunition destined for the destruction of brave German soldiers who are fulfilling with self-sacrifice and devotion their duty in the service of the Fatherland. The German Government believes that it acts in just self-defense when it seeks to protect the lives of its soldiers by destroying ammunition destined for the enemy with the means of war at its command. The English steamship company must have been aware of the dangers to which passengers on board the Lusitania were exposed under the circumstances. In taking them on board in spite of this the company quite deliberately tried to use the lives of American citizens as protection for the ammunition carried and violated the clear provisions of American laws which expressly prohibit, and provide punishment for, the carrying of passengers on ships which have explosives on board. The company thereby wantonly caused the death of so many passengers. According to the express report of the submarine commander concerned, which is further confirmed by all other reports, there can be no doubt that the rapid sinking of the Lusitania was primarily due to the explosion of the cargo of ammunition caused by the torpedo. Otherwise, in all human probability the passengers of the Lusitania would have been saved.

The Imperial Government holds the facts recited above to be of sufficient importance to recommend them to a careful examination by the American Government. The Imperial Government begs to reserve a final statement of its position with regard to the demands made in connection with the sinking of the Lusitania until a reply is received from the American Government, and believes that it should recall here that it took note with satisfaction of the proposals of good offices submitted by the American Government in Berlin and London with a view to paving the way for a modus vivendi for the conduct of maritime war between Germany and Great Britain. The Imperial Government furnished at that time ample evidence of its good will by its willingness to consider these proposals. The realization of these proposals failed, as is known, on account of their rejection by the Government of Great Britain.

The undersigned requests his excellency, the ambassador, to bring the above to the knowledge of the American Government and avails himself of the opportunity to renew, etc.

No. 51. German note, June 1, 1915, in reference to attacks on the Gulflight and the Cushing.

Referring to the note of May 28, the undersigned has the honor to inform his excellency the American (sic) ambassador of the United States of America, Mr. James W. Gerard, that the examination undertaken on the part of the German Government concerning the American steamers Gulflight and Cushing has led to the following conclusions:

In regard to the attack on the steamer Gulflight, the commander of a German submarine saw on the afternoon of May 1, in the vicinity of the Scilly Islands, a large merchant steamer coming in his direction which was accompanied by two smaller vessels. These latter took such position in relation to the steamer that they formed a regulation safeguard against submarines; moreover, one of them had a wireless apparatus, which is not usual with small vessels. From this it evidently was a case of English convoy vessels. Since such vessels are frequently armed, the submarine could not approach the steamer on the surface of the water without running the danger of destruction. It was, on the other hand, to be assumed that the steamer was of considerable value to the British Government, since it was so guarded. The commander could see no neutral markings on it of any kind—that is, distinctive marks painted on the freeboard recognizable at a distance, such as are now usual on neutral ships in the English zone of naval warfare. In consequence he arrived at the conclusion from all the circumstances that he had to deal with an English steamer, submerged, and attacked.

The torpedo came in the immediate neighborhood of one of the convoy ships, which at once rapidly approached the point of firing; that the submarine was forced to go to a great depth to avoid being rammed. The conclusion of the commander that an English convoy ship was concerned was in this way confirmed. That the attacked steamer carried the American flag was first observed at the moment of firing the shot. The fact that the steamship was pursuing a course which led neither to nor from America was a further reason why it did not occur to the commander of the submarine that he was dealing with an American steamship.

Upon scrutiny of the time and place of the occurrence described, the German Government has become convinced that the attacked steamship was actually the American steamship Gulflight. There can be no doubt, according to the attendant circumstances, that the attack is to be attributed to an unfortunate accident, and not to the fault of the commander. The German Government expresses its regrets to the Government of the United States concerning this incident, and declares itself ready to furnish full recompense for the damage thereby sustained by American citizens. It is left to the discretion of the American Government to present a statement of this damage, or, if doubt may arise over individual points, to designate an expert who would have to determine, together with a German expert, the amount of damage.

It has not yet been possible by means of an inquiry to clear up fully the case of the American ship Cushing. Official reports available report only one merchant ship attacked by a German flying machine in the vicinity of Nordhind Lightship. The German aviator was forced to consider the vessel as hostile because it carried no flag, and, further, because of no recognizable neutral markings. The attack of four bombs was, of course, not aimed at any American ship.

However, that the ship attacked was the American steamer Cushing is possible, considering the time and place of the occurrence. Nevertheless, the German Government accordingly requests of the American Government that it communicate to the German Government the material which was submitted for judgment, in order that, with this as a basis, a further position can be taken in the matter.

The undersigned leaves it to the ambassador to bring the foregoing to the immediate attention of his Government, and takes this opportunity to renew to him the assurance of his most distinguished consideration.

No. 52. Second German note, June 7, 1915, in regard to the William P. Frye. (See Nos. 37, 39, and 43.)

The undersigned has the honor to make the following reply to the note of his excellency, Mr. James W. Gerard, ambassador of the United States of America, dated April 30, 1915, foreign office No. 3291, on the subject of the sinking of the American sailing vessel William P. Frye by the German auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich:

The German Government can not admit that, as the American Government assumes, the destruction of the sailing vessel mentioned constitutes a violation of the treaties concluded between Prussia and the United States at an earlier date and now applicable to the relations between the German Empire and the United States, or of the American rights derived therefrom; for these treaties did not have the intention of depriving one of the contracting parties engaged in war of the right of stopping the supply of contraband to his enemy when he recognizes the supply of such as detrimental to his military interests.

On the contrary, article 13 of the Prussian-American treaty of July 11, 1799, expressly reserves to the party at war the right to stop the carrying of contraband and to detain the contraband. It follows, then, that if it can not be accomplished in any other way the stopping of the supply may in the extreme case be effected by the destruction of the contraband and of the ship carrying it. As a matter of course, the obligation of the party at war to pay compensation to the parties interested of the neutral contracting party remains in force whatever be the manner of stopping the supply.

According to general principles of international law, any exercises of the right of control over the trade in contraband is subject to the decision of the prize courts, even though such right may be restricted by special treaties.

At the beginning of the present war Germany, pursuant to these principles, established by law prize jurisdiction for cases of the kind under consideration. The case of the William P. Frye is likewise subject to the German prize jurisdiction, for the Prussian-American treaties mentioned contain no stipulation as to how the amount of the compensation, provided by article 13 of the treaties, cited, is to be fixed.

The German Government therefore complies with its treaty obligations to a full extent when the prize courts instituted by it in accordance with international law proceed in pursuance to the treaty stipulation and thus award the American interested an equitable indemnity. There would therefore be no foundation for a claim of the American Government unless the prize court should not grant indemnity in accordance with the treaty; in such event, however, the German Government would not hesitate to arrange for equitable indemnity notwithstanding.

For the rest, prize proceedings of the case of the Frye are indispensable, apart from the American claims, for the reason that other claims of the neutral and enemy interested parties are to be considered in the matter.

As was stated in the note of April 4 last, the prize court should have to decide the question whether the destruction of the ship and cargo was legal, whether and under what conditions the property sunk was liable to confiscation, and to whom and in what amount indemnity is to be paid, provided application therefor is received.

Since the decision of the prize court must first be awaited before any further position is taken by the German Government, the simplest way for the American interested parties to settle their claims would be to enter them in the competent records in accordance with the provision of the German code of prize proceedings.

The undersigned begs to suggest that the ambassador bring the above to the knowledge of his Government and avail himself, etc.

No. 53. Second American note, June 9, 1915, regarding the loss of American lives and the injury to American commerce incidental to the naval warfare. (See Nos. 46 and 50.)

You are instructed to deliver textually the following note to the minister of foreign affairs:

In compliance with your excellency's request I did not fail to transmit to my Government immediately upon their receipt your note of May 28 in reply to my note of May 15, and your supplementary note of June 1, setting forth the conclusions so far as reached by the Imperial German Government concerning the attacks on the American steamers Cushing and Gulflight. I am now instructed by my Government to communicate the following in reply:

The Government of the United States notes with gratification the full recognition by the Imperial German Government, in discussing the cases of the Cushing and the Gulflight, of the principle of the freedom of all parts of the open sea to neutral ships and the frank willingness of the Imperial German Government to acknowledge and meet its liability where the fact of attack upon neutral ships "which have not been guilty of any hostile act" by German aircraft or vessels of war is satisfactorily established; and the Government of the United States will in due course lay before the Imperial German Government, as it requests, full information concerning the attack on the steamer Cushing.

With regard to the sinking of the steamer Falaba, by which an American citizen lost his life, the Government of the United States is surprised to find the Imperial German Government contending that an effort on the part of a merchantman to escape capture and secure assistance alters the obligation of the officer seeking to make the capture in respect of the safety of the lives of those on board the merchantman, although the vessel had ceased her attempt to escape when torpedoed. These are not new circumstances. They have been in the minds of statesmen and of international jurists throughout the development of naval warfare, and the Government of the United States does not understand that they have ever been held to alter the principles of humanity upon which it has insisted. Nothing but actual forcible resistance or continued efforts to escape by flight when ordered to stop for the purpose of visit on the part of the merchantman has ever been held to forfeit the lives of her passengers or crew. The Government of the United States, however, does not understand that the Imperial German Government is seeking in this case to relieve itself of liability, but only intends to set forth the circumstances which led the commander of the submarine to allow himself to be hurried into the course which he took.

Your excellency's note, in discussing the loss of American lives resulting from the sinking of the steamship Lusitania, adverts at some length to certain information which the Imperial German Government has received with regard to the character and outfit of that vessel, and your excellency expresses the fear that this information may not have been brought to the attention of the Government of the United States.

It is stated in the note that the Lusitania was undoubtedly equipped with masked guns, supplied with trained gunners and special ammunition, transporting troops from Canada, carrying a cargo not permitted under the laws of the United States to a vessel also carrying passengers, and serving, in virtual effect, as an auxiliary to the naval forces of Great Britain. Fortunately these are matters concerning which the Government of the United States is in a position to give the Imperial German Government official information. Of the facts alleged in your excellency's note, if true, the Government of the United States would have been bound to take official cognizance in performing its recognized duty as a neutral power and in enforcing its national laws. It was its duty to see to it that the Lusitania was not armed for offensive action; that she was not serving as a transport; that she did not carry a cargo prohibited by the statutes of the United States; and that if in fact she was a naval vessel of Great Britain she should not receive clearance as a merchantman; and it performed that duty and enforced its statutes with scrupulous vigilance through its regularly constituted officials. It is able, therefore, to assure the Imperial German Government that it has been misinformed. If the Imperial German Government should deem itself to be in possession of convincing evidence that the officials of the Government of the United States did not perform these duties with thoroughness, the Government of the United States sincerely hopes that it will submit that evidence for consideration.

Whatever may be the contentions of the Imperial German Government regarding the carriage of contraband of war on board the Lusitania or regarding the explosion of that material by the torpedo, it need only be said that in the view of this Government these contentions are irrelevant to the question of the legality of the methods used by the German naval authorities in sinking the vessel.

But the sinking of passenger ships involves principles of humanity which throw into the background any special circumstances of detail that may be thought to affect the cases, principles which lift it, as the Imperial German Government will no doubt be quick to recognize and acknowledge, out of the class of ordinary subjects of diplomatic discussion or of international controversy. Whatever be the other facts regarding the Lusitania, the principal fact is that a great steamer, primarily and chiefly a conveyance for passengers, and carrying more than a thousand souls who had no part or lot in the conduct of the war, was torpedoed and sunk without so much as a challenge or a warning, and that men, women, and children were sent to their death in circumstances unparalleled in modern warfare. The fact that more than 100 American citizens were among those who perished made it the duty of the Government of the United States to speak of these things and once more, with solemn emphasis, to call the attention of the Imperial German Government to the grave responsibility which the Government of the United States conceives that it has incurred in this tragic occurrence, and to the indisputable principle upon which that responsibility rests. The Government of the United States is contending for something much greater than mere rights of property or privileges of commerce. It is contending for nothing less high and sacred than the rights of humanity, which every Government honors itself in respecting and which no Government is justified in resigning on behalf of those under its care and authority. Only her actual resistance to capture or refusal to stop when ordered to do so for the purpose of visit could have afforded the commander of the submarine any justification for so much as putting the lives of those on board the ship in jeopardy. This principle the Government of the United States understands the explicit instructions issued on August 3, 1914, by the Imperial German Admiralty to its commanders at sea to have recognized and embodied, as do the naval codes of all other nations, and upon it every traveler and seaman had a right to depend. It is upon this principle of humanity as well as upon the law founded upon this principle that the United States must stand.

The Government of the United States is happy to observe that Your Excellency's note closes with the intimation that the Imperial German Government is willing, now as before, to accept the good offices of the United States in an attempt to come to an understanding with the Government of Great Britain by which the character and conditions of the war upon the sea may be changed. The Government of the United States would consider it a privilege thus to serve its friends and the world. It stands ready at any time to convey to either Government any intimation or suggestion the other may be willing to have it convey, and cordially invites the Imperial German Government to make use of its services in this way at its convenience. The whole world is concerned in anything that may bring about even a partial accommodation of interests or in any way mitigate the terrors of the present distressing conflict.

In the meantime, whatever arrangement may happily be made between the parties to the war, and whatever may in the opinion of the Imperial German Government have been the provocation or the circumstantial justification for the past acts of its commanders at sea, the Government of the United States confidently looks to see the justice and humanity of the Government of Germany vindicated in all cases where Americans have been wronged or their rights as neutrals invaded.

The Government of the United States therefore very earnestly and very solemnly renews the representations of its note transmitted to the Imperial German Government on the 15th of May, and relies in these representations upon the principles of humanity, the universally recognized understandings of international law, and the ancient friendship of the German nation.

The Government of the United States can not admit that the proclamation of a war zone from which neutral ships have been warned to keep away may be made to operate as in any degree an abbreviation of the rights either of American shipmasters or of American citizens bound on lawful errands as passengers on merchant ships of belligerent nationality. It does not understand the Imperial German Government to question those rights. It understands also it to accept as established beyond question the principle that the lives of noncombanants can not lawfully or rightfully be put in jeopardy by the capture or destruction of an unresisting merchantman, and to recognize the obligation to take sufficient precaution to ascertain whether a suspected merchantman is in fact of belligerent nationality or is in fact carrying contraband of war under a neutral flag. The Government of the United States therefore deems it reasonable to expect that the Imperial German Government will adopt the measures necessary to put these principles into practice in respect of the safeguarding of American lives and American ships, and asks for assurances that this will be done.

ROBERT LANSING.

(Dip. Corr.—leaflet.)

No. 54. British memorandum, June 17, 1915, in reference to the treatment of American commerce. (According to the letter of the American ambassador transmitting the memorandum, "it is not an answer to the principles set forth in the note . . . of March 30 [No. 36], but merely an explanation of concrete cases and the regulations under which they are dealt with." See Nos. 61 and 56.)

1. His Majesty's Government have on various occasions, and notably in the communication which was addressed to the United States ambassador on March 15 last, given assurances to the United States Government that they would make it their first aim to minimize the inconvenience which must inevitably be caused to neutral commerce from the existence of a state of war at sea, and in particular from the measures taken by the allied governments for the restriction of the enemies' over-seas trade. In view of the representation and complaints made to this department by the ambassador from time to time as to the peculiar hardships alleged to have been wrongly inflicted on American trade and shipping by the operation of those measures, His Majesty's Government desire to offer the following observations respecting the manner in which they have consistently endeavored to give practical effect to those assurances.

2. It will be recalled that at the moment when His Majesty's Government announced their measures against enemy commerce, they declared their intention to refrain altogether from the exercise of the right to confiscate ships or cargoes which belligerents had always previously claimed in respect to breaches of blockade; that, under article 1 of the enactment of March 11 it was expressly provided that any person claiming to be interested in goods placed in the prize court in pursuance of the provision of that enactment, might forthwith issue a writ against the proper officers of the Crown, the object being to confer upon claimants the right to institute proceedings without waiting for the writ of the procurator general, and thus to remove all possible cause of legitimate grievance on account of delay; and that, finally, a pacific assurance was given to the United States Government that the instructions to be issued by His Majesty's Government to the fleet and to the customs officials and executive officials concerned, would impress upon them the duty of acting with the utmost dispatch consistent with the object in view and of showing in every case such consideration for neutrals as might be compatible with that object, namely, to prevent vessels carrying goods for or coming from the enemy's territory.

3. The above measures were all designed to alleviate the burdens imposed upon neutral sea-borne commerce in general. Various special concessions, over and above those enumerated, have, moreover, been made in favor of United States citizens.

4. Thus His Majesty's Government have acted as regards shipments of American cotton, in accordance with the provisions of an arrangement arrived at in direct collaboration with representatives of the American cotton interests. In accepting this scheme the principal representative of those interests described it as conceding all that American interests could properly ask. The provisions of the arrangement were, as the United States ambassador is aware, as follows:

"1. All cotton for which contracts of sale and freight engagements have already been made before the 2d of March is to be allowed free (or bought at contract price is stopped), provided the ship sails not later than the 31st of March.

"2. Similar treatment is to be accorded to all cotton insured before the 2d of March, provided it is put on board not later than the 16th of March.

"3. All shipments of cotton claiming the above protection are to be declared before sailing, and the documents produced to, and certificates obtained from consular officers or other authority fixed by the government."

5. Considerable shipments of cotton have already been dealt with under this arrangement, and in certain cases the dates specified have been extended in favor of American shippers. The board of trade have already paid a sum exceeding £450,000 to various American claimants, and all claims are being and will continue to be paid as rapidly as they are presented and the proofs of title can be checked. If in some cases progress has been delayed, this has been due to the fact which has seriously embarrassed His Majesty's Government—that a number of consignments, for which the American shippers had specifically invoked the protection of the arrangement, are now claimed by Swedish and Dutch firms, whose title of ownership, notwithstanding the action of the American shippers, appears in some cases to be valid, and in others has led to the issue of writs in the prize court.

6. It has been explicitly acknowledged by the special representatives of the American claimants who have been in constant and direct communication with the board of trade, that all the claims so far submitted under the cotton arrangement have been settled with the utmost promptitude, so soon as the production of the necessary documents by the claimants allowed of this being done. There is, at the present moment, no claim before His Majesty's Government that has not been paid, and the sums so paid over are already considerably in excess of the amounts realized by the sale of the goods.

7. As regards the more general allegation of delay in dealing with cases of detained cargoes, the following facts and figures may be quoted:

The total number of vessels which, having cleared from United States ports since the initiation of the retaliatory measures against German trade, are still detained in United Kingdom ports is 27; of this number 8 are discharging cotton which His Majesty's Government has agreed to purchase under the above arrangement. Of the remaining 19 vessels, 7 are free to depart as soon as the items of their cargo placed in the prize court have been discharged. The other 12, of which 3 only are American ships, are detained pending inquiries as to suspicious consignments, and particulars as to the dates and approximate causes of detention are furnished in the accompanying list. It will be observed that 8 have been detained for a period of less than a week, and 3 for a period of less than a fortnight, while the detention of 1 is due to the difficulties in regard to transit across Sweden and Russia.

8. His Majesty's Government remain convinced that, on an impartial review of the facts, it will be admitted that no arbitrary interference with American interests has, in regard to cotton cargoes, occurred; while if due regard be paid to the enormous volume of American and neutral shipping which is continually engaged in the trans-Atlantic trade, the figures and dates quoted in the preceding paragraph will emphasize the restricted nature of any interference which has taken place, and the close attention with which the officials concerned have adhered to their instructions to act in all cases with expedition and with every possible consideration for neutrals.

9. Since His Majesty's Government have been compelled to adopt their present measures against German commerce, they have given special consideration to the question of avoiding as far as possible unnecessary damage to the interests of neutrals in regard to the export of goods of German origin, and here, again, liberal concessions have been made to United States citizens. Under the rules enacted on the 11th of March provision is made for the investigation of all neutral claims respecting such goods in the prize court, and it is obvious that these claims can receive due and equitable consideration most properly before a judicial tribunal. Nevertheless, in deference to the express desire of the United States Government, arrangements were made toward the end of March whereby United States citizens, who might desire to import goods of German origin via a neutral port, were enabled to produce proof of payment to His Majesty's Embassy at Washington. If such proof were deemed satisfactory, His Majesty's Government gave an undertaking that the goods concerned should not be interfered with in transit, and the American importer was freed from the necessity of submitting his claim to the prize court in London for adjudication. A few days later His Majesty's Government further agreed to recognize the neutral ownership of goods of enemy origin even if not paid for before the 1st March, provided they were the subject of a f. o. b. contract of earlier date, and had arrived at a neutral port before the 15th March.

10. Special treatment has also been accorded to cargoes of particular produce destined for the United States and stated to be indispensable for the industries of the country, and, in notes addressed to the United States Ambassador in April and May, undertakings were given not to interfere during transit with certain cargoes of dyestuffs, potash, and German beet seed.

11. When it became apparent that large quantities of enemy goods were still passing out through neutral countries His Majesty's Government felt it necessary to fix a definite date after which such shipments must cease to enjoy the special immunity, theretofore granted, from liability to being placed in the prize court. It had been observed that a large increase had taken place in the number of vessels sailing from neutral countries to America, and one of the principal lines of steamships advertised a daily in place of a weekly service. In such circumstances it appeared scarcely possible that goods of enemy origin bought and paid for prior to the 1st March should not have already been shipped to their destination. First June was accordingly fixed as the date after which the privilege allowed in the case of such shipments should cease; but once more a special favor was granted by extending the date in exceptional cases to the 15th June.

12. Importers in the United States having now had three months in which to clear off their purchases in enemy territory, His Majesty's Government trust that, in presence of the circumstances enumerated, the United States Government will acknowledge the great consideration which has been shown to American interests.

13. Nevertheless a fresh appeal has now been made to His Majesty's Government that shipments of American-owned goods of enemy origin, if paid for before the beginning of March, should be allowed to be shipped without molestation after the 15th June. The appeal is based principally upon the contentions, (a) that insufficient time has already elapsed; (b) that no mention of a time limit is made in the enactment of the 11th March; (c) that the proofs of ownership required by His Majesty's Government are of an exacting nature and involve much time for preparation.

14. The first contention (a) has already been dealt with. As regards (b) and (c) it is true that the enactment of the 11th March contains no mention of a time limit. But it seems to be overlooked that the time limit had been fixed only for the special immunity granted as an exception from that enactment. It was as a friendly concession to American interests that His Majesty's Government agreed to an investigation of claims outside the prize court. As for the exacting nature of the proofs required by His Majesty's Government, experience has shown that such proofs were necessary.

15. In deference, however, to the renewed representations of the United States Ambassador, His Majesty's Government have given further directions that in all such cases, as may have been specially submitted through the British Embassy at Washington or to His Majesty's Government direct on or before June 15 and passed, the goods shall be allowed to proceed without interference, if shipped from a neutral port on the conditions already laid down, notwithstanding the fact that shipment may not have been made before June 15.

16. His Majesty's Government will also be prepared hereafter to give special consideration to cases presented to them and involving particular hardships, if the goods concerned are required for neutral Governments or municipalities, or in respect of works or public utility, and where payment can be shown to have been made before March 1, 1915.

17. With the above exceptions, His Majesty's Government regret they can not continue to deal through the diplomatic channel with individual cases, but they would again point out that special provision is made for the consideration of such cases in the prize court.

18. Complaints have not infrequently been made that undue delay occurs in dealing with American cargoes in the prize court. An interesting comment on this subject was made by the president of the prize court in the case of the cargo ex-steamship Ogeechee on the 14th instant. His lordship, according to the transcript from the official shorthand writer's notes, made the following observations:

"It is a very extraordinary thing that, when the Crown are ready to go on the claimants come here and say, 'We can not proceed for six weeks.' Some day toward the end of last term I had a row of eminent counsel in front pressing me to fix a case at once. I fixed it very nearly at once—that is to say, the second day of the following term. They all came and said, 'We want an adjournment for six weeks.'"

19. The solicitor general hereupon remarked: "If I might say so on that, one of the reasons I applied to-day on behalf of the Crown that the matter should be dealt with as soon as possible is for that very reason. There has been such a strong desire on the part of America and American citizens that there should be no delay, but one finds, in fact, the delay comes from there."

20. The President then stated: "I know that. I do not know what the explanation is, but I am anxious that there should be no delay."

21. It is true that a number of cases, principally relating to cargoes which, though ostensibly consigned to a person in a neutral country, are in reality believed to be destined for the enemy, have been pending in the prize court for some time. The United States Government are aware that most of these cargoes consist of meat and lard, and that much of the delay in bringing these cargoes to adjudication was due to the fact that negotiations were being carried on for many weeks with a representative of the principal American meat packers, for an amicable settlement out of court. When at length, owing to the failure of the negotiations, His Majesty's Government decided that they would continue the prize-court proceedings and had at the request of the claimants fixed the earliest possible date for the hearing, counsel for the latter asked for an adjournment in their interests, despite the fact that the Crown was, by his own admission, ready to proceed.

22. His Majesty's Government are earnestly desirous of removing all causes of avoidable delay in dealing with American cargoes and vessels which may be detained, and any specific inquiries or representations which may be made by the United States Government in regard to particular cases will always receive the most careful consideration, and all information which can be afforded without prejudice to prize-court proceedings will be readily communicated, but they can scarcely admit that on the basis of actual facts any substantial grievance on the part of American citizens is justified or can be sustained, and they therefore confidently appeal to the opinion of the United States Government as enlightened by this memorandum. (The New York Times, June 25, 1915.)

No. 55. Third American note, June 24, 1915, in regard to the William P. Frye. (See Nos. 37, 39, 43, and 52.)

You are instructed to present the following note to the German Minister of Foreign Affairs:

I have the honor to inform your excellency that I duly communicated to my Government your note of the 7th instant on the subject of the claim presented in my note of April 3 last on behalf of the owners and captain of the American sailing vessel William P. Frye in consequence of her destruction by the German auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich.

In reply I am instructed by my Government to say that it has carefully considered the reasons given by the Imperial German Government for urging that this claim should be passed upon by the German prize court instead of being settled by direct diplomatic discussion between the two Governments, as proposed by the Government of the United States, and that it regrets to find that it can not concur in the conclusions reached by the Imperial German Government.

As pointed out in my last note to you on this subject, dated April 30, the Government of the United States has considered that the only question under discussion was the method which should be adopted for ascertaining the amount of the indemnity to be paid under an admitted liability, and it notes with surprise that in addition to this question the Imperial German Government now desires to raise some questions as to the meaning and effect of the treaty stipulations under which it has admitted its liability.

If the Government of the United States correctly understands the position of the Imperial German Government as now presented, it is that the provisions of article 13 of the treaty of 1799 between the United States and Prussia, which is continued in force by the treaty of 1828, justified the commander of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich in sinking the William P. Frye, although making the Imperial German Government liable for the damages suffered in consequence, and that inasmuch as the treaty provides no specific method for ascertaining the amount of indemnity to be paid, that question must be submitted to the German prize court for determination.

The Government of the United States, on the other hand, does not find in the treaty stipulation mentioned any justification for the sinking of the Frye, and does not consider that the German prize court has any jurisdiction over the question of the amount of indemnity to be paid by the Imperial German Government on account of its admitted liability for the destruction of an American vessel on the high seas.

You state in your note of the 7th instant that article 13 of the above-mentioned treaty of 1799 "expressly reserves to the party at war the right to stop the carrying of contraband and to detain the contraband; it follows, then, that if it can not be accomplished in any other way the stopping of the supply may be in the extreme case effected by the destruction of the contraband and of the ship carrying it."

The Government of the United States can not concur in this conclusion. On the contrary, it holds that these treaty provisions do not authorize the destruction of a neutral vessel in the circumstances. By its express terms the treaty prohibits even the detention of a neutral vessel carrying contraband if the master of the vessel is willing to surrender the contraband. Article 13 provides: "In the case supposed of a vessel stopped for articles of contraband, if the master of the vessel stopped will deliver out the goods supposed to be of contraband nature, he shall be permitted to do it, and the vessel shall not in that case be carried into any port nor further detained, but shall be allowed to proceed on her voyage."

In this case the admitted facts show that, pursuant to orders from the commander of the German cruiser, the master of the Frye undertook to throw overboard the cargo of that vessel, but that before the work of delivering out the cargo was finished the vessel with the cargo was sunk by order of the German commander.

For these reasons, even if it be assumed, as your excellency has done, that the cargo was contraband, your contention that the destruction of the vessel was justified by the provisions of article 13 does not seem to be well founded. The Government of the United States has not thought it necessary in the discussion of this case to go into the question of the contraband or noncontraband character of the cargo. The Imperial German Government has admitted that this question makes no difference so far as its liability for damages is concerned, and the result is the same so far as the justification for the sinking of the vessel is concerned. As shown above, if we assume that the cargo was contraband, the master of the Frye should have been allowed to deliver it out, and the vessel should have been allowed to proceed on her voyage.

On the other hand, if we assume that the cargo was noncontraband, the destruction either of the cargo or the vessel could not be justified in the circumstances of this case under any accepted rule of international law.

Attention is also called to the provisions of article 12 of the treaty of 1785 between the United States and Prussia, which, like article 13 of the treaty of 1799, was continued in force by article 12 of the treaty of 1828. So far as the provisions of article 12 of the treaty of 1785 apply to the question under consideration, they are as follows:

"If one of the contracting parties should be engaged in war with any other power, the free intercourse and commerce of the subjects or citizens of the party remaining neutral with the belligerent powers shall not be interrupted. On the contrary, in that case, as in full peace, the vessels of the neutral party may navigate freely to and from the ports and on the coasts of the belligerent parties, free vessels making free goods, in so much that all things shall be adjudged free which shall be on board any vessel belonging to the neutral party, although such things belong to an enemy of the other."

It seems clear to the Government of the United States, therefore, that whether the cargo of the Frye is regarded as contraband or as noncontraband, the destruction of the vessel was, as stated in my previous communication on this subject, "a violation of the obligations imposed upon the Imperial German Government under existing treaty stipulations between the United States and Prussia."

For these reasons the Government of the United States must disagree with the contention which it understands is now made by the Imperial German Government, that an American vessel carrying contraband may be destroyed without liability or accountability beyond the payment of such compensation for damages as may be fixed by a German prize court. The issue thus presented arises on a disputed interpretation of treaty provisions, the settlement of which requires direct diplomatic discussion between the two Governments and can not properly be based upon the decision of the German prize court, which is in no way conclusive or binding upon the Government of the United States.

Moreover, even if no disputed question of treaty interpretation was involved, the admission by the Imperial German Government of its liability for damages for sinking the vessel would seem to make it unnecessary, so far as this claim is concerned, to ask the prize court to decide "whether the destruction of the ship and cargo was legal, and whether and under what conditions the property sunk was liable to confiscation," which, you state in your note dated June 7, are questions which should be decided by the prize court. In so far as these questions relate to the cargo, they are outside of the present discussion, because, as pointed out in my previous note to you on the subject dated April 30, "the claim under discussion does not include damages for the destruction of the cargo."

The real question between the two Governments is what reparation must be made for a breach of treaty obligations, and that is not a question which falls within the jurisdiction of a prize court.

In my note on the subject, the Government of the United States requested that "full reparation be made by the Imperial German Government for the destruction of the William P. Frye." Reparation necessarily includes an indemnity for the actual pecuniary loss sustained, and the Government of the United States takes this opportunity to assure the Imperial German Government that such an indemnity, if promptly paid, will be accepted as satisfactory reparation, but it does not rest with a prize court to determine what reparation should be made, or what reparation would be satisfactory to the Government of the United States.

Your excellency states in your note of June 7 that in the event the prize court should not grant indemnity in accordance with treaty requirements, the German Government would not hesitate to arrange for equitable indemnity, but it is also necessary that the Government of the United States should be satisfied with the amount of the indemnity, and it would seem to be more appropriate and convenient that an arrangement for equitable indemnity should be agreed upon now, rather than later. The decision of the prize court, even on the question of the amount of indemnity to be paid, would not be binding or conclusive on the Government of the United States.

The Government of the United States also dissents from the view expressed in your note that "there would be no foundation for a claim of the American Government unless the prize courts should not grant indemnity in accordance with the treaty." The claim presented by the American Government is for an indemnity for a violation of a treaty, in distinction from an indemnity in accordance with the treaty, and therefore is a matter for adjustment by direct diplomatic discussion between the two Governments, and is in no way dependent upon the action of a German prize court.

For the reasons above stated the Government of the United States can not recognize the propriety of submitting the claim presented by it on behalf of the owners and captain of the Frye to the German prize court for settlement.

The Government of the United States is not concerned with any proceedings which the Imperial German Government may wish to take on "other claims of neutral and enemy interested parties" which have not been presented by the Government of the United States, but which you state in your note of June 7 make prize court proceedings in this case indispensable, and it does not perceive the necessity for postponing the settlement of the present claim pending the consideration of those other claims by the prize court.

The Government of the United States, therefore, suggests that the Imperial German Government reconsider the subject in the light of these considerations, and, because of the objections against resorting to the prize court, the Government of the United States renews its former suggestion that an effort be made to settle this claim by direct diplomatic negotiations.

LANSING.

(The New York Times, June 29, 1915.)

No. 56. Second German note, July 8, 1915, regarding the loss of American lives and the injury to American commerce incidental to the naval warfare. (See Nos. 46, 50, 51, and 53.)

The undersigned has the honor to make the following reply to his excellency Ambassador Gerard to the note of the 10th ultimo re the impairment of American interests by the German submarine war:

The Imperial Government learned with satisfaction from the note how earnestly the Government of the United States is concerned in seeing the principles of humanity realized in the present war. Also this appeal finds ready echo in Germany, and the Imperial Government is quite willing to permit its statements and decisions in the present case to be governed by the principles of humanity just as it has done always.

The Imperial Government welcomed with gratitude when the American Government, in the note of May 15, itself recalled that Germany had always permitted itself to be governed by the principles of progress and humanity in dealing with the law of maritime war.

Since the time when Frederick the Great negotiated with John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, and Thomas Jefferson the treaty of friendship and commerce of September 9, 1785, between Prussia and the Republic of the West, German and American statesmen have, in fact, always stood together in the struggle for the freedom of the seas and for the protection of peaceable trade.

In the international proceedings which since have been conducted for the regulation of the laws of maritime war, Germany and America have jointly advocated progressive principles, especially the abolishment of the right of capture at sea and the protection of the interests of neutrals.

Even at the beginning of the present war the German Government immediately declared its willingness, in response to proposals of the American Government, to ratify the declaration of London and thereby subject itself in the use of its naval forces to all the restrictions provided therein in favor of neutrals.

Germany likewise has been always tenacious of the principle that war should be conducted against the armed and organized forces of an enemy country, but that the enemy civilian population must be spared as far as possible from the measures of war. The Imperial Government cherishes the definite hope that some way will be found when peace is concluded, or perhaps earlier, to regulate the law of maritime war in a manner guaranteeing the freedom of the seas, and will welcome it with gratitude and satisfaction if it can work hand in hand with the American Government on that occasion.

If in the present war the principles which should be the ideal of the future have been traversed more and more, the longer its duration, the German Government has no guilt therein. It is known to the American Government how Germany's adversaries, by completely paralyzing peaceable traffic between Germany and neutral countries, have aimed from the very beginning and with increasing lack of consideration at the destruction not so much of the armed forces as the life of the German nation, repudiating in doing so all the rules of international law and desregarding all rights of neutrals.

On November 3, 1914, England declared the North Sea a war area, and by planting poorly anchored mines and by the stoppage and capture of vessels, made passage extremely dangerous and difficult for neutral shipping, thereby actually blockading neutral coasts and ports, contrary to all international law. Long before the beginning of submarine war England practically completely intercepted legitimate neutral navigation to Germany also. Thus Germany was driven to a submarine war on trade.

On November 14, 1914, the English premier declared in the House of Commons that it was one of England's principal taske to prevent food for the German population from reaching Germany via neutral ports. Since March 1 England has been taking from neutral ships without further formality all merchandise proceeding to Germany as well as all merchandise coming from Germany, even when neutral property. Just as it was also with the Boers, the German people is now to be given the choice of perishing from starvation with its women and children or of relinquishing its independence.

While our enemies thus loudly and openly proclaimed war without mercy until our utter destruction, we were conducting a war in self-defense for our national existence and for the sake of peace of an assured permanency. We have been obliged to adopt a submarine warfare to meet the declared intentions of our enemies and the method of warfare adopted by them in contravention of international law.

With all its efforts in principle to protect neutral life and property from damage as much as possible, the German Government recognizes unreservedly in its memorandum of February 4 that the interests of neutrals might suffer from the submarine warfare. However, the American Government will also understand and appreciate that in the fight for existence, which has been forced upon Germany by its adversaries and announced by them, it is the sacred duty of the Imperial Government to do all within its power to protect and save the lives of German subjects. If the Imperial Government were derelict in these its duties, it would be guilty before God and history of the violation of those principles of highest humanity which are the foundation of every national existence.

The case of the Lusitania shows with horrible clearness to what jeopardizing of human lives the manner of conducting war employed by our adversaries leads. In the most direct contradiction of international law all distinctions between merchantmen and war vessels have been obliterated by the order to British merchantmen to arm themselves and to ram submarines, and the promise of rewards therefor, and neutrals who use merchantmen as travelers thereby have been exposed in an increasing degree to all the dangers of war.

If the commander of the German submarine which destroyed the Lusitania had caused the crew and passengers to take to the boats before firing a torpedo, this would have meant the sure destruction of his own vessel. After the experiences in sinking much smaller and less seaworthy vessels it was to be expected that a mighty ship like the Lusitania would remain above water long enough, even after the torpedoing, to permit passengers to enter the ship's boats. Circumstances of a very peculiar kind, especially the presence on board of large quantities of highly explosive materials defeated this expectation.

In addition, it may be pointed out that if the Lusitania had been spared, thousands of cases of munitions would have been sent to Germany's enemies and thereby thousands of German mothers and children robbed of breadwinners.

In the spirit of friendship wherewith the German nation has been imbued toward the Union (United States) and its inhabitants since the earliest days of its existence the Imperial Government will always be ready to do all it can during the present war also to prevent the jeopardizing of lives of American citizens.

The Imperial Government, therefore, repeats the assurances that American ships will not be hindered in the prosecution of legitimate shipping and the lives of American citizens in neutral vessels shall not be placed in jeopardy.

In order to exclude any unforeseen dangers to American passenger steamers, made possible in view of the conduct of maritime war by Germany's adversaries, German submarines will be instructed to permit the free and safe passage of such passenger steamers when made recognizable by special markings and notified a reasonable time in advance. The Imperial Government, however, confidently hopes that the American Government will assume to guarantee that these vessels have no contraband on board, details of arrangements for the unhampered passage of these vessels to be agreed upon by the naval authorities of both sides.

In order to furnish adequate facilities for travel across the Atlantic for American citizens, the German Government submits for consideration a proposal to increase the number of available steamers by installing in passenger service a reasonable number of neutral steamers under the American flag, the exact number to be agreed upon under the same condition as the above-mentioned American steamers.

The Imperial Government believes it can assume that in this manner adequte facilities for travel across the Atlantic Ocean can be afforded American citizens. There would, therefore, appear to be no compelling necessity for American citizens to travel to Europe in time of war on ships carrying an enemy flag. In particular the Imperial Government is unable to admit that American citizens can protect an enemy ship through the mere fact of their presence on board.

Germany merely followed England's example when she declared part of the high seas an area of war. Consequently, accidents suffered by neutrals on enemy ships in this area of war can not well be judged differently from accidents to which neutrals are at all times exposed at the seat of war on land, when they betake themselves into dangerous localities in spite of previous warnings. If, however, it should not be possible for the American Government to acquire an adequate number of neutral passenger steamers, the Imperial Government is prepared to interpose no objections to the placing under the American flag by the American Government of four enemy passenger steamers for passenger traffic between North America and England. Assurances of "free and safe" passage for American passenger steamers would then extend to apply under the identical preconditions to these formerly hostile passenger steamers.

The President of the United States has declared his readiness, in a way deserving of thanks, to communicate and suggest proposals to the Government of Great Britain with particular reference to the alteration of maritime war. The Imperial Government will always be glad to make use of the good offices of the President, and hopes that his efforts in the present case, as well as in the direction of the lofty ideal of the freedom of the seas, will lead to an understanding.

The undersigned requests the ambassador to bring the above to the knowledge of the American Government, and avails himself of the opportunity to renew to his excellency the assurance of his most distinguished consideration.

VON JAGOW.

No. 57. Summary of American "caveat," July 14, 1915, against British prize-court procedure. (See No. 63.)

(The Secretary of State to the American ambassador at London.)

In view of differences which are understood to exist between the two Governments as to the principles of law applicable in prize-court proceedings in cases involving American interests, and in order to avoid any misunderstanding as to the attitude of the United States in regard to such proceedings, you are instructed to inform the British Government that, in so far as the interests of American citizens are concerned, the Government of the United States will insist upon their rights under the principles and rules of international law, as hitherto established, governing neutral trade in time of war, without limitation or impairment by orders in council or other municipal legislation by the British Government, and will not recognize the validity of prize-court proceedings taken under restraints imposed by British municipal law in derogation of the rights of American citizens under international law. (The New York Times, Aug. 4, 1915.)

No. 58. Paraphrase of American note, July 15, 1915, protesting against the seizure of the cargo of the Nechcs.

Ambassador Page is informed that it has been brought to the attention of the department that the steamship Neches, of American register, sailing from Rotterdam for the United States, carrying a general cargo, after being detained at the Downs, was brought to London, where it was required by the British authorities to discharge cargo, the property of American citizens.

It appears that the ground advanced to sustain this action is that the goods originated, in part at least, in Belgium, and fall, therefore, within the provisions of paragraph 4 of the order in council of March 11, which stipulates that every merchant vessel sailing from a port other than a German port, carrying goods of enemy origin, may be required to discharge such goods in a British or allied port.

Ambassador Page is instructed in this case to reiterate the position of the Government of the United States as set forth in the department's instruction of March 30, 1915, with respect to the order in council mentioned, the international invalidity of which the Government of the United States regards as plainly illustrated by the present instance of the seizure of American-owned goods passing from the neutral port of Rotterdam to a neutral port of the United States, merely because the goods came originally from territory in the possession of an enemy of Great Britain.

Mr. Page is also instructed to inform the foreign office that the legality of this seizure can not be admitted and that, in the view of the Government of the United States, it violates the right of the citizens of one neutral to trade with those of another, as well as with those of belligerents, except in contraband or in violation of a legal blockade of an enemy seaport; and that the right of American owners of goods to bring them out of Holland, in due course, in neutral ships must be insisted upon by the United States, even though such goods may have come originally from the territories of enemies of Great Britain. He is directed further to insist upon the desire of this Government that goods taken from the Nechcs, which are the property of American citizens, should be expeditously released to be forwarded to their destination, and to request that he be advised of the British Government's intended course in this matter at the earliest moment convenient to that Government. (The New York Times, Aug. 4, 1915.)

No. 59. German memorandum, July 15, 1915, in regard to the Nebraskan.

The German Government received from newspaper reports the intelligence that the American steamer Nebraskan had been damaged by a mine or torpedo on the southwest coast of Ireland. It therefore started a thorough investigation of the case without delay, and from the result of the investigation it has become convinced that the damage to the Nebraskan was caused by an attack by a submarine.

On the evening of May 25 last the submarine met a steamer bound westward without a flag and no neutral markings on her freeboard, about 65 nautical miles west of Fastnet Rock. No appliance of any kind for the illumination of the flag or markings was to be seen. In the twilight, which had already set in, the name of the steamer was not visible from the submarine. Since the commander of the submarine was obliged to assume from his wide experience in the area of maritime war that only English steamers, and no neutral steamers, traversed the war area without flag and markings, he attacked the vessel with a torpedo, in the conviction that he had an enemy vessel before him. Some time after the shot the commander saw that the vessel had in the meantime hoisted the American flag. As a consequence he, of course, refrained from any further attack. Since the vessel remained afloat, he had no occasion to concern himself further with the boats which had been launched.

It results from this that, without a doubt, that attack on the steamer Nebraskan was not meant for the American flag, nor is it traceable to any fault on the part of the commander of the German submarine, but is to be considered an unfortunate accident. The German Government expresses its regret at the occurrence to the Government of the United States of America and declares its readiness to make compensation for the damage thereby sustained by American citizens. (The New York Times, July 16, 1915.)

No. 60. Third American note, July 21, 1915, regarding the loss of American lives and the injury to American commerce incidental to the naval warfare. (See Nos. 46, 50, 51, 53, 56.)

You are instructed to deliver textually the following note to the minister for foreign affairs:

The note of the Imperial German Government, dated the 8th of July, 1915, has received the careful consideration of the Government of the United States, and it regrets to be obliged to say that it has found it very unsatisfactory, because it fails to meet the real differences between the two Governments, and indicates no way in which the accepted principles of law and humanity may be applied in the grave matter in controversy, but proposes, on the contrary, arrangements for a partial suspension of those principles which virtually set them aside.

The Government of the United States notes with satisfaction that the Imperial German Government recognizes without reservation the validity of the principles insisted on in the several communications which this Government has addressed to the Imperial German Government with regard to its announcement of a war zone and the use of submarines against merchantmen on the high sea—the principle that the high seas are free; that the character and cargo of a merchantman must first be ascertained before she can lawfully be seized or destroyed; and that the lives of noncombatants may in no case be put in jeopardy unless the vessel resists or seeks to escape after being summoned to submit to examination, for a belligerent act of retaliation is per se an act beyond the law, and the defense of an act as retaliatory is an admission that it is illegal.

The Government of the United States is, however, keenly disappointed to find that the Imperial German Government regards itself as in large degree exempt from the obligation to observe these principles, even where neutral vessels are concerned, by what it believes the policy and practice of the Government of Great Britain to be in the present war with regard to neutral commerce. The Imperial German Government will readily understand that the Government of the United States can not discuss the policy of the Government of Great Britain with regard to neutral trade except with that Government itself, and that it must regard the conduct of other belligerent Governments as irrelevant to any discussion with the Imperial German Government of what this Government regards as grave and unjustifiable violations of the rights of American citizens by German naval commanders.

Illegal and inhuman acts, however justifiable they may be thought to be, against an enemy who is believed to have acted in contravention of law and humanity, are manifestly indefensible when they deprive neutrals of their acknowledged rights, particularly when they violate the right to life itself. If a belligerent can not retaliate against an enemy without injuring the lives of neutrals, as well as their property, humanity, as well as justice and a due regard for the dignity of neutral powers, should dictate that the practice be discontinued. If persisted in it would in such circumstances constitute an unpardonable offense against the sovereignty of the neutral nation affected.

The Government of the United States is not unmindful of the extraordinary conditions created by this war or of the radical alterations of circumstance and method of attack produced by the use of instrumentalities of naval warfare which the nations of the world can not have had in view when the existing rules of international law were formulated, and it is ready to make every reasonable allowance for these novel and unexpected aspects of war at sea; but it can not consent to abate any essential or fundamental right of its people because of a mere alteration of circumstances. The rights of neutrals in time of war are based upon principle, not upon expediency, and the principles are immutable. It is the duty and obligation of belligerents to find a way to adapt the new circumstances to them.

The events of the past two months have clearly indicated that it is possible and practicable to conduct such submarine operations as have characterized the activity of the Imperial German Navy within the so-called war zone in substantial accord with the accepted practices of regulated warfare. The whole world has looked with interest and increasing satisfaction at the demonstration of that possibility by German naval commanders. It is manifestly possible, therefore, to lift the whole practice of submarine attack above the criticism which it has aroused and remove the chief causes of offense.

In view of the admission of illegality made by the Imperial Government when it pleaded the right of retaliation in defense of its acts, and in view of the manifest possibility of conforming to the established rules of naval warfare, the Government of the United States can not believe that the Imperial Government will longer refrain from disavowing the wanton act of its naval commander in sinking the Lusitania or from offering reparation for the American lives lost, so far as reparation can be made for a needless destruction of human life by an illegal act.

The Government of the United States, while not indifferent to the friendly spirit in which it is made, can not accept the suggestion of the Imeperial German Government that certain vessels be designated and agreed upon which shall be free on the seas now illegally proscribed. The very agreement would, by implication, subject other vessels to illegal attack, and would be a curtailment and therefore an abandonment of the principles for which the Government contends, and which in times of calmer counsels every nation would concede as of course.

The Government of the United States and the Imperial German Government are contending for the same great object; have long stood together in urging the very principles upon which the Government of the United States now so solemnly insists. They are both contending for the freedom of the seas. The Government of the United States will continue to contend for that freedom, from whatever quarter violated, without compromise and at any cost. It invites the practical cooperation of the Imperial German Government at this time, when cooperation may accomplish most and this great common object be most strikingly and effectively achieved.

The Imperial German Government expresses the hope that this object may be in some measure accomplished even before the present war ends. It can be. The Government of the United States not only feels obliged to insist upon it, by whomsoever violated or ignored, in the protection of its own citizens, but is also deeply interested in seeing it made practicable between the belligerents themselves, and holds itself ready at any time to act as the common friend who may be privileged to suggest a way.

In the meantime, the very value which this Government sets upon the long and unbroken friendship between the people and Government of the United States and the people and Government of the German Nation impels it to press very solemnly upon the Imperial German Government the necessity for a scrupulous observance of neutral rights in this critical matter. Friendship itself prompts it to say to the Imperial Government that repetition by the commanders of German naval vessels of acts in contravention of those rights must be regarded by the Government of the United States, when they affect American citizens, as deliberately unfriendly.

LANSING.

(The New York Times, July 24, 1915.)

No. 61. British note, July 23, 1915, replying to the American note of March 30, in regard to British violation of neutral rights (No. 36). (See Nos. 54 and 36.)

1. On the 2d of April your excellency handed to me a copy of a communication containing the criticisms of the United States Government on the measures we have been constrained to take on account of the menace to peaceful commerce resulting from the German submarine policy. This communication has received the most careful consideration of His Majesty's Government.

2. I fully appreciate the friendly spirit and the candor which are shown in the communication, and, replying in the same spirit, I trust that I may be able to convince your excellency, and also the administration at Washington, that the measures we have announced are not only reasonable and necessary in themselves, but constitute no more than an adaptation of the old principles of blockade to the peculiar circumstances with which we are confronted.

3. I need scarcely dwell on the obligation incumbent upon the allies to take every step in their power to overcome their common enemy, in view of the shocking violation of the recognized rules and principles of civilized warfare of which he has been guilty during the present struggle. Your excellency's attention has already been drawn to some of these proceedings in the memorandum which I handed to you on the 19th February. Since that time Lord Bryce's report, based on evidence carefully sifted by legal experts, describing the atrocities committed in Belgium; the poisoning of wells in German Southwest Africa; the use of poisonous gases against the troops in Flanders; and, finally, the sinking of the Lusitania without any opportunity to passengers and noncombatants to save their lives, have shown how indispensable it is that we should leave unused no justifiable method of defending ourselves.

4. Your excellency will remember that in my notes of the 13th and 15th March I explained that the allied Governments intended to meet the German attempt to stop all supplies of every kind from leaving or entering British or French ports by themselves intercepting goods going to or from Germany. I read the communication from your excellency's Government, not as questioning the necessity for our taking all the steps open to us to cripple the enemy's trade, but as directed solely to the question of the legitimacy of the particular measures adopted.

5. In the various notes which I have received from your excellency the right of a belligerent to establish a blockade of the enemy ports is admitted, a right which has obviously no value save in so far as it gives power to a belligerent to cut off the sea-borne exports and imports of his enemy. The contention which I understand the United States Government now puts forward is that if a belligerent is so circumstanced that his commerce can pass through adjacent neutral ports as easily as through ports in his own territory, his opponent has no right to interfere, and must restrict his measures of blockade in such a manner as to leave such avenues of commerce still open to his adversary.

This is a contention which His Majesty's Government feel unable to accept and which seems to them unsustainable, either in point of law or upon principles of international equity. They are unable to admit that a belligerent violates any fundamental principle of international law by applying a blockade in such a way as to cut off the enemy's commerce with foreign countries through neutral ports if the circumstances render such an application of the principles of blockade the only means of making it effective. The Government of the United States, indeed, intimates its readiness to take into account "the great changes which have occurred in the conditions and means of naval warfare since the rules hitherto governing legal blockade were formulated," and recognizes that "the form of close blockade, with its cordon of ships in the immediate offing of the blockaded ports, is no longer practicable in the face of an enemy possessing the means and opportunity to make an effective defense by the use of submarines, mines, and aircraft."

6. The only question, then, which can arise in regard to the measures resorted to for the purpose of carrying out a blockade upon these extended lines is whether, to use your excellency's words, they "conform to the spirit and principles of the essence of the rules of war"; and we shall be content to apply this test to the action which we have taken, in so far as it has necessitated interference with neutral commerce.

7. It may be noted in this connection that at the time of the Civil War the United States found themselves under the necessity of declaring a blockade of some 3,000 miles of coast line, a military operation for which the number of vessels available was at first very small. It was vital to the cause of the United States in that great struggle that they should be able to cut off the trade of the Southern States. The Confederate armies were dependent on supplies from overseas, and these supplies could not be obtained without exporting the cotton wherewith to pay for them.

To cut off this trade the United States could only rely upon a blockade. The difficulties confronting the Federal Government were in part due to the fact that neighboring neutral territory afforded convenient centers from which contraband could be introduced into the territory of their enemies and from which blockade running could be facilitated. Your excellency will no doubt remember how, in order to meet this new difficulty, the old principles relating to contraband and blockade were developed, and the doctrine of continuous voyage was applied and enforced, under which goods destined for the enemy territory were intercepted before they reached the neutral ports from which they were to be reexported.

8. The difficulties which imposed upon the United States the necessity of reshaping some of the old rules are somewhat akin to those with which the allies are now faced in dealing with the trade of their enemy. Adjacent to Germany are various neutral countries which afford her convenient opportunities for carrying on her trade with foreign countries. Her own territories are covered with a network of railways and waterways, which enable her commerce to pass as conveniently through ports in such neutral countries as through her own. A blockade limited to enemy ports would leave open routes by which every kind of German commerce could pass almost as easily as through the ports in her own territory. Rotterdam is, indeed, the nearest outlet for some of the industrial districts of Germany.

9. As a counterpoise to the freedom with which one belligerent may send his commerce across a neutral country without compromising its neutrality, the other belligerent may fairly claim to intercept such commerce before it has reached, or after it has left, the neutral State, provided, of course, that he can establish that the commerce with which he interferes is the commerce of his enemy and not commerce which is bona fide destined for or proceeding from the neutral State. It seems, accordingly, that if it be recognized that a blockade is in certain cases the appropriate method of intercepting the trade of an enemy country, and if the blockade can only become effective by extending it to enemy commerce passing through neutral ports, such an extension is defensible and in accordance with principles which have met with general acceptance.

10. To the contention that such action is not directly supported by written authority, it may be replied that it is the business of writers on international law to formulate existing rules rather than to offer suggestions for their adaptation to altered circumstances, and your excellency will remember the unmeasured terms in which a group of prominent international lawyers of all nations condemned the doctrine which had been laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Springbok, a doctrine upheld by the Claims Commission at Washington in 1873. But the United States and the British Government took a broader view and looked below the surface at the underlying purpose, and the Government of this country, whose nationals were the sufferers by the extension and development of the old methods of blockade made by the United States during the Civil War, abstained from all protest against the decisions by which the ships and their cargoes were condemned.

11. What is really important in the general interest is that adaptations of the old rules should not be made unless they are consistent with the general principles upon which an admitted belligerent right is based. It is also essential that all unnecessary injury to neutrals should be avoided. With these conditions, it may be safely affirmed that the steps we are taking to intercept commodities on their way to and from Germany fully comply. We are interfering with no goods with which we should not be entitled to interfere by blockade if the geographical position and the conditions of Germany at present were such that her commerce passed through her own ports. We are taking the utmost possible care not to interfere with commerce genuinely destined for or proceeding from neutral countries. Furthermore, we have tempered the severity with which our measures might press upon neutrals by not applying the rule, which was invariable in the old form of blockade, that ships and goods on their way to or from the blockaded area are liable to condemnation.

12. The communication made by the United States embassy on April 2 describes as a novel and quite unprecedented feature of the blockade that it embraces many neutral ports and coasts and has the effect of barring access to them. It does not appear that our measures can be properly so described. If we are successful in the efforts we are making to distinguish between the commerce of neutral and enemy countries, there will be no substantial interference with the trade of neutral ports, except in so far as they constitute ports of access to and exit from the enemy territory. There are at this moment many neutral ports which it would be mere affectation to regard as offering facilities only for the commerce of the neutral country in which they are situated, and the only commerce with which we propose to interfere is that of the enemy who seeks to make use of such ports for the purposes of transit to or from his own country.

13. One of the earlier passages in your excellency's memorandum was to the effect that the sovereignty of neutral nations in time of war suffers no diminution, except in so far as the practice and consent of civilized nations have limited it "by the recognition of certain now clearly determined rights" which it is considered may be exercised by nations at war, and these it defines as the right of capture and condemnation for unneutral service, for the carriage of contraband, and for breach of blockade. I may, however, be permitted to point out that the practice of nations on each of the three subjects mentioned has not at any time been uniform or clearly determined, nor has the practice of any maritime nation always been consistent.

14. There are various particulars in which the exact method of carrying a blockade into effect has from time to time varied. The need of a public notification, the requisite standard of effectiveness, the locality of the blockading squadrons, the right of the individual ship to a preliminary warning that the blockade is in force, and the penalty to be inflicted on a captured blockade runner, are all subjects on which different views have prevailed in different countries and in which the practice of particular countries has been altered from time to time. The one principle which is fundamental and has obtained universal recognition is that by means of blockade a belligerent is entitled to cut off, by effective means, the sea-borne commerce of his enemy.

15. It is the same with contraband. The underlying principle is well established, but as to the details there has been a wide variety of views. As for unneutral service—the very term is of such recent introduction that many writers of repute on international law do not mention it—it is possible, in the view of His Majesty's Government in these circumstances, to maintain that the right of a belligerent to intercept the commerce of his enemy is limited in the way suggested in your excellency's communication.

16. There are certain subsidiary matters dealt with in your excellency's communication to which I think it well to refer. Among these may be mentioned your citation of the declaration of Paris, due, no doubt, to the words which occur in the memorandum sent by me to your excellency on the 1st of March, wherein it was stated that the allied Governments would hold themselves free to detain and take into port ship carrying goods of presumed enemy destination, ownership, or origin, and to our announcement that vessels might be required to discharge goods of enemy ownership as well as those of enemy origin or destination.

17. It is not necessary to discuss the extent to which the second rule of the declaration of Paris is affected by these measures or whether it could be held to apply at all as between Great Britain and the United States. In actual practice, however, we are not detaining goods on the sole ground that they are the property of an enemy. The purpose of the measures we are taking is to intercept commerce on its way from and to the enemy country. There are many cases in which proof that the goods were enemy property would afford strong evidence that they were of enemy origin or enemy destination, and it is only in such cases that we are detaining them. Where proof of enemy ownership would afford no evidence of such origin or destination we are not in practice detaining the goods.

18. His Majesty's Government have been gratified to observe that the measures which they are enforcing have had no detrimental effect on the commerce of the United States. Figures of recent months show that the increased opportunities afforded by the war for American commerce have more than compensated for the loss of the German and Austrian markets.

19. I trust that in the light of the above explanations it will be realized that the measures to which we have resorted have been not only justified by the exigencies of the case, but can be defended as in accordance with general principles which have commended themselves to the Governments of both countries. I am glad to be able to assure your excellency that we shall continue to apply these measures with every desire to occasion the least possible amount of inconvenience to persons engaged in legitimate commerce.

I have, etc., E. GREY.

No. 62. Third German note, July 30, 1915, in regard to the William P. Frye. (See Nos. 37, 39, 43, 52, 55.)

The undersigned has the honor to inform his excellency, Mr. James W. Gerard, ambassador of the United States of America, in reply to the note of the 26th ultimo, foreign office No. 3990, on the subject of the sinking of the American merchant vessel William P. Frye by the German auxiliary cruiser Prince Eitel Friedrich, that the points of view brought out in the note have been carefully examined by the Imperial German Government. This examination has led to the following conclusions:

The Government of the United States believes that it is incumbent upon it to take the position that the treaty rights to which America is entitled, as contained in article 12 of the Prussian-American treaty of amity and commerce of September 10, 1785, and in article 13 of the Prussian-American treaty of amity and commerce of July 11, 1799, were violated by the sinking of the William P. Frye. It interprets these articles as meaning that a merchantman of the neutral contracting party carrying contraband can not in any circumstances be destroyed by a warship of the belligerent contracting party, and that the sinking of the William P. Frye was, therefore, in violation of the treaty, even if her cargo should have consisted of contraband, which it leaves outside of the discussion.

The German Government can not accept this view. It insists as heretofore that the commander of the German auxiliary cruiser acted in the legal exercise of the right of control of trade in contraband enjoyed by warships of belligerent nations, and that the treaty stipulations mentioned merely oblige the German Government to make compensation for the damage sustained by the American citizens concerned.

It is not disputed by the American Government that according to general principles of international law a belligerent is authorized in sinking neutral vessels under almost any conditions for carrying contraband. As is well known, these principles were laid down in articles 49 and 50 of the declaration of London and were recognized at that time by the duly empowered delegates of all the nations which participated in the conference, including the American delegates, to the declarative of existing international law (see preliminary clause of the declaration of London); moreover, at the beginning of the present war the American Government proposed to the belligerent nations to ratify the declaration of London and give its provisions formal validity also.

The German Government has already explained in its note of April 4 last for what reason it considers that the conditions justifying the sinking under international law were present in the case of the William P. Frye. The cargo consisted of conditional contraband, the destination of which for the hostile armed forces was to be presumed under the circumstances; no proof to overcome this presumption has been furnished. More than half the cargo of the vessel was contraband, so that the vessel was liable to confiscation. The attempt to bring the American vessel into a German port would have greatly imperiled the German vessel in the given situation of the war, and at any rate practically defeated the success of her further operations. Thus the authority for sinking the vessel was given according to general principles of international law.

There only remains, then, to be examined the question how far the Prussian-American treaty stipulations modify these principles of international law.

In this connection, article 12 of the treaty of 1785 provides that in the event of a war between one of the contracting parties with another power the free commerce and intercourse of the nationals of the party remaining neutral with the belligerent powers shall not be interrupted, but that on the contrary the vessel of the neutral party may navigate freely to and from the ports of the belligerent power even neutralizing enemy goods on board thereof. However, this article merely formulates general rules for the freedom of maritime intercourse and leaves the question of contraband untouched; the specific stipulations on this point are contained in the following article, which is materially identical with article 13 of the treaty of 1799 now in force.

The plain intention of article 13 is to establish a reasonable compromise between the military interests of the belligerent contracting party and the commercial interests of the neutral party. On the one hand the belligerent party is to have the right to prevent the transportation of war supplies to his adversaries even when carried on vessels of the neutral party; on the other hand, the commerce and navigation of the neutral party is to be interfered with as little as possible by the measure necessary for such prevention, and reasonable compensation is to be paid for any inconvenience or damage which may nevertheless ensue from the proceedings of the belligerent party.

Article 13 recites the following means whereby the belligerent party can prevent the vessels of the neutral party from carrying war supplies to his adversary. The detention of the ship and cargo for such length of time as the belligerent may think necessary; furthermore, the taking over of the war stores for his own use, paying the full value of the same as ascertained at the place of destination. The right of sinking is not mentioned in the treaty, and is, therefore, neither expressly permitted nor expressly prohibited, so that on this point the party stipulations must be supplemented by the general rules of international law. From the meaning and spirit of the treaty it really appears out of the question that it was intended to expect of the belligerent that he should permit a vessel loaded with contraband—for example, a shipment of arms and ammunition of decisive importance for the outcome of the war—to proceed unhindered to his enemy when circumstances forbid the carrying of the [omissions] into port, if the general rules of international law allow sinking of the vessel.

The remaining stipulations of article 13 must likewise be considered in this light; they provide that the captain of a vessel stopped shall be allowed to proceed on his voyage if he delivers out the contraband to the warship which stopped his vessel. For such delivering out can not, of course, be considered when the ensuing loss of time imperils either the warship herself or the success of her other operations. In the case of the William P. Frye the German commander at first tried to have matters settled by the delivery of contraband, but convinced himself of the impracticability of this attempt in that it would expose his ship to attack by whatever superior force of enemy war vessels pursuing him, and was accordingly obliged to determine upon the sinking of the Frye. Thus he did not exceed on this point the limits to which he was bound by article 13.

However, article 13 asserts itself here to the extent that it founds the obligation to compensate the American citizens affected, whereas according to the general rules of international law the belligerent party does not need to grant compensation for a vessel lawfully sunk. For if by article 13 the mere exercise of right of highways makes the belligerent liable for compensation, this must apply a fortiori to the exercise of the right of sinking.

The question whether the German commander acted legally was primarily a subject for the consideration of the German prize courts, according to general principles of international law as laid down, also in article 1 of The Hague Convention for the establishment of an international prize court and in article 51 of the Declaration of London. The German Government consequently laid the case of the William P. Frye before the competent prize court at Hamburg, as was stated in its note of the 7th ultimo. This court found by its judgment of the 10th instant that the cargo of the American vessel William P. Frye was contraband; that the vessel could not be carried into port, and that the sinking was therefore justified; at the same time the court expressly recognized the validity of the Prussian-American treaty stipulations severally [omissions] model for the relations between the German Empire and America, so that the sinking of the ship and cargo, so far as American property, makes the German Empire liable for indemnity. The prize court was unable to fix the indemnity itself, since it had no data before it, failing the receipt of the necessary details from the parties interested.

It will now be necessary to settle these points in a different way. The German Government suggests as the simplest way that each of the two Governments designate an expert and that the two experts jointly fix the amount of indemnity for the vessel and any American property which may have been sunk with her. The German Government will promptly pay the amount of indemnity thus ascertained; it expressly declares, however, reverting to what has been stated above, that this payment does not constitute satisfaction for the violation of American treaty rights, but a duty or policy of this Government founded on the existing treaty stipulations.

Should the American Government not agree to this manner of settling the matter, the German Government is prepared to submit the difference of opinion as being a question of the interpretation of the existing treaties between Germany and the United States to the tribunal at The Hague, pursuant to article 38 of The Hague Convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

The undersigned begs to suggest that the ambassador bring the above to the attention of his Government, and avails himself, etc.

VON JAGOW.

No. 63. British note, July 31, 1915, replying to No. 57. (See No. 57.)

YOUR EXCELLENCY: (1) I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the note dated 16th inst., in which you were good enough to communicate to me for the information of His Majesty's Government the opinion held by the Government of the United States, that, in view of differences which they understand to exist between the two countries as to the principles of law applicable in cases before the prize court, they could not recognize the validity of proceedings taken in His Majesty's prize court in derogation of the rights of citizens of the United States.

(2) I do not understand to what divergence of views as to the principles of law applicable in cases before the prize court the Government of the United States refers, for I am not aware of any differences existing between the two countries as to the principles of law applicable in cases before such courts.

(3) British prize courts, according to the ancient form of commission under which they sit, are to determine cases which come before them according to the course of admiralty and the law of nations and the statutes of rules and regulations for the time being in force in that behalf.

As to the principles applied by the American prize courts, I note that in the case of the Amy Warwick (2 Sprague, 123) it was held that prize courts are subject to the instructions of their own sovereign. In the absence of such instructions, their jurisdiction and rules of decision are to be ascertained by reference to the known powers of such tribunals and the principles by which they are governed under the public law and the practice of nations. It would appear, therefore, that the principles applied by the prize courts of the two countries are identical.

(4) As illustrating further the attitude adopted by the judges of British prize courts toward these two sources of law, the municipal legislation of its sovereign on the one hand and the principles of international law on the other, I should like to refer your excellency to a classical passage in the judgment of Lord Stowell, in the case of the Fox, in which that famous judge observed in the course of the discussion:

"A question has been stated: What would be the duty of the court under orders in council that were repugnant to the law of nations? It has been contended on one side that the court would, at all events, be bound to enforce the orders in council, on the other that the court would be bound to apply the rule of the law of nations adapted to the particular case, in disregard of the orders in council.

"This court is bound to administer the law of nations to the subjects of other countries in the different relations in which they may be placed toward this country and its Government. That is what others have a right to demand for their subjects, and to complain if they receive it not. This is its unwritten law, evidenced in the course of its decisions and collected from the common usage of civilized States. At the same time it is strictly true that by the constitution of this country the King in council possesses legislative rights over this court and has power to issue orders and instructions which it is bound to obey and enforce; and these constitute the written law of this court.

"These two propositions, that the court is bound to administer the law of nations and that it is bound to enforce the King's orders in council, are not at all inconsistent with each other, because these orders and instructions are presumed to conform themselves, under the given circumstances, to the principles of its unwritten law. They are either directory applications of those principles to the cases indicated in them—cases which, with all the facts and circumstances belonging to them and which constitute their legal character, could be but imperfectly known to the court itself; or they are positive regulations, consistent with these principles, applying to matters which require more exact and definite rules than those general principles are capable of furnishing.

"The constitution of this court, relatively to the legislative power of the King in council, is analogous to that of the courts of common law relatively to that of the Parliament of this Kingdom. These courts have their unwritten law, the approved reasons, principles of natural reason and justice; they have likewise the written or statute law in acts of Parliament, which are directory applications of the same principles to particular subjects or positive regulations consistent with them upon matters which would remain too much at large if they were left to the imperfect information which the courts could extract from mere general speculations.

"What would be the duty of the individuals who preside in these courts if required to enforce an act of Parliament which contradicted those principles is a question which, I presume, they would not entertain a priori because they will not entertain a priori the supposition that any such will arise. In like manner this court will not let itself loose into speculations as to what would be its duty under such an emergency; because it can not, without extreme indecency, presume that any such emergency will happen. And it is the less disposed to entertain them because its own observation and experience attest the general conformity of such orders and instructions to its principles of unwritten law."

(5) The above passage has recently been quoted and adopted by the President of the prize court in the case of the Zamora, in which Sir S. Evans said: "I make bold to express the hope and belief that the nations of the world need not be apprehensive that orders in council will emanate from the Government of this country in such violation of the acknowledged laws of nations that it is conceivable that our prize tribunals, holding the law of nations in reverence, would be called upon to disregard and refuse obedience to the provisions of such orders."

(6) In the note which I handed to your excellency on the 23d of July, I endeavored to convince the Government of the United States, and I trust with success, that the measures that we have felt ourselves compelled to adopt, in consequence of the numerous acts committed by our enemies in violation of the laws of war and the dictates of humanity, are consistent with the principles of international law. The legality of these measures has not yet formed the subject of a decision of the prize court; but I wish to take this opportunity of reminding your excellency that it is open to any United States citizen whose claim is before the prize court to contend that any order in council which may affect his claim is inconsistent with the principles of international law, and is, therefore, not binding upon the court. If the prize court declines to accept his contentions, and if, after such a decision has been upheld on appeal by the judicial committee of His Majesty's privy council, the Government of the United States of America consider that there is serious ground for holding that the decision is incorrect and infringes the rights of their citizens, it is open to them to claim that it should be subjected to review by an international tribunal.

(7) This principle, that the decisions of the national prize courts may properly be subjected to international review, was conceded by Great Britain in article 7 of the Jay treaty of 1793 and by the United States of America under the treaty of Washington of 1871. Your excellency will no doubt remember that certain cases (collectively known as the "Matamoros cases") were submitted to the commission established under articles 12–17 of the treaty of Washington. In each of these cases proceedings in prize had been instituted in the prize courts of the United States, and in each case the judgment of the Supreme Court, the court of last resort in cases of prizes, had been obtained. The United States filed a demurrer in these cases, alleging that, as they had been heard by the prize courts of the United States of original and appellate jurisdiction, the decision of the appellate court was final, and no claim based upon it could be made before the commission. The demurrer was unanimously overruled and the cases heard, and the agent of the United States, in his reports of the proceedings of the commission, stated that he, personally, maintained no doubt of the jurisdiction of the commission as an international tribunal to review the decisions of the prize courts of the United States where the parties alleging themselves aggrieved had prosecuted their claims by appeals to the court of last resort; as this jurisdiction, however, had been sometimes questioned, he deemed it desirable that a formal adjudication by the commission should be held upon this question.

(8) The same principle was accepted both by the United States Government and His Majesty's Government in 1907 in connection with the proposed establishment of an international prize court, although certain constitutional difficulties have led the United States Government to propose that the right of recourse to the international prize court in connection with a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States should take the form of a direct claim for compensation.

(9) It is clear, therefore, that both the United States Government and His Majesty's Government have adopted the principle that the decisions of a national prize court may be open to review if it is held in the prize court and in the judicial committee of the privy council, on appeal, that the orders and instructions issued by His Majesty's Government in matters relating to prize are in harmony with the principles of international law; and, should the Government of the United States unfortunately feel compelled to maintain a contrary view, His Majesty's Government will be prepared to concert with the United States Government in order to decide upon the best way of applying the above principle to the situation which would then have arisen. I trust, however, that the defense of our action, which I have already communicated to your excellency, and the willingness of His Majesty's Government (which has been shown in so many instances) to make reasonable concessions to American interests, will prevent the necessity for such action arising.

(10) In any case I trust that the explanations given above will remove the misapprehension under which I can not but feel the Government of the United States are laboring as to the principles applied by British prize courts in dealing with the cases which come before them.

I have, etc.,

No. 64. British note, July 31, 1915, replying to No. 58.

The note which your excellency addressed to me on the 17th instant respecting the detention of the cargo of the steamship Neches has, I need hardly say, received the careful attention of His Majesty's Government.

The note which I had the honor to send to your excellency on the 23d instant has already explained the view of His Majesty's Government on the legal aspect of the question, though it was prepared before your excellency's communication of the 17th had been received, and, pending consideration by the Government of the United States of the views and arguments set forth in the British note of the 23d, it is unnecessary for me to say more on the question of right or of law.

There is, however, one general observation that seems relevant to the note from your excellency's respecting the cargo of the Neches.

It is the practice of the German Government, in the waters through which the Neches was passing, to sink neutral as well as British merchant vessels, irrespective of the destination of the vessel or origin of the cargo, and without proper regard or provision for the safety of passengers or crews, many of whom have lost their lives in consequence. There can be no question that this action is contrary to the recognized and settled rules of international law, as well as to the principles of humanity.

His Majesty's Government, on the other hand, have adhered to the rule of visit and search, and have observed the obligation to bring into port and submit to a prize court any ships or cargoes with regard to which they think they have a good case for detention or for condemnation as contraband.

His Majesty's Government are not aware, except from the published correspondence between the United States and Germany, to what extent reparation has been claimed from Germany by neutrals for loss of ships, lives, and cargoes, nor how far these acts have been the subject even of protest by the neutral Governments concerned.

While those acts of the German Government continue, it seems neither reasonable nor just that His Majesty's Government should be pressed to abandon the rights claimed in the British note of the 23d and to allow goods from Germany to pass freely through waters effectively patroled by British ships of war.

If, however, it be alleged that, in particular cases and special circumstances, hardships may be inflicted on citizens of neutral countries, His Majesty's Government are ready in such cases to examine the facts in a spirit of consideration for the interest of neutrals, and in this spirit they are prepared to deal with the cargo of the Neches, to which your excellency has called attention, if it is held that the particular circumstances of this case fall within this category.

No. 65. Fourth American note, August 16, 1915, in regard to the William P. Frye. (See Nos. 37, 39, 43, 52, 55, 62.)

You are instructed to present the following note to the German minister for foreign affairs:

Under instructions from my Government, I have the honor to inform your excellency, in reply to your note of July 30 in regard to the claim for reparation for the sinking of the William P. Frye, that the Government of the United States learns with regret that the objections urged by it against the submission of this case to the prize court for decision have not commended themselves to the Imperial German Government, and it equally regrets that the reasons presented by the Imperial German Government for submitting this case to the prize court have failed to remove the objections of the Government of the United States to the adoption of that course. As this disagreement has been reached after the full presentation of the views of both Governments in our previous correspondence, a further exchange of views on the questions in dispute would doubtless be unprofitable, and the Government of the United States therefore welcomes your excellency's suggestion that some other way should be found for settling this case.

The two methods of settlement proposed as alternative suggestions in your excellency's note have been given careful consideration, and it is believed that if they can be combined so that they may both be adopted they will furnish a satisfactory basis for the solution of the questions at issue.

The Government of the United States has already expressed its desire that the question of the amount of indemnity to be paid by the Imperial German Government under its admitted liability for the losses of the owners and captain on account of the destruction of the Frye should be settled by diplomatic negotiation, and it entirely concurs with the suggestion of the Imperial German Government that the simplest way would be to agree, as proposed in your note, "that each of the two Governments designate an expert and that the two experts jointly fix the amount of indemnity for the vessel and any American property which may have been sunk with her," to be paid by the Imperial German Government when ascertained as stated in your note. It is assumed that the arrangement will include some provision for calling in an umpire in case the experts fail to agree.

The Government of the United States notes that your suggestion is made with the express reservation that a payment under this arrangement would not constitute an admission that American treaty rights had been violated, but would be regarded by the Imperial German Government merely as fulfilling a duty or policy founded on existing treaty stipulations. A payment made on this understanding would be entirely acceptable to the Government of the United States, provided that the acceptance of such payment should likewise be understood to be without prejudice to the contention of the Government of the United States that the sinking of the Frye was without legal justification, and provided also that an arrangement can be agreed upon for the immediate submission to arbitration of the question of legal justification in so far as it involves the interpretation of existing treaty stipulations.

There can be no difference of opinion between the two Governments as to the desirability of having this question of the true intent and meaning of their treaty stipulations determined without delay, and to that end the Government of the United States proposes that the alternative suggestion of the Imperial German Government also be adopted, so that this question of treaty interpretation can be submitted forthwith to arbitration, pursuant to Article XXXVIII of The Hague convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

In this way both the question of indemnity and the question of treaty interpretation can promptly be settled, and it will be observed that the only change made in the plan proposed by the Imperial German Government is that instead of eliminating either one of its alternative suggestions they are both given effect, in order that both of the questions under discussion may be dealt with at the same time.

If this proposal proves acceptable to the Imperial German Government, it will be necessary also to determine whether, pending the arbitral award, the Imperial German Government shall govern its naval operations in accordance with its own interpretation or in accordance with the interpretation maintained by the United States as to the obligations imposed by their treaty stipulations, and the Government of the United States would be glad to have an expression of the views of the Imperial German Government on this point.

LANSING.

No. 66. British proclamation, August 21, 1915, declaring cotton contraband of war (see Nos. 6, 10, 31):

Now, therefore, we do hereby declare, by and with the advice of our privy council, that during the continuance of the war, or until we do give further public notice, the following articles will be treated as absolutely contraband, in addition to those set out in our royal proclamation aforementioned: Raw cotton, cotton linters, cotton waste, and cotton yarn.

And we do hereby further declare that this our royal proclamation shall take effect from the date of its publication in the London Gazette.

IMPEACHMENT OF H. SNOWDEN MARSHALL.

Mr. HEFLIN and Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I rise to offer a resolution amending my impeachment charges against H. Snowden Marshall, and I desire to send the following resolution to the Clerk's desk, to be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask my friend if he will withhold that until I address the House for one hour? I have permission of the House to address it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I desire to have this acted on now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers it as a privileged matter. Whether it is privileged or not remains to be seen. But all of you gentleman who have secured special orders to speak get them under the condition that privileged matters, and so forth, shall not be interfered with. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on the 14th day of December, 1915, certain charges of impeachment were presented in this House by me against the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York, H. Snowden Marshall; and

Whereas said charges were not accompanied by a resolution empowering the Judiciary Committee sufficiently:

Therefore I present the following amended impeachment charges contained in the resolution which I am now offering:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire and report whether the action of this House is requisite concerning the alleged official misconduct of H. Snowden Marshall, United States attorney for the southern district of New York; whether any person, firm, corporation, or their agents have through a conspiracy with said United States attorney obtained the privilege of violating in the southern district of New York provisions of any of the various criminal, neutrality, interstate-commerce, or customs-revenue laws of the United States; whether great financial profits have accrued to any person or corporation in consequence thereof; whether said United States attorney has corruptly and collusively participated in any such conspiracy; whether he has corruptly neglected or refused to prosecute gross and notorious violations of the various criminal, neutrality, customs-revenue, or antitrust laws of the United States within said judicial district; whether said United States attorney has induced and procured a grand jury to return into the District Court for the Southern District of New York indictments charging crimes, without there being evidence before said grand jury which would in any degree justify the finding of such indictments; whether said United States attorney has procured an indictment as aforesaid in order to falsely accuse and besmirch the character of a Representative in Congress who had preferred articles of impeachment against said United States attorney; whether said United States attorney has been guilty of oppression in corruptly procuring indictments by a grand jury in said district charging reputable citizens with crime, although there was no evidence before the grand jury which would in the least warrant a charge of crime; whether said United States attorney has corruptly entered into a conspiracy with other persons to spread broadcast throughout the United States maliciously false newspaper publications and reports emanating as official statements and purporting to describe results of investigations conducted by said United States attorney and his assistants, with the object of destroying friendly relations between the United States and one or more foreign Governments; whether said United States attorney has unlawfully and feloniously misused processes of the grand jury of said district, the secret service, and the Bureau of Investigation and Inquiry of the Department of Justice in furtherance of any such conspiracy as aforesaid; whether there exists evidence that large sums of money have been expended by or on behalf of the agents of any foreign Government or of various purveyors and manufacturers of war munitions for the purpose of influencing actions of said United States attorney in furtherance of such a conspiracy; whether said United States attorney has corruptly neglected or refused to prosecute men who made the port of New York, within said judicial district, a military or naval base for foreign belligerent powers; whether he has corruptly neglected or refused to prosecute violations of Federal statutes prohibiting the loading and shipment of explosives on ships carrying passengers within said judicial district; whether said United States attorney has corruptly neglected or refused to prosecute violations of the foreign-enlistment act of the United States within said district; whether said United States attorney has used the powers of his office for the purpose of defaming, slandering, and libeling the names of peaceable and lawabiding people, to their great injury; whether said United States attorney has abetted, approved, or permitted unlawful and oppressive misuse of the subpœna of a grand jury in said southern district of New York, and whether citizens have been thereby deprived of their legal rights, privileges, and immunities; whether said United States attorney has aided, abetted, or approved of unlawful expenditures of public money in violation of statutes of the United States; whether said United States attorney has been guilty of attempts at privae solicitation of any judge for the purpose of influencing the action and opinion of such judge; whether said United States attorney has attempted, directly or indirectly, to privately solicit and influence the action of resident judges for and within said district; whether said United States attorney has used the power of his office to cause and procure a discrimination in assignments of judges to conduct trials in said district, so as to discriminate against one or more resident judges; whether any such acts have been so committed by said United States attorney because of failure on his part to control actions and decisions of one or more of said resident judges; whether said United States attorney has used the power of his office to procure or assist in the procurement of judges to be imported into the southern district of New York from other districts for the trial of causes in said district by falsely representing the condition of judicial business within said district; whether said United States attorney has been guilty of private solicitation, with intent to influence the acts and decisions of any judge imported as aforesaid; whether said United States attorney has attempted to corruptly control decisions and actions of one or more of such imported judges; whether said United States attorney has procured the assignment of one or more imported judges for the conduct of trials in said district for the purpose of preventing defendants from receiving fair and impartial trials at the hands of resident judges; whether there exists or has existed a conspiracy between said United States attorney or any of his assistants and officials connected with the administration of justice in said southern district of New York to unlawfully manipulate and control the selection of grand and petit jurors participating in the conduct of trials in the courts of said district; whether the interests either of the United States or individual persons have been thereby unlawfully prejudiced and the orderly and fair administration of justice defeated or obstructed in one or more instances; whether the said United States attorney has employed the powers of said office for the purpose of shielding and from exposing the improper conduct of James W. Osborne in relation to the facts involved in a civil litigation which was pending in the State court of the State of New York, and in protecting the said Osborne and others from prosecution for the violation of the United States laws; whether the said United States attorney has willfully and corruptly refused and neglected to prosecute gross and notorious violations of the United States committed by James W. Osborne and others, of the city and State of New York; whether said United States attorney has prostituted the office of the United States district attorney; whether the said United States attorney, for the purpose of protecting the private individual interests of Mr. James W. Osborne, used the powers of his said office as United States district attorney to defame, slander, and injure the good name and professional standing of law-abiding citizens of the United States to their great injury; whether the said United States attorney corruptly failed, neglected, and refused to prosecute persons who, while acting as witnesses for the United States Government, committed the crimes of perjury, subornation of perjury, and conspiracy in connection with the cases of United States against Rae Tanzer, United States against Frank D. Safford, and United States against Albert J. McCullough et al.; whether the said United States attorney used the United States grand jury, not in the investigation of violations of the United States laws but for the purpose of attempting to establish a public record which might be used in defense of James W. Osborne, H. Snowden Marshall, Roger B. Wood, and Samuel H. Hershenstein—the last two being assistant United States district attorneys under said H. Snowden Marshall; whether the said United States attorney corruptly failed to remove certain of his assistant district attorneys, who destroyed documentary evidence, material in the trial of a pending case in the United States district court for the southern district of New York; whether the said United States attorney corruptly and willfully caused to be instituted criminal proceedings against Rae Tanzer and others for the purpose of protecting James W. Osborne, a special United States district attorney and a personal intimate friend of the said H. Snowden Marshall; whether the said United States attorney failed and refused to present to the court in trial of causes material and important evidence, and has deliberately concealed, and either assisted or acquiesced in the concealment or destruction of material and important evidence in pending cases in the United States district court for the southern district of New York; whether the said United States attorney is corrupt, negligent, and unfit to retain the office of United States district attorney for the southern district of New York; whether the said United States attorney has willfully and persistently violated the laws of the United States in connection with the performance by him of the duties as such United States district attorney for the said southern district of New York; whether the said United States attorney corruptly and willfully withheld and failed to present before the grand jury material and important evidence in connection with alleged investigations instituted before said grand jury by said H. Snowden Marshall in relation to the cases of United States against Rae Tanzer and United States against Albert J. McCullough et al.; whether said United States attorney corruptly and willfully refused and neglected to take cognizance of highly improper and unlawful conduct of some of his assistant district attorneys, in connection with the attempted performance by them of official duties as such assistant United States district attorneys; whether the said United States attorney corruptly and willfully participated or acquiesced in the presentation to the court in the trial of cases alleged evidence which he knew to be untrue and manufactured, or assisted in the manufacture of and attempted to manufacture such alleged evidence; whether the administration by said United States attorney of his office has resulted in the injury and wrong to litigants in said district or to the people of that district and the United States; whether the said United States attorney has been guilty of any misbehavior for which he should be impeached.

And in making this investigation, the said committee is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, employ a clerk and stenographer, and is also authorized to appoint a subcommittee to act for and on behalf of the whole committee whenever and wherever it may be deemed advisable to take testimony for the use of said committee. The said subcommittee, while so employed, shall have the same powers in respect to obtaining testimony as are herein given to said Committee on the Judiciary, with a sergeant at arms, by himself or deputy, who shall serve the process of said committee or subcommittee and shall attend the sitting of the same as ordered and directed thereby. The Speaker shall have authority to sign, and the Clerk to attest, subpœnas for any witness or witnesses.

The expense of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the resolution is not privileged.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Well, to begin with, it provides for the payment of the expenses out of the contingent fund of the House, and under the rules no resolution providing for that is privileged unless it is reported from the Committee on Accounts.

That is far enough; but my colleague from Illinois has impeached this official and the House had referred that matter to the Committee on the Judiciary. Now he presents a resolution, not of impeachment, but a resolution authorizing a committee to make an investigation, which of itself is not a privileged matter.

The privileged matter is the impeachment. That is not concerned in this case. The Speaker could very readily see that if to-day I can impeach a judge or other official of the United States and have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and immediately thereafter present a resolution providing for an investigation, and that is privileged, then I am entitled to have an hour in the House in the discussion of that, and if that be voted down I can present another resolution, if it be privileged, in a little different form, and take another hour in the House, and if that be laid upon the table or something else be done with it, then I present another resolution along the same lines, and so on ad infinitum.

Now, the privilege is the presenting of the impeachment. A Member on his responsibility in the House impeaches an official of the Federal Government. That is a matter of high privilege. But when the House has disposed of that it is not a privileged matter to present another resolution referring to an investigation of that subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] will be heard.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the point made by my colleague [Mr. MANN] is not well taken. The fact is that a Member of this House is privileged to indict a Federal official every day, if he sees fit, so far as anything in the rules is concerned; and certainly if impeachment charges are read against an official, and there happens to be new information, or the necessity to amend, in order to make the charges cover a certain question, and satisfy those who will perhaps act on them, and if perhaps on account of precedents and technicalities that often obstruct justice it becomes not only the privilege but the duty of a Member who feels that high crimes have been committed by a public officer, to amend those charges, so that they may cover the whole question involved, it seems to me that a Member ought to be allowed that privilege.

Now, I am not and of course do not pretend to be a lawyer, while I read some law while I was at the head of the trade-union movement, and tried to steer clear of the law in trying to secure the rights of the unions that I represented; but the law is supposed to be based upon reason and justice. The rules of this House are based upon such principles as will expedite the business before the House, if those rules are properly framed, and they are based upon precedents, of course, as we know.

If the Speaker has not had his attention called to the precedent made at the time of the impeachment of President Johnson, I should like to refer the Speaker to Hinds' Precedents, volume 3, section 24, page 824, where a resolution similar to the one I have presented was offered and a point of order raised, and the Speaker at that time decided that it was privileged.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes the gentleman would speak so that the Chair can hear him.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I say a point of order was raised at that time against the impeachment resolution, the resolution being similar to this one, and the Speaker decided that it was a privileged question and therefore in order.

I read from page 824 of Hinds' Precedents:

A question of order being raised, the Speaker held that the resolution presented a question of privilege.

A motion by Mr. Rufus P. Spalding, of Ohio, that the resolution be laid on the table was disagreed to.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the more recent Swayne case a resolution similar to this was offered, not as an amended resolution but as an original resolution. I claim, Mr. Speaker, that there is not a scintilla of precedent or anything in our rules that denies to a Member the right to amend or to reimpeach if he sees fit. I have not been able to find anything which says I would not have a right to rise now and offer that as a resolution of impeachment, although I read impeachment charges on the 14th of December. Although I do not pretend to be fully familiar with those questions, I want to say that in the Swayne impeachment case, where a like resolution was acted on, while a decision was not rendered on the question of order, it was referred to as being in doubt, and all the statement that was made in that case was that it was a question of high privilege and was in order.

Therefore I submit that the position taken by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is not well founded and that this resolution is in order.

I might read a few paragraphs from this Swayne case, but do not feel it necessary to take up much time of the House. Mr. Lamar, of Florida, the Member who had presented the impeachment charges, said:

I understand the objection made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor] is that I do not charge Judge Swayne with any specific crime. I do charge him generally with high crimes and misdemeanors. Why should I be forced to state, when the proof is to be submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, the specific matter upon which that general allegation is made? Every single crime that this judge is capable of committing is charged when I charge him on this floor with the commission of high crimes and misdemeanors.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I stated, parliamentary law and all other law, especially where there is no precedent in conflict with the action that we are undertaking, should be founded on common sense and justice and on the sort of rules that will tend to expedite the matter before the House. According to the precedents of the Judiciary Committee, for instance, in the Dayton case, the impeachment charges were read on the 12th of June, and on the 9th of February following, or about eight months afterwards, authority was asked to subpœna witnesses and for the payment of expenses. The judge was not impeached, and no report was made on the subject to this House.

This is a question of great importance to the Members of this House, and of great importance to the people whom they represent, and certainly there ought not to be any question, there ought not to be any disposition on the part of any Member here to delay action that is brought for the purpose of sterilizing and purifying what seems to me the most corrupt administration of law that has ever been practiced.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, in regard to this, I care very little about it. I have always been able to take care of myself. I have not bothered this House very much about my affairs, but there is a question that perhaps concerns every Member of this House, whether or not a Member of this House can be interfered with in his efforts to represent the people who have sent him here, and whether charges without any foundation of truth, and without a scintilla of evidence to sustain them, can be brought to hamper him in his efforts to represent the people whom he has been sent here to represent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Illinois what he thinks about the specific point of order that his colleague [Mr. MANN] has made, that the privileged character of the resolution is destroyed by the provision that the expenses of the investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I am not familiar with the precedents in regard to that. I shall have to leave that to the broad wisdom of the Speaker.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the purpose of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] is regarding this resolution. The matters referred to are sufficiently grave to demand the careful consideration of the House. If the purpose of the gentleman from Illinois be to have the resolution referred to the Judiciary Committee, I suggest to his colleague that the point of order be withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. If that be the purpose of the gentleman I shall make no point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. What is that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the purpose of the gentleman is to have the resolution referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, I suggest that his colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. No; that is not the purpose. I want immediate action, and my reason for that is, if the gentleman will permit me, that I find that unless the committee is empowered to subpœna witnesses it is going to be very difficult to get facts in regard to this matter. The impeaching Member is required to furnish a certain amount of prima facie evidence, and that makes it a great burden, especially on a man with my limited resources. I have little money and no great amount of time, and I want this put in a position where the committee at its own discretion can investigate it. It is not my intention to cast any discredit on the Judiciary Committee, but I am not in a position to bring witnesses or secure affidavits which the rules and practice of the Judiciary Committee would require me to do. Unless the resolution is passed giving this committee authority to act as authorized by the resolution there is likely to be a failure of justice. I do not see how there can be any objection raised against the resolution. Certainly the Committee on the Judiciary ought not to raise any question, because it is giving them authority to act within their own discretion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, when charges of the grave character which have been submitted against the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York are preferred in the House it is incumbent upon the House to proceed in an orderly and careful manner. In December the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] impeached the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York. Upon his own motion, the impeachment matter was referred to the Judiciary Committee. I do not know what has transpired before the Judiciary Committee of the House, but I am confident that if there were any necessity for that committee to ask the House for any powers whatever, or any authority not now vested in the committee but necessary to enable it to reach a proper conclusion, the committee would come to the House and its request would be granted.

It is not fair to ask a committee, however, simply because some one asserts charges against a public official, to commence an indiscriminate investigation unless something substantial be brought before the committee to justify its action in the matter. This matter is of such importance that I desire that the Judiciary Committee be given the fullest opportunity to do whatever may be necessary. I have no opinion to express about the truth of the charges or the probability that they shall be sustained. Whatever opinion I may have of the integrity and capacity of the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York I shall refrain from stating, and I shall express no opinion that might in any way prejudice the matter one way or the other. But, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] is not willing that the resolution shall go to the Committee on the Judiciary, then I shall press the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

I call the attention of the Speaker to a precedent in volume 3 of Hinds' Precedents, section 2051, page 375, where it was held that a resolution directly proposing impeachment is privileged, but the same is not true of one proposing an investigation with a view to impeachment:

On December 2, 1867, Mr. William E. Robinson, of New York, claiming the floor for a question of privilege, offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be instructed to inquire into the conduct of William B. West, American consul at Dublin, in Ireland, regarding American prisoners in that city, and to report thereon forthwith, to the end that if he has been guilty of conduct which would be liable to impeachment this House may take measures to have articles of impeachment presented to the Senate."

The Speaker held that the resolution did not involve a question of privilege.

An examination of the resolution pending, offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], discloses that it is identical in character with the one to which I have referred, although much more voluminous.

As to the other point made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], it has been repeatedly held that a resolution proposing an expenditure from the contingent fund of the House must be referred to the Committee on Accounts. That has been waived in many resolutions because of the importance of the object sought. When this resolution does come for action before the House, I serve notice that I shall move to refer it to the Judiciary Committee, in order that that committee may have an opportunity to present its views as to the probable action which should be taken before the House acts in a matter of such grave importance.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from West Virginia rise?

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. I rise, as a member of the committee, to state what has occurred before that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to hear the statement of the gentleman. The matter before the House is the point of order.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. I desire to speak upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I think it is very clear that the resolution is not privileged, for the reason stated. In the second place, the Speaker will not ignore the fact that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] has preferred impeachment charges directly. Those charges say that certain things have occurred. They do not say that the Judiciary Committee or any other committee is to find out whether they have occurred. The fact is that there has not been one shred of evidence offered before the Judiciary Committee, although the gentleman from Illinois has had an opportunity on two occasions to offer it, but was distinctly told——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman from West Virginia is not speaking to the point of order on this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. TOWNER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. TOWNER. I rise to discuss the point of order before the House.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I have not yet finished my discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed, and the Chair will later recognize the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the resolution now offered is a mere blanket resolution asking this House to investigate some 40 or 50 alleged charges against an officer of this Government, without a single allegation on the part of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] that a single one of those charges is true. It seems to me that to entertain a motion of this kind is to throw the bars down for any Member of this House in the future, without assuming any responsibility and without any probable cause to believe that the charges are true, to subject any officer in the country to the trouble, expense, and notoriety of defending them and to subject the committees of this House to the unnecessary labor of fruitless investigations.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, it is well for us to remember that the question that the Chair is called upon to determine is the question of whether or not this resolution is privileged. What shall be done with it is another question. It is possible that it may be sent to a committee, but the question now before the House is whether or not it is privileged for the purpose of consideration by the House. I suggest to the Speaker that if the original resolution were privileged, as that seems to be conceded, I can see no reason why the consideration of this resolution is not also privileged. It only asks for more power than was given in the original resolution for the committee to which that resolution was submitted. Upon what ground, then, can it be reasoned that this is not a privileged resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman what he thinks about the specific point of order that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, if it shall be necessary for the House to refer this to the Committee on Accounts, that does not take away from this resolution its character of privilege. What the House will do with this resolution after it has been determined that it will consider it is something that may arise after this proposition has been submitted. Let us see what these propositions are. It is determined unequivocably and by an unbroken line of precedents in this House that this character of resolution is a question of the highest privilege. It has never been held, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] suggests, that a resolution may not be amended for any good reason. It has never been held that if its power is not sufficiently, is not accurately, is not determinately made in the original resolution, that the House may not amend that resolution and give the committee on investigation additional power.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that there was not any original resolution. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] rose in his place and impeached this district attorney. That is a matter of the highest privilege. The substance of this resolution is right at the end of it—that the Judiciary Committee shall be instructed to conduct this investigation. The only question that the Chair cares to hear about is as to the last sentence in the resolution, and that is with respect to the expense money.

Mr. TOWNER. I can only suggest to the Chair, if that is the only question in his mind, that that does not raise the question of the privileged character of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Why does it not?

Mr. TOWNER. Any investigation of impeachment, no matter how it shall arise, must necessarily involve expense to the House. There never has been an impeachment that has not involved large expense to the House, and now, merely because this resolution says the expense shall be paid by the House, when perhaps it might not have been suggested in the original statement of impeachment, does not change the character of it.

The SPEAKER. That is true, but the House has its own machinery for getting at paying bills here. It has been practiced a long time. Is that last sentence on this paper that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] hands up in contravention of the rules and practices of the House?

Mr. TOWNER. Again let me suggest to the Speaker that if impeachments have been carried on when no statement was made regarding the expenses, which everyone knows are incurred, that the mere fact that the statement is made in the resolution now presented which is merely amendatory will not determine that the statement and its amendment are not entitled to consideration under the rule of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that it is the invariable rule held by every Speaker who has ever sat in the chair, that if any part of the resolution is not privileged, that destroys the privilege of the whole resolution. Query, Is that last sentence against the rules and practices of the House?

Mr. TOWNER. I again suggest to the Speaker that that certainly can not be. There may be some things in the resolution, it is true, that may not be privileged, but that does not make very much difference when the question is a question of impeachment, and that is the only question to be determined. The form of a resolution referring to or amending the original statement can not take away its privileged character. The statement of impeachment, being but an expression of the act of impeachment, is a question of the highest privilege. Merely because the Committee on the Judiciary is asked to do or not to do certain things at the instance of the man who makes the impeachment in the House will not determine their action nor should it deprive the impeachment proceeding of its character of high privilege. I judge the House in such case would be at least as liberal as the courts and look at the substance and not the form.

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes and holds that this whole resolution or paper is privileged except the last sentence. Away back in the days of Mr. Speaker Colfax—and he is universally conceded to have been a parliamentarian of high degree——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit this statement——

The SPEAKER. If it is on the point of order the Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. If a resolution to authorize a committee to investigate and subpœna witnesses is in order, how can it be reasoned that providing means to do that thing is out of order?

The SPEAKER. The House has its machinery for providing means to make an appropriation out of the contingent fund. There is no trouble about getting the money if you ever get the resolution.

Everybody knows, who has ever paid any attention to it, that an impeachment is of the highest privilege. The Chair believes that every motion that is necessary as an ancillary motion to carry out the will of the House in that regard or to ascertain its will is privileged. Mr. Speaker Colfax, in the case——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, may I have the privilege of withdrawing the objectionable part of it?

The SPEAKER. Of course the gentleman can amend this like anything else.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that that last paragraph be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can withdraw the resolution and cut that out and offer it over again.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I know that, but I thought this would be the quickest way, if it could be done; and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw——

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to have a ruling, if we can. But if the Chair does not care to rule——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will render his opinion.

On January 7, Mr. James M. Ashley, of Ohio, rising in his place, declared: "On my responsibility as a Representative, and in the presence of this House and before the American people, I charge Andrew Johnson, Vice President and Acting President of the United States"—

Then there is a statement of the charges. The last part of his statement was a resolution:

Be it resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and they are hereby, authorized to inquire into the official conduct of Andrew Johnson, Vice President of the United States, discharging the powers and the duties of the office of President of the United States, and to report to this House whether, in their opinion, the said Andrew Johnson, while in said office, has been guilty of acts which were designed or calculated to overthrow, subvert, or corrupt the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof; and whether the said Andrew Johnson has been guilty of any act, or has conspired with others to do acts, which in the contemplation of the Constitution, are high crimes or misdemeanors, requiring the interposition of the constitutional power of this House; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers and to administer the customary oath to witnesses.

Now, that is almost the phrase in the resolution that is offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN]:

A question of order being raised, the Speaker held that the resolution presented a question of privilege.

That is the resolution.

Then the motion to lay on the table, and so forth, is not pertinent. The case cited by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the Chair thinks, is not on all fours with this, because that was not an impeachment. It was a resolution to authorize somebody to find out whether there ought to be an impeachment. The Chair holds, as has also been held times out of mind, that if any part of a resolution is not privileged, then it destroys the privilege of the entire resolution. The Chair holds that the last sentence is not privileged, which destroys the privileged quality of the entire resolution.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] asks to withdraw his motion temporarily.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I offer the same resolution, with the last paragraph stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks to strike out the last sentence without reading it again.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not ask to strike it out, but strikes it out.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I ask to strike it out.

Mr. MANN. Or ask the Clerk, possibly, to do it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is simply trying to save the trouble of reading it over again.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. That is what I am trying to avoid.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will strike it out. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the resolution is not privileged, if the Speaker will bear with me for a moment.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly plain to my mind, if the resolution is to be considered by itself, it is not privileged. There is nothing in the resolution about impeachment. It is on all fours with various cases, one of which has been referred to, unless——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In just a second—unless the Speaker connects this resolution with the impeachment which the gentleman made to the House some time ago. There is no reference to that matter in the resolution itself.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will my colleague yield?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. Has not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] a perfect right to go back and start all over again and impeach this district attorney anew?

Mr. MANN. I think it has been held that he has.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I think my colleague did not understand the reading of the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Well, I did not understand the reading of the resolution, but subsequently I went to the desk and read it and then I understood.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The first part of the resolution itself connected it with my impeachment charges on December 14——

Mr. MANN. No part of the resolution is connected with impeachment charges made by the gentleman at all. There is a preliminary statement of the gentleman. That is not part of the resolution; that is debate, and the House does not pass upon debate on a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. Of course it does not.

Mr. MANN. That is not the resolution and it is no part of the resolution.

There is no reference in the resolution to the question of impeachment, except at the end of the resolution, or toward the end, it provides whether this is cause for impeachment proceedings, or some language like that; but that is on all fours with the resolution, which the Speakers have heretofore held were not in order, because they were merely resolutions of investigation and were not impeachment resolutions. If the gentleman presents an impeachment resolution, that is in order. Now, I am perfectly willing for the Chair to rule that this sort of resolution is in order, because it will come in very handy sometime when we want to take up the time of the House by having resolutions several yards long concerning an investigation, winding up to see whether a man ought to be impeached or not. But it will be a process, not of reaching impeachment charges, but a process of delaying the proceedings of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman if he read the preamble.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no preamble.

Mr. MANN. There was no preamble read, and there is no preamble in the copy furnished to the reporters that I saw.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Who do you mean? The House Reporter?

The SPEAKER. It is rather inartistically drawn. [Laughter.] But, nevertheless——

Mr. MANN. It is a statement of debate. The gentleman reduces his remarks to writing and refers to what I have done. It is not a preamble. It is a debate. The gentleman reduced it to writing and had the Clerk read it. It is debate, pure and simple.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the "Whereas," as follows:

Whereas on the 14th day of December, 1915, certain charges of impeachment were presented in this House by me against the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York, H. Snowdon Marshall; and

Whereas said charges were not accompanied by a resolution empowering the Judiciary Committee sufficiently:

Therefore I present the following amended impeachment charges contained in the resolution which I am now offering.

Mr. MANN. Now, that is pure debate. That is not a "whereas." Now, there are no impeachment charges in the resolution. While he says he presents them, they are not there.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois and Mr. GARRETT rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] is recognized.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I want to submit that that "resolve" was put in there not as a part of the argument for the very reason the gentleman gives for raising the point of order. Now, if I have not worded it exactly right, then, perhaps, after this I will have to go to my friend and colleague [Mr. MANN] in order to get things just in the proper form so that they will be understandable and acceptable here without a point of order being raised against them. But if I had not wanted that as a part of the resolution I would not have put the "resolve" there to start with. If I had just simply been going to make a statement in regard to the matter as a part of the argument, I would not have had those "resolves" there, which are plain on the face of them. That was intended as a part of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is recognized.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I have no sort of interest in this matter except that public interest which everyone who is liable to have some responsibility placed upon him in connection with it should entertain. I rise not so much to discuss the question of order as to appeal to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], who presented the resolution, that he withdraw it for the present and resubmit it in unquestionable form. I have to say in candor, Mr. Speaker, that I am of the opinion that the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is well taken. This resolution as presented does not set forth any specific charges. An impeachment is privileged. If the impeaching charges be connected with the resolution referring them to a committee, then that resolution would be privileged, but where the resolution is presented without being connected with any charge it is, to say the least of it, a matter of doubt whether under the precedents and practices it is privileged. I am inclined to think that it is not. I think we all agree that these charges, having been made upon the responsibility of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], ought to be investigated and investigated thoroughly. But upon these large matters affecting an officer of the United States, wherein the House is called upon to discharge a responsibility of the very highest order and of the gravest consequences, it is well that we should be particular to proceed in order. I hope that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] will be willing to temporarily withdraw his resolution and re-form it. I think it certainly can be assured that the matters that he desires investigated will be investigated, but, by all means, upon matters so serious we should proceed in an orderly way.

The SPEAKER. The attention of the Chair had not been called to that "Whereas," and he is inclined to think that the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is well taken, and, if the Chair be permitted to express an opinion, the best thing to be done would be for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] to withdraw his resolution temporarily and re-form it so that it would bring it undoubtedly within the line of privilege.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire, then, to withdraw the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the resolution. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is permitted to address the House for one hour. [Applause.]

COTTON.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, the South has a natural monopoly in the production of cotton. Nowhere in all the world can the particular staple that we produce be grown except in the cotton belt of the United States. That cotton belt is 1,400 miles long from east to west and 500 miles wide and has in it 448,000,000 acres, 820 counties, and produces two-thirds of the world's cotton crop. This billion-dollar product produced in the South every year is entitled to fair treatment in all the marts of trade.

True, the people of the South do not receive that amount of money for the cotton crop, but that amount would be received if cotton brought its fair value.

A year ago, when conditions produced by the European war depressed the price of cotton, we appealed to Congress to grant us aid. The producers of the South were in distress. They had produced 16,000,000 bales of cotton, at a cost of 10 cents a pound, and sold much of it for 6 cents and 6½ cents a pound. Congress did not grant the relief that we desired, but the President, through Secretary McAdoo, was instrumental in extending aid by raising a fund, through certain bankers in the West, North, East, and South, and $135,000,000 was raised. That money was to be loaned to the farmer on cotton at 6 cents a pound.

Only $35,000 of that amount was borrowed by the farmers, but its presence had the effect of putting up the price, and the average price of that crop was about 8 cents. When cotton factors found that money could be borrowed by the cotton producer at 6 cents a pound, and cotton was then selling at that price, the price went up. Why? Because the speculators and spinners knew that if the farmers got that crop tied up in loans they would hold it until cotton went back to 12 and 13 cents, and 13 cents was the figure at which it had sold for five years prior to the European war. In the fall of 1913, after Mr. Wilson became President, cotton sold for 13 cents.

Now, in the early fall of that year there was a premeditated effort on the part of certain gentlemen in New York to produce a panic in the South. They had two objects in view. One was they wished to be able to say that cotton had brought a low price during the first year of a Democratic administration, because that administration proposed to regulate the New York Cotton Exchange, and the other was to obtain the cotton crop at a low price, and mighty factors who operate upon that exchange, and those interested in it, proceeded to try to bring about a panic. And how did they do it? The eastern bankers had been loaning money to the banks in the cotton belt. They made these loans to the local banks, the local banks aided the local merchant, and the local merchant was aiding the farmer. So the eastern banks held papers against the local southern banks due in October and November, and these eastern bankers sent word to the local southern banks that they would expect settlement of their accounts promptly when due. This right in the heart of the cotton-gathering season.

They knew what effect it would have. They had given the southern banker an extension of time on former occasions, but now they must press him for full settlement. They knew what would happen. The local bank would call on the merchant and the merchant would call on the farmer and the farmer would be compelled to sell his cotton whether he wanted to or not.

These New York fellows, interested in the banking business, were also bear speculators on the New York Cotton Exchange. They were loaning money to the southern banker, making his papers due in October and November; and they were playing on the exchange at this end of the line to break the price of cotton, by bearing the market, and at the other end of the line forcing the producer to sell at the figure fixed on the exchange, and then they would hold the cotton until the price went up 2 or 3 cents a pound. [Applause.] The New York speculator and banker, often one and the same person, loaning money to the local southern banker and operating on the bear side of the exchange, was holding up the southern banker with one hand and robbing the southern cotton producer with the other. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Speaker, their panic plans were interrupted in 1913. Just as the local southern banker was making ready to press the merchant and the merchant to press the farmer for prompt, immediate payment, Mr. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, stated that the Government would deposit crop-moving funds in the South. What do you suppose happened then? Why these eastern bankers said to the local southern bankers, "You need not inconvenience yourselves; if you desire to keep this money longer, we shall be glad for you to do so. [Applause.] So when they found that the Government would not permit such an outrage to be perpetrated against this great producing class of our people these eastern bankers immediately decided that they were not obliged to collect at once money due by southern banks and an extention of time was granted.

In 1914 the farmer produced too much cotton and he lost $375,000,000 on that crop. But on the principle that the intelligent man will not commit the same big blunder twice the southern farmer reduced his cotton acreage in 1915 about 5,000,000 acres, and he planted corn, wheat, oats, peas, and potatoes where he had produced cotton before. Not only that, but he cut down his fertilizer supply to nearly half of the amount used in the year 1914, and he produced a crop in 1915 5,000,000 bales short of the 1914 crop.

I told you a year ago in this House that the acreage would be reduced and that a small cotton crop would be made, but there were those here who said, "No; you can not get the farmers to reduce the acreage," but they did reduce it.

Mr. Speaker, in the spring of 1915 cotton prices were greatly hampered by interference with cotton shipments. Great Britain consumes more of our cotton than any other country; she has more spindles in operation than any other country, and makes the finest cotton goods in the world. The cotton-spinning industry is the greatest money-making industry in all the United Kingdom, and Great Britain is careful to see to it that her spindles are supplied with cotton.

In the late summer and early fall the spinning interests of Great Britain joined certain spinners in New England in the claim that there existed a large supply of old cotton there and here. I knew that the claim was untrue and that it was made for the purpose of injuriously affecting the market and depressing the price. I stated in August that the supply of old cotton here and abroad was smaller than was claimed by the spinners. I have said all along that Great Britain had a small supply of cotton. Here is a statement from the New York Commercial of December 24, 1915:

If the South continues to hold, it is predicted England will be forced to pay very high prices for the staple during January and February.

Here there is enough cotton for all requirements, but owners are not satisfied with prices offered and are holding, creating what may be described as an artificial shortage. Abroad the situation is entirely different. There, owing to the acute scarcity in ocean freight room and high transportation rates, the mills are threatened with a cotton famine and an era of extremely high prices.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here is a special from New York, dated January 7. It is to the Washington Post and reads as follows:

NEW YORK, January 7.

Following an exchange of cablegrams between this country and London, it became known to-day in Wall Street that Great Britain is threatened with a cotton famine.

Now, suddenly, they are confronted with the prospect of the most serious situation in their textile industry since the Civil War.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will yield for a question.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Does England depend upon Egypt for cotton?

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, no; Egypt produces a long-staple cotton, something like our sea-island cotton, and England uses vast quantities of short-staple cotton, such as only the United States can produce. The cotton situation commenced to be acute in Great Britain in the spring of 1915, because a great deal of cotton that had been going to feed her spindles had been used in making gunpowder and high-explosive shells. So she began to seize American cotton shipped to Holland, Sweden, and Denmark. These were neutral nations, and of course Great Britain had no right to seize this cotton.

Mr. Speaker, Austria, Germany, and Great Britain have all ignored our rights and violated our neutrality; and Great Britain has injured our commerce and violated the principles of international law, and I take the position that none of these countries shall be permitted to insult our national sovereignty and destroy our commerce upon the high seas. [Applause.]

Great Britain seized this cotton which we had shipped to Holland, Sweden, and Denmark. She gave as her reason for doing that that she was afraid that that cotton would go through the neutral countries to Germany. That principle can not hold. It was the business of Great Britain to keep it from going from the neutral nation to Germany if she so desired, but not to interfere with the commerce between two neutral nations. The position that Great Britain has taken in this matter is not sound, and this country will never stand for that doctrine. [Applause.]

But Great Britain took that cotton and used it to make gunpowder and to supply her spindles. Some in this country said, "Well, it is all right. Let her have it. She proposes to pay the contract price." Oh, yes; they thought that very fair and generous to offer to pay the contract price.

When Great Britain commenced to seize our cotton going to neutral nations I took the whole matter up with the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of State made a protest to the Government of Great Britain.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What Secretary of State was it who said that was all right?

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not say that the Secretary of State said that. I said some gentlemen in the East, certain cotton factors, said it, and I raised that question with the Secretary of State that it was not all right. It was not all right for Great Britain to seize cotton going from our country to a neutral nation, and then undertake to excuse the offense and outrage by simply saying that she would pay the contract price. Great Britain needed cotton and her wish to supply her own spindles was as keen as her desire to keep it out of Germany. [Applause.] But Great Britain was willing to pay the contract price. Sure, Mr. Speaker. The contract price was about 3 cents lower than the price that Great Britain would at that time be compelled to pay for cotton in the markets of the world.

So, by seizing 600,000 bales and paying only the contract price, she saved in money $9,000,000 and she injured our cotton customers in neutral nations to the extent of $9,000,000.

Whatever the motive, Great Britain did four things when she interfered with our commerce with neutral nations: She obtained cotton at 3 cents a pound cheaper than she could then buy it, kept other spinning industries from obtaining a supply of cotton, furnished a much-needed supply to her own spindles, and depressed the price of cotton in the United States. And I confess as the friend of the cotton producers of our country that I could not enthuse over this outrageous conduct of a foreign country. [Applause.]

I do not want the cotton producers of the United States to be forced to bear any of the expense of a foreign war. They have suffered enough from the general evil effects of that war. [Applause.]

Later, Mr. Speaker, Great Britain, in response to this Government's protest on the subject of seizing our cotton going to neutral ports, said we have reconsidered our former order and we will let Sweden, Holland, Denmark, Spain, and other neutral countries receive some cotton from the United States, provided they do not receive more than they did in 1912 and 1913 in normal years. That was about the statement. Now, Mr. Speaker, how ridiculous, absurd, and unjust was that position. There was no war in 1912–13, and then Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia were supplying in the main the cotton-goods trade of the Old World. And at this time Germany is walled in, Austria is shut out from the world, England is at war, so is France, Russia, and Italy. The little neutral nations over there said: "We will take advantage of the opportunities thus afforded and go out after cotton-goods trade that we never had before." They did so, and, of course, they needed more cotton to supply their spindles then than they did in the normal years of 1912 and 1913.

The more cotton they used the greater market they made for the American producer, and if the countries involved in war had caused the consumption of cotton by spindles to be curtailed, here was an opportunity to increase it; but Great Britain has issued an edict that they must receive cotton in amounts corresponding with those received in 1912–13. If we submit to that policy, we grant to Great Britain the right to tell us with what foreign countries we shall trade and in what quantities we shall be permitted to sell to them American products; and when we concede to them that right we do so to the shame and humiliation of the American people. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Speaker, those who would rob the cotton producers of the United States do not all live in Great Britain. There are those in our own country who pillage and plunder him in every cotton-selling season, and I desire to discuss just now the cotton situation here. I am of the opinion that there is a conspiracy between certain speculators and spinners operating on the New York Cotton Exchange to bear the cotton market and prevent prices from reaching the point justified by the law of supply and demand. I am not alone in this opinion. There are many people in New York and in the South who believe that this conspiracy exists. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JACOWAY], two as good friends as the cotton producer ever had on this floor, joined me in calling this matter to the attention of the Attorney General, and he is now having an investigation made. These men operating on the New York Cotton Exchange know the cotton situation, and they know that cotton is going to be scarce and high, and they are trying to hold the price down until they can get the cotton away from the farmer into their own hands, and then they expect to make a profit of 3 or 4 cents a pound.

Why do we think that there is a conspiracy?

Why, Mr. Speaker, we made the smallest crop last year that we have made in many years. There were 16,000,000 bales produced in 1914 and not more than 11,000,000 bales, if that much, in 1915—5,000,000 bales short of the 1914 crop. More cotton has been consumed in the last 15 months than in any like period in the world's history. Heretofore when the ginners' report was announced indicating a big crop prices have broken a few points on the exchange, and when the Government's estimate as to the size of the crop was published indicating a big crop the price has always broken a few points on the exchange. Then it follows that when the Government ginners' report shows a little crop and the crop estimate is small the price would go up at least a few points, and heretofore the price has gone up. But this time the bears on the New York Exchange have organized, and when the ginners' report is ready to be published, knowing conditions in the South, and looking for a bullish report, they start to sell the market the day before and on the day the report is announced. They give the command, "Get ready; the Government report is coming out to-morrow. We must sell and bear the market." This is done regardless of whether the report is large or small. They have done that, and they have broken the market in 24 hours when consumption, supply, and demand all warranted a rise in the price. Cotton ought now to be selling for 15 cents, and would be but for this conspiracy on the New York Exchange. Knowing the cotton situation as I do, I am confident that cotton will sell for 15 cents in a short time and, I believe, 20 cents next June. It would have reached 15 cents already if it had not been for this band of conspirators operating on the New York Cotton Exchange. How do they operate? One gentleman tells me it is as fair for the bulls as it is for the bears. The bulls buy and boost the market, while the bears sell and depress the market. I said the situation with the bull is different. The bull is not organized; he never goes upon the market unless he believes that conditions in the cotton trade warrant high prices. Mark the expression: Unless conditions in the cotton trade warrant high prices.

When he knows the situation in the cotton belt where it is produced, and knows about the supply and about the demand, he backs his judgment and goes upon the exchange to buy. The bear speculators will sell. They are organized. They are there to depress the price. Who do they represent? They represent certain New England and European spinners. How do they perform on the exchange? The bull says, "I am going to buy; the crop is the smallest in years; the ginners' report is small, and the Government estimate of the crop is small; the cotton supply small; demand great." So he goes in. It may be that he has a few thousand dollars, but it only takes a little while to dispose of him. One of these bear conspirators will say, "I will sell you 1,000 bales at 12 cents." The bull says, "I will take it." Then this fellow says, "I will sell you 5,000 more at 12 cents." The buyer says, "I will take that." Now he is about ready to retire from the scene. His pocketbook is getting thin, but the bear says, "I will sell you 5,000 more." Then the bull says, "I don't want any more." "All right, then," says the bear. Then if the bull quits bidding, in a little while cotton goes down to 11½, and then under a bear raid the price breaks to 11 cents.

Now, then, suppose these bears break the price to 11½ cents and then to 11 cents. How much have they made? They have made $2.50 a bale if they break it a half cent, and then 1 cent, they have made $5 a bale; and they win on the exchange. Then what? The combination of spinners in this country and abroad win, because they buy it from the producer at 11 cents the next day, for that price is wired to the spot markets. There is where they rob the farmer coming and going, and the bears represent certain spinning interests, while the bull is not organized and represents nobody but himself.

A few years ago a prosecution was commenced against certain gentlemen operating on the New York Cotton Exchange. Then it was for a conspiracy to bull the market, and, strange to say, one of the men accused then is now thought to be in the bear conspiracy.

And I hold to the doctrine, Mr. Speaker, that if we can prosecute bulls for putting up the price we can prosecute bears for putting down the price. [Applause.] What is the situation with regard to the charge that the conspiracy exists? Here are some letters from New York received by me since I made the charge. One of them says:

I noticed in the New York American an article wherein you are trying to get at the facts in regard to cotton gamblers and speculators who have been and who are now in a combine and clique to depress the price of cotton in order to take it away from the southern farmer at a low figure before running it higher.

That is in line with what I said before. They want to hold the price down until it leaves the farmer's hands and gets into theirs.

Again, this New York man says:

I am in the Wall Street district more or less every day, and on the day the Government report was issued giving the size of the crop, which was small, indeed, there was a big combine, so it appeared, of cotton gamblers and cotton-mill men ready and eager to sell the market lower by thousands and thousands of bales, regardless of whether the Government report was favorable or unfavorable.

Let me read another line or two from the same letter:

I saw an article published by one cotton firm the day after the report came out stating that they had been in the cotton business for many years and never had they seen such a determined effort to depress the price of cotton as there was that day before the crop yield was announced, it mattering not whether it was large or small.

Now, let me read a portion of another letter received from a man who lives in the South:

Hon. J. THOS. HEFLIN,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HEFLIN: I have noticed in the press that you have taken a good deal of interest in the present cotton situation, which is very commendable, as it means so much to the southern farmer.

I have never seen a statistical position of cotton stronger than it is to-day, with more reasons why it should advance and fewer reasons why it should decline. I was in New Orleans a few days ago and to my surprise I found the big operators on the bear side, yet believing ultimately cotton would go to 15 cents per pound for the present crop. I was further informed that Mr. ——— was a bear. This convinced me beyond doubt that there was a combination between the New York and New Orleans Cotton Exchanges and the spinners to decrease the price of cotton until it was out of the hands of the farmer and then permit it to take its natural course, which every one with whom I have talked admitted meant very much higher prices.

I must confess that I was surprised to find that some of our southern cotton men, such as members of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, would lend themselves to a scheme of this kind, but I was so thoroughly convinced that it was a prearranged agreement against the interests of the southern farmer that I thought I would write to you, believing that in your position you might be able to make investigations and possibly bring about exposures that would aid the southern farmer in getting a larger price for his crop.

So here is a conspiracy to prevent the operation of the law of supply and demand to depress the price of cotton, and admitting all the while that cotton will go to 15 cents. God speed the Attorney General in his prosecution of these criminals. [Applause.] Let me give you the situation in the cotton world. The American cotton crop of 1914 was about sixteen and one-half million bales. Our farmers reduced the cotton area 5,000,000 acres, and the size of the crop will be five and one-half million bales short of the crop of 1914. What is the situation abroad? In 1915 Great Britain said to India, "Reduce your cotton acreage. We want you to produce indigo, which is a gold crop, and we want you to produce food supplies for the army," and India cut her cotton area more than 6,000,000 acres, and India is making the smallest cotton crop that she has made in years. Then Great Britain said to Egypt, "You must reduce your cotton acreage and produce food supplies for the army." Mark you, Egyptian cotton is not in competition with our cotton, except some sea-island cotton grown in South Carolina, Florida, and Georgia.

Russia produces cotton; and what happened in Russia? Russia said to her people, "Reduce your cotton acreage and produce food supplies for the army." Then the people of Great Britain and Russia said, "What about cotton next year?" and the answer was, "The United States will make all we want, because for the last three years she has produced upon the average 15,000,000 bales a year." And then they reasoned that Austria and Germany would not be permitted to get their usual supply, which was about 3,000,000 bales.

So with an average crop of 15,000,000 bales in the United States and 3,000,000 bales kept out of Austria and Germany to be added to the world's supply, Great Britain and Russia thought that there would be cotton in abundance for all their needs. But, Mr. Speaker, all these calculations have been upset. Great Britain and Russia reduced their cotton acreage, and the cotton producers of the United States reduced theirs and cut the supply of fertilizers to half the amount used in 1914. So, instead of making an average of 15,000,000 bales, we are making not more than 11,000,000 bales, 4,000,000 bales short of what they expected us to make. Now, then, take the reduction of cotton acreage in India, Egypt, and Russia and the reduction here, and then think of the vast amount of cotton consumed in making gun powder and high-explosive shells, surgical lint, and medicated cotton used by the armies in Europe—and they have used more in this way in the last 15 months than the world has ever used in any 25 years before. Now, we must not overlook the fact that Germany and Austria received early in the season through neutral countries 2,000,000 bales of the 1914 crop. That is just 1,000,000 bales short of their usual supply. Our cotton crop is short 5,000,000 bales, 2,000,000 bales gone to Germany and Austria, so there are 7,000,000 bales missing that they did not calculate on, and to-day the cotton supply in Russia and France is short and England faces a cotton famine.

Misrepresentations have been made and false statements published broadcast about the supply of old cotton abroad. I said to my friends down in Alabama early in the fall, "Gentlemen, if they have a big supply of old cotton in foreign countries, why is it that 10,000,000 bales of the United States cotton crop of 1914 have gone to the Old World?" I said that they were claiming that for the purpose of depressing the price in the United States and to keep from us the true condition with regard to the scarcity of cotton over there. What about the supply in the United States? Some tell us that there are 3,000,000 bales of old cotton here. I deny it. There is not more than 1,000,000, if that. Those who claim that do not take into account 3,000,000 bales consumed in making smokeless powder and explosive shells. I have investigated this matter. I talked with a retired United States naval officer, and he said to me, "Our factories and the armies in Europe have consumed over 3,000,000 bales in 12 months for smokeless powder and high-explosive shells"; but I did not stop there. I went to a gun-cotton expert who works at a powder factory and I said, "A United States naval officer told me that 3,000,000 bales of cotton were being consumed for munition purposes in 12 months," and the guncotton expert replied, "That is a very conservative estimate." But I was not satisfied with that, and I asked an expert statistician in the Bureau of the Census, and he said that fully 3,000,000 bales had been consumed in that way.

Because this cotton was not consumed by spindles speculators are trying to make the public believe that it is still in existence. With the world supply so small and the increasing demand so great, nothing but interference with cotton shipments and a conspiracy on the cotton exchanges keeps cotton below 15 cents. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will.

Mr. GARNER. Before the gentleman's time is up will the gentleman kindly suggest to the House a remedy for the question of interference with cotton on the high seas?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes, sir. One thing I would do, I would not permit any Egyptian cotton to come into our country until Great Britain permits our cotton to go freely to neutral nations. And I would not permit any country that interferes with our commerce with neutral nations to enjoy the fruits of friendly commerce with us. [Applause.] That is my position.

Now, Mr. Speaker, cotton has sold for 15 cents in times of peace. It sold for 15 cents five years prior to the war in Europe, and the cotton situation is more acute now than ever, for the consumption of cotton is so great compared with the supply. From the sewing thread to the sail rope and the sails upon the sailboat, from the cord on the lightning express to the wings of the aeroplane, from the powder behind the bullet to the deadly power behind the torpedo of the submarine, cotton has performed a tremendous work. Its uses in the domestic world are on the increase. We have mercerized cotton that resembles silk so much that it takes an expert to tell the difference. The cement industry is great and cotton sacks are used for shipping cement. Automobiles are being manufactured by the thousands and hundreds of thousands and cotton is used to make automobile tops and tires. Why, it is used for nearly everything; there is an increasing demand for it all the time, and yet the price has not followed the law of supply and demand this season.

The law of supply and demand is hampered. It is tampered with by these conspirators on the exchange, and they will not let that law have full and free operation; and I submit to this House that the conspiracy to prevent this or any other product of the soil from bringing a fair price and a living profit to the farmer ought to be investigated and prosecuted to the limit of the law. [Applause.] Let me say to all those interested in the New York Cotton Exchange: "You had better put your house in order, for the cotton exchange that does not reflect the prices that should follow the law of supply and demand is not helpful but hurtful to the producer and it has no legitimate place in the cotton trade. Aye, a cotton exchange that can be manipulated to the detriment and great injury of thirty millions of people dependent upon the cotton industry of the South ought to be abolished. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I think that an exchange properly regulated and honestly and fairly conducted is a help to the cotton trade. Why should there be a cotton exchange in New York? We have no grain exchanges in the South. Your great grain exchange is in the heart of the West, in the great city of Chicago, and our cotton exchanges, if we are going to have any, ought to be in the South, at Galveston, Tex.; Memphis, Tenn.; New Orleans; and Savannah, and not away up in the East at New York. [Applause.]

Now, in conclusion I want to say that the world's cotton crop of 1914 was 24,000,000 bales, and the world's spindles consumed 20,000,000 bales; felts, bats, medicated cotton, and so forth, lost at sea, destroyed by fire, 1,448,000 bales; smokeless powder and high-explosive shells, 3,000,000 bales, making 24,445,000 bales. We dipped into the old supply of 1913, and it is gone. Now, then, if the world consumes this year 20,000,000 bales, where are they going to get the cotton? The world's crop is less than the American crop in 1914, 16,000,000 bales. Our crop 11,000,000 bales, the world's crop outside 5,000,000 bales. You have 16,000,000 bales, with less than 2,000,000 of old cotton in existence, 18,000,000, and the spindles will consume 20,000,000 bales. Now, where is the other cotton to come from? [Applause.]

The cotton spindles of the United States will consume 7,000,000 bales of the present crop, and that would leave only 4,000,000 bales with which to supply the powder factories of the United States and to go abroad, where 10,000,000 bales of the 1914 crop were required.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, where is the cotton to come from? The cotton-using world is face to face with an inadequate supply of raw cotton. The fact is, next summer we are going to be dangerously near to a cotton famine. I am anxious that the cotton producer receive the price justified by the law of supply and demand.

Is not the farmer entitled to a profit of $300 on 20 bales of cotton? It costs about 10 cents a pound to produce cotton, and 15 cents a pound for 20 bales will give the farmer only $300 profit.

We will make a small crop of cotton this year. We made more corn last year than in any previous year. We are producing velvet beans in abundance in the cotton belt. The peanut industry in the district of my friend from Alabama [Mr. DENT] is flourishing, as well as in other sections of the South, and peanut oil is selling for 75 cents a gallon. It is splendid dye material, used to dye silk. We are going to plant peanuts and we are going to plant velvet beans in abundance. We are going to diversify even more than we did last year. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the Federal reserve act introduced into this House by that great statesman from Virginia, Mr. GLASS, is now in full operation, and what a blessing it is to the whole country. When the cotton crop of 1914 was on the market the financial situation was demoralized; but how different now since we are operating under the Federal reserve act. Money is plentiful, and we are enabled to hold our cotton. We ought to hold, and I believe that we will hold, 5,000,000 bales of this crop. We are going to get 15 cents or more, in spite of this conspiracy on the exchange, and if we can do that our farmers will be better off than they have been for many years. [Applause.]

One gentleman said in his letter to me:

> The cry every day around the exchange is that the South is still holding. We must bear the market, break the price, and make them sell, and then hold it until it goes to 15 or 20 cents.

I want the producer to get the benefit of some of that high price that is to come. The good price that the farmer has received for cotton seed has helped him in his efforts to hold his cotton—cottonseed oil is 60 cents a gallon. The linters on the cotton seed, that used to sell for 2 cents a pound or a cent and a half a pound, now sells for 8 and 9 cents. The money that he obtained from this source has helped the cotton producer to keep his cotton off the market. Cottonseed meal is selling for $36 and $38 a ton.

Mr. LOBECK. May I ask the gentleman a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. If you had a free selling market into Scandinavia and the Dutch Empire, the Netherlands, and into Denmark, do you not think that if we had competition from them to purchase, and had that as an increasing market, the price of cotton would go up?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. LOBECK. Have you not a remedy to offer as to how to get at that?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes. I have already referred to that. But we ought to have access to these markets. We ought to be permitted even to send cotton to Germany. Why? Because the expert testimony is now that they are using cellulose from wood with which to make their powder, and they want cotton to spin in making clothes for the people there.

Now, let me go back to the subject of this year's crop. Gentlemen, the boll weevil is in south Georgia and south Alabama. He is in my district; and I represent the largest cotton-producing district in the State. One county in my district made 44,000 bales of cotton in 1914 and about 16,000 bales last year. The boll weevil is in that county. One county in Mississippi—Montgomery, I believe—made 18,000 bales before the boll weevil entered it, and made but 3,000 bales under boll-weevil conditions. We are not going to try to raise cotton in some of the boll-weevil sections, but will try something else. Another and big reason why we are not going to produce a large cotton crop this year is the high price of fertilizers. We have to pay $40 a ton for potash. We used to buy it for $8 and $10. We can not afford to use it at that price, and we can not make cotton on a great deal of the land without it. Can we use cottonseed meal? That is a fine fertilizer. We can not use it at $36 or $38 a ton. It is too high. A man in my district had forty-odd tons of acid left over in the spring of 1914. He said, "I do not know what I will do with it." But in less than four months he sold it for $90 a ton and shipped it to Europe. They are taking all our potash and acid to use over there in explosive materials and in fumes and gases. We are not going to have the supply of fertilizers to make this cotton crop, and therefore we are going to plant other crops.

We are working toward what I have advocated ever since I have been in Congress, a spot-cotton exchange in the South and borrowing money on warehouse receipts—and storing cotton and holding it as is now being done is the greatest step ever taken in that direction.

There is a man in the State of Georgia to whom I desire to pay tribute, a wealthy southern gentleman, Mr. Asa G. Candler, who has organized a warehouse system by which the farmer can store his cotton and get a receipt that is negotiable at the banks. The day will come when we will have this situation all over the South. With diversified farming, with an exchange that reflects the law of supply and demand, we will some day obtain the price that this great staple should bring. We will restore it to its rightful place in the markets of the world.

Mr. Speaker, our export cotton-goods trade was better last year than it has ever been. The demand for American cotton goods is better now than last year, and our mills are consuming more cotton than they did a year ago. More cotton was consumed in the last 12 months than ever before in the history of the cotton industry. The cotton mills of the United States have a very small supply. France, Russia, and Italy are in great need of cotton, and Great Britain faces a cotton famine.

The people of the South are cooperating better now in the matter of holding cotton than ever before. Let the law be enforced and the conspiracy on the exchange broken up or the exchange abolished. Let cotton have fair treatment in the markets of the world, and a good and stable price will be received by those who toil to produce it.

Let the South stand firm and fear not. Every fact about the cotton supply and demand is in her favor. If she will hold on, fair prices and living profits are bound to come. [Prolonged applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAKER). The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, that will be allowed.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order already passed in the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is recognized for 30 minutes. [Applause.]

AMERICAN NEUTRALITY.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, on last Friday there was delivered in this House a most remarkable speech by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], which contained an indictment against all German-Americans of the United States. It is not my intention at this time to enter into a discussion of international law, for I am not a lawyer, or of our right to ship munitions of war to the allies or to any other country at war, but only in defense of the charges made against this class of people who have come to our country to make it their home. Nor do I intend to enter into any defense of either side of this conflict which now rages across the sea; but you could as easily stop the waves of the ocean as to prevent the sympathy of the native-born of other countries for their relatives over there. He seems to take for his text that the citizens of the United States of German birth have been disloyal to the country of their adoption. One remarkable and, it seems to me, an unjust statement was made about the German-Americans, when he charges they endeavor to prevent the shipment of arms and ammunition to the allies. He says:

His reasoning is simple, and from his point of view it is sound. "Ammunition," says he, "helps the allies; so, by hook or by crook, by laws or by strikes, by gold or by dynamite, by torpedo or by mine, let us do what we can to keep ammunition from reaching our enemies."

There is scattered throughout this land from one end to the other a large class of these people who have come from Germany to this country to find homes and better conditions for themselves and their families. Many of them did not come with property but they did come with clean hearts, pure minds, and willing hands to honestly work for what they received in the country of their adoption. Are there any who have lived among this class of people that can not testify to their industry, economy, and high character? Coming here, poor as they were, they have been willing and anxious to work that they might secure for themselves and their families more in life and live where the opportunities might be better. I care not in what community you may go where there are this class of citizens you will find them loyal, law-abiding, and standing for the upbuilding of the country, making conditions of the community better in every way. It is true, that when they first came to this country most of them were poor and had not had the advantages of a high-school or college education. These people coming from Germany could not afford to send their children to the best schools and colleges, but they secured what education was possible in the public schools in their home communities. As their families grew and they became more prosperous they did not miss the opportunity to better educate their children, so to-day in every walk of life in this country you will find people of German descent who take a prominent part in all the trades and professions of the country. I can remember distinctly, as a boy, when living on a farm in Illinois, of seeing these German immigrants coming to that country with no other property except what few belongings they could carry in a bundle, some of them coming to my father's farm and unable to talk the English language and that my mother was the only one on the farm who could communicate with them in the German language, some of them being employed to work on my father's farm at that time. Farm wages then were small, but being economical they saved a part of what they earned, and as years passed on I have seen these same men acquire farms and other property and become very useful and influential men in the community. Their children grew to manhood and womanhood, being educated in our schools and colleges and taking a prominent part in the affairs of life, and to-day are among the best people of that community.

My grandfather, a man of German descent, who was a minister of the old Moravian Church, often speaking in that early time to the members of his congregation in German, because they could understand no other language, then living at his old home in Salem, N. C., afterwards moving to the wilds of Indiana, and established the town of Hope, which is now a thriving little city. Having a family of eight girls, they were all educated at the old seminary in Salem, N. C. At that early time, before the railroads had been built, he took by wagon two of them back to the old school and leaving them for two years, and then going back with two others to this school and bringing back the two who were there until he had educated his eight daughters. Afterwards he moved to Illinois, where in that community there was scarcely a house. He there established the town of West Salem. This was done by one of these German descendants, as I believe, a true American, full of patriotism and love of his country. To tell me that men who have such instincts of liberty and love for home and country that his ancestors belonged to that class who are disloyal or dynamiters is saying a thing which is unwarranted and a slander upon that great body of tried and true patriotic Germans who have come to our land. [Applause.]

I remember well at the breaking out of the Spanish-American War the one who marched at the head of the company going from my home town was a German, born and raised in that country across the sea. [Applause.] His patriotism and his love for country induced him to volunteer to fight for his adopted country, and, if necessary, forfeit his life in the interest of patriotism for this country. [Applause.] We can look back over the pages of history and find among the early settlers of our country there were those who were born in Germany who took a prominent part in the fight for our independence and liberty. In the Mexican War there were also those who were born in that European country, shouldered their muskets, went out to battle for their country to which they had emigrated. In the great Civil War which existed in this country from 1861 to 1865 there were many who were not even naturalized, not having resided a sufficient length of time in this country, but who volunteered to fight for the preservation of the Union. No braver and better soldiers served in that war than these Germans, who had come to this country to seek homes for themselves and their families. If the South asks that cotton be permitted to go to neutral countries, if the West should demand that the products of its farmers should have the right to be exported more freely to foreign countries, they are told that it is, "love for mammon."

This remarkable passage appears in the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts:

If our beef barons and our cotton kings and our metal syndicates find that they can not get the exalted price for their goods which they seek to garner out of a devious trade with Germany, at all events we have the satisfaction of knowing that they will be forced to sell their product in the home market at more reasonable figures.

Also, in another place, appears this statement as made by the gentleman:

Has anyone heard Mr. Bryan tell the distinguished advocates of an embargo that their threat to enact legislation which our Government itself has recently declared to be unneutral is certain to endanger our relations with Great Britain, and France, and Russia, and Italy, and Japan? Has anyone heard Mr. Bryan chide King Cotton or his courtiers for their lack of patriotism? Has anyone seen our recent Secretary of State stretch out a single finger to check this scheme for garroting sore-beset Democracy? Perhaps Mr. Bryan's heart throbs for poor King Cotton. Mine, I confess, remains calm. There is, at least, a silver lining to my cloud. In case these cotton gentlemen are obliged to dispose of their product without securing the extravagant prices which a devious traffic with Germany would assuredly bring them, we can comfort ourselves with the reflection that the useful cotton handkerchief can still be purchased at the moderate figure of three for a quarter.

A great amount of cotton is shipped from the South to be manufactured in the mills of New England. Large quantities of grain and food products are shipped from the West to feed the operatives of the mills of Massachusetts and other parts of the New England States. I would not charge it against the gentleman from Massachusetts, but I suggest that if a limit could be placed upon the amount of cotton and food products to be exported both would be cheaper in price, and, as the gentleman says upon this question, his heart remains calm. The gentleman's heart can remain calm, and there is a silver lining to his cloud in the satisfaction of cheaper material for the mills of his own State and cheaper food for his people at the expense of the farmers of the South and West. [Applause.] If, as he says, "Cotton handkerchiefs may still be purchased at three for a quarter," and yet the profits would be greater in three for a quarter with cheaper cotton and cheaper food than there would be if there was free export of both cotton and food products. It does not seem that it should be considered a crime for the people of this country who produce these products to ask that there should be less restriction upon their exportation that prices may be increased thereby. If the market is restricted, their profits must be reduced and the profits of the manufacturers be increased as a result.

War is an awful thing, and we should do everything honorably in our power to keep our country from ever engaging in another conflict with any foreign power. We do not know what may come in the future or how soon our Government may be compelled to call upon the young men to volunteer to defend the flag and battle for our rights. Let us instead talk for peace and not for war; let us work and pray for universal peace and not big ships, guns, or more men to enlist for battle; let us hope and pray that the mothers of our country shall not be called upon to send their boys to war.

It should be the duty of every individual of this country to avoid complications wherever it is possible to do so. I shall not argue the question of the rights of our citizens to travel upon belligerent ships, but I do believe it is a part of wisdom for American citizens who have the love of their country at heart and their desire to avoid complications, when necessary to travel upon the sea, that they should take a neutral ship. We many times talk loud and long of our rights and give too little attention to our duty. It seems to me, though we may have the right to take passage upon these belligerent vessels, yet for the sake of our country and to avoid complications that may result we ought not to take chances of drawing our country into any difficulty with any foreign power. When war comes sometimes things are done which men would not tolerate during a time of peace; such has always been the case, and always will. Nations are only an aggregation of individuals, bound together in the organization of government. When men become angry at each other many times unlawful acts are committed. In our own Civil War complaints were made upon both sides and acts of violence were committed which were not countenanced by either Government at that time. I do not believe that with all fairness to the large element of our citizens of foreign birth or German descent that the indictment which has been made against them can be sustained by the gentleman who made it or will be accepted by the people of our country. Whatever difficulty may come to our country from any foreign foe, and even though it is Germany itself, this class of citizens who are so severely criticized will be loyal to our flag, and they and their sons will be among the first to shoulder arms and battle for the rights of our people. It is unfortunate, indeed, that in the American Congress any Representative should charge this large body of our citizens, without exception, with such acts of disloyalty to their adopted country, whose Constitution and laws they have sworn to support. Such statements can only breed an ill feeling and bring on strife among our citizens.

I have taken this opportunity that I might express my resentment against such statements being made by anyone. I have faith in the patriotism and loyalty of this large body of our citizens, though of foreign birth, and their descendants, who came here for better opportunity, for greater liberty and independence for themselves and for their descendants. Many of them may not have the culture and education of the citizens of Massachusetts, because their opportunities have been limited, yet within their hearts there is just as much patriotism and love of home and country. [Applause.] I can not believe that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] represents the true sentiment of the people of Massachusetts in his charge against the people of this country who are of German birth.

Let us hope in the American Congress such an attack will never again be made and that the country will not believe that the American Congress does countenance or indorse such statements. We have reason to believe from past experience when our country was in peril and it became necessary to engage in war that these men of foreign birth or their descendants have been among the first of those to enlist and offer their services and their lives, if necessary, to sustain the flag. [Prolonged applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is recognized for 30 minutes. [Applause.]

THE BALTIMORE PLATFORM OF 1912.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, another plank in that remarkable compendium of Democratic thought, the Baltimore platform of 1912, has been shattered into splinters. The President of the United States, who ran upon that platform and who has already rendered many of its dulcet paragraphs into sawdust, is not in sympathy with the persistent idea of his late Secretary of State that a single term of six years should satisfy a President. Credit is to be given Mr. Wilson for having made his declaration confidentially to Mr. Palmer, of Pennsylvania, away back in February, 1913, before he had actually assumed the reins of the presidential office. It was written at a time when the gentleman from Nebraska, who was to have been "knocked into a cocked hat," but who was forgiven sufficiently to be appointed premier of the Cabinet, was holding fast to the notion often expressed in the Commoner, and as often vociferated from the public platform, that in all fairness to the people four years would be enough unless by a constitutional amendment the presidential term should be lengthened to a period of six years. It will be recalled that Mr. Bryan spoke before numerous public assemblies and certain State legislatures before the one-term plank was inserted in the Baltimore platform. He believed in it, and indicated the sort of punishment that should be meted out to any "traitor" who would violate the principles enunciated and the pledges made in the party platform.

Without explaining why Mr. Bryan left the Cabinet, whether for peace or for war, it is now clear after the lapse of approximately two years that Mr. Wilson did not agree with Mr. Bryan and that he ran upon the Democratic platform into which Mr. Bryan had injected his favorite plank with a mental reservation. Indeed, it is interesting to note from the President's recently published message to Mr. Palmer that he had very positive views as to the machinations that might be employed by ambitious and clever men to thwart the will of the people, if that will expressed with regard to a second term should be in favor of the reelection of a President. In his letter to Mr. Palmer, although he may have had no reference to the ambitions of his late premier, we find him saying:

If you wish to learn the result of constitutional ineligibility to reelection, ask any former governor of New Jersey, for example, what the effect is in actual experience. He will tell you how cynically and with what complacence the politicians banded against him waited for the inevitable end of his term, to take their chances with his successor.

As it is not our purpose to embroil two distinguished statesmen in what may appear to be a controversy leading up to a presidential rivalry, we shall pass from the possible ambitions of the late premier, who parted from his President with a hearty "God bless you," to what now appears to be the fixed determination of the President to permit the people to exercise their free will with respect to his own renomination. There have been numerous signs recently that the President did not intend to seek the retirement of private life. The state of the Republic as it has been conducted by his administration during the past two years is of itself sufficient to warrant his best and most patriotic endeavor, if only for the vindication of those policies which he has espoused, some of them in sympathy with some of the planks of the platform upon which he was elected and some of them wholly at variance therewith.

In the platform adopted at Baltimore, it will be recalled, trusts and combinations of capital, generally attributed to the successful administration of the Republican Party for a period of 16 consecutive years, were severely denounced.

A private monopoly is indefensible and intolerable—

Said the patchworkers of Baltimore—

We therefore favor the vigorous enforcement of the criminal as well as the civil law against trusts and trust officials, and demand the enactment of such additional legislation as may be necessary to make it impossible for a private monopoly to exist in the United States. * * * We condemn the action of the Republican administration in compromising with the Standard Oil Co. and the Tobacco Trust and its failure to invoke the criminal provisions of the antitrust law against the officers of those corporations after the courts had declared that from the undisputed facts in the record they had violated the criminal provisions of the law.

It was a heavy task the Democratic Party laid upon its President, but he started out bravely to put the so-called monopolies out of business. His first address to Congress, it will be remembered, was in line with the Democratic speeches in the House in favor of "the wretched and the downtrodden" everywhere, and against the "grasping hand of private monopoly." In that first address the President boldly struck out for the overthrow of all kinds of "artificial advantage," and for the survival of "the law of nature."

We must abolish—

everything that bears even the semblance of privilege, or of any kind of artificial advantage, and put our business men and producers under the stimulation of constant necessity to be efficient, economical, and enterprising masters of competitive supremacy, better workers and merchants than any in the world. Aside from the duties laid upon articles which we do not and probably can not produce, therefore, and the duties laid upon luxuries and merely for the sake of the revenues they yield, the object of the tariff duties henceforth laid must be effective competition, the whetting of American wits by contact with the wits of the rest of the world.

Since, in the estimation of the President and the Baltimore patchworkers, the sum of all our monopolistic and trust evils was to be found in the Republican protective tariff, we must not lose sight of this first and important declaration of presidential intent, nor should we forget that along about this time came our distinguished Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield, to advise all men in business that their methods were antiquated and that if they expected to survive they must follow the President's instructions not only to "whet their wits" against both the wages and the wits of the world, but to become more efficient in bookkeeping.

There was no European war at the time these declarations were made, and during the ensuing months the American public had a fair chance to observe the effects of this new and destructive economic policy.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SLOAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is criticizing the observance or nonobservance of certain Baltimore planks. Does he do that from the Republican standpoint that says it understands a platform should be binding, or from the standpoint of the highest authority in the Democracy, the chairman of the national committee, who says it is "suggestive, but not binding"? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am referring to that kind of platform that is put out only to fool the people, and which did it very successfully in 1912. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mills closed and workmen were thrown out of employment. Great uncertainty prevailed, and the United States suffered a loss of trade which threatened to grow steadily less as the witwhetting policy was enforced. Conditions became so bad that shortly after the outbreak of the European war the President relented in the general crusade against the so-called "large interests" from which trusts are supposed to be bred, that he received the railroad presidents of the country, who had been brought to great distress, and reassured them with soothing words.

When the opportunity came to these same large interests to profit by the war in Europe through the insurance of American shipping that was being risked in or about the war zones, the President again yielded to conferences with the representatives of the mighty financial powers of New York and gave them words of comfort and good cheer.

Let us consider these things in connection with that statement in the Baltimore platform which insisted upon "criminal" prosecutions along with such proceedings as might be brought under the civil law. And in this connection let us not forget the violent speeches that were made upon the Democratic side of the House in line with the "criminal" clause of the Baltimore platform when the Clayton antitrust bill was under consideration. Profits and trusts were to be destroyed by the Underwood tariff. Wealth was to be distributed under the Federal reserve law, but under the new Democratic antitrust laws the so-called "velvet touch" of the Sherman antitrust law was to be eliminated and "teeth" were to be put into the instrument.

Yes; somebody was to be prosecuted and sent to jail when these new laws became operative. First, profits were to be taken away; second, accumulated wealth was to be distributed; third, the large interests were not to be allowed to escape under civil proceedings, but they were to be brought to the bar of the court under "a law which had teeth in it" and which, in effect, was to purify our body politic. I pause to observe, however, that so far as known no trust malefactor has yet been placed in limbo for violating the Democratic antitrust laws.

We have spoken of the President's reassurance to those who were in trouble. It was his comforting announcement that the troubles brought on by the Underwood tariff law were "psychological" and that "big business" should no longer worry simply because it was big, although big business, along with all other kinds of business, had reached rock bottom and could only hope for that turn in the tide which could not be worse. As a matter of fact, the turn for the better came only through the accident or the incident of demands resulting from the war in Europe.

The publication of the President's letter with respect to Mr. Bryan's consistent advocacy of a single term may have had no connection with the careful statement issued on the previous day by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, with the sanction of Attorney General Gregory, after a conference with that new and highly industrious if not ornamental body, the Federal Trade Commission, but it is significant in view of the Baltimore platform declarations in favor of "criminal" prosecutions and the failure of the administration to put "criminal teeth" in the Clayton antitrust law, that the Attorney General should endeavor to make the public understand that the Sherman Act is a pretty good act after all and to give assurance at this praticular time that it "is enforced by the Department of Justice in the same manner and according to the same rules of policy as other statutes—with the same care and with neither more nor less vigor."

But why the Attorney General should go so far in his explanation as to almost apologize to the "large interests" that were so severely condemned at Baltimore, and which the President and his party set out to destroy, is difficult to understand, except upon the assumption that with respect to these so-called "large interests" and those other industries of the country which were to be made to "whet their wits against the wits of the world," the time had come to atone for mistakes as to policy and for the injury actually done to business by the Democratic Party.

For in this roundabout statement of the Attorney General, after discussing the Shipping Pool case, the Anthracite Coal cases, the Harvester case, the Steel case, and the United Shoe Machinery case, the Attorney General, as in conference with the Federal Trade Commission and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States is made to say:

> This led to the question as to the policy of the department as regards the method of enforcing the law in those cases which are admittedly doubtful. On that point the Attorney General stated that where men have entered into a transaction believing in good faith that the transaction is a lawful one, and subsequently upon complaint made the department reaches the conclusion that the transaction was not in accordance with the statute, but is yet satisfied of the good faith and innocent purpose of the parties, and can see that there was ground for the view of the law upon which they acted, it has not been and would not be the policy of the department to invoke extreme penalties against them.
> In such a case the department would consider that the just and appropriate and quickest way of enforcing the law would be by a civil proceeding in which the question involved could be contested or a consent decree entered, according as the defendants desired, or by a notice to the parties of the department's conclusion, with opportunity to abandon or modify the transaction.

So instead of holding the Republican Party up to scorn any longer the Attorney General and the Federal Trade Commission, at the very moment when the administration is sizing up that all-powerful public opinion to which the President defers in his two-term letter, all business, including "big business," is gently informed that "the good faith and innocent purpose of the parties" engaged even in questionable legal transactions are to be considered before extreme penalties are to be invoked. Apparently there are no teeth in the antitrust laws of the Democratic Party of which anyone in particular need now be afraid, and it begins at last to appear as if the Democratic trust-busting platform enunciated at Baltimore was all moonshine.

In the language of Gov. Colquitt, of Texas, as expressed in a statement issued by him December 2, 1914:

> The administration's antitrust laws are barefaced fakes, so far as protecting the people from trust oppression is concerned. These laws please nobody else so well as they do the Standard Oil, the Steel, and other great trusts.

Mr. Speaker, in the 30 minutes allotted to me I have said about all I can get in on this readjustment of the trust question by the Democratic Party. The antitrust plank and the one-term plank pledged to the people at Baltimore have gone glimmering. They warrant us in asking our fellow countrymen why in 1912 they were led into the delusion that the Democratic Party would be able to keep any of the promises it made during the preceding 16 years. The people had a taste of what that party would do in its failure to keep its pledge for free tolls through the Panama Canal.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman used 17 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TAGGART. Has the gentleman any explanation of how discriminating some of the people that he has mentioned have been when it comes to the matter of dining?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the matter of dining?

Mr. TAGGART. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I suspect that the two-term announcement, with the suggestion that one term is not sufficient for a President, follows very rapidly after the dinner given in New York by a gentleman named Gary, which has had more or less influence on the Democratic Party.

Mr. TAGGART. Do you not think the object of that dinner was to capture the wagon train and interrupt the communications of another party?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There may have been some ulterior purpose in that dinner. I was not a participant in it, but I was convinced the moment I read about it that there would be renewed activity in the Democratic Party, and I was not mistaken. The trusts are not to be prosecuted during the remainder of the present Democratic administration.

Mr. TAGGART. In the matter of hospitality, does not the gentleman think that a rare discrimination was used in the selection of the guests?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, I have known members of the Democratic Party refuse to appear at a $2.50 banquet for fear they would be committed to something—perhaps to make contributions to the Navy League. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAGGART. That was something that was never witnessed before.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, yes; Republicans have gone frequently to $5 dinners and not been committed to anything. They have expressed themselves freely and without reserve.

Mr. TAGGART. I will ask the gentleman if they have ever been committed to anything?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; they have been committed to many things. Although the President, in his Indianapolis speech delivered last February, said that the Republican Party had not originated a single idea in the last 30 years, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that the Republican Party has too many ideas to allow the people to get into such a condition that stamp tax and war taxes have to be imposed upon the people in times of peace.

Now, I am ready for any other questions that may be propounded from the Democratic side. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.] I am trying to argue that the Democratic Party has been an utter and complete failure in the Nation; and if I was given time I would like to read some expressions from a Democratic governor in the State of Texas, who elucidates this subject delightfully. I am going to ask unanimous consent to put his remarks in the RECORD along with my speech.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman pardon me for just another question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. TAGGART. Does the gentleman think that it is impossible for the big business of this country to obey the law?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I certainly do not. I am in favor of big business and little business in this country, and I am against the demagogue who has interfered with big business through such fool agitation as we have had on the Democratic side of the House for the last four years. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TAGGART. Are you criticizing the Attorney General for not proceeding, or are you commending the big interests for obeying the law?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am recalling that certain gentlemen on the other side of the House, when they brought in the Clayton antitrust bill, said "The Republicans have failed to prosecute the trusts. We propose to pass a law that will have teeth in it. We are going after the rich. We are going after the malefactors." I am criticizing them for not making good. Why, your distinguished colleague who has just come up from Texas [Mr. DAVIS] made a beautiful speech on this floor the other day about 8,000,000 farmers in this country, 5,000,000 of whom seemed to be living under chattel mortgages under a Democratic administration. I was astounded, because more automobiles have gone into the farming territory of this country during the last two years than have ever been known in the history of the world. We people from the industrial districts are envious. But, answering the gentleman: I am in favor of the enforcement of the law as it is written on the statute books, and I think that when Democrats, who professed to know more about it than the Republicans, got into power, they ought, at least, to have lived up to their promises and performed some time, somewhere.

Mr. TAGGART. If it is a fact that more automobiles have gone into the agricultural regions than ever before, is that an illustration of hard times?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Borrowing the illustration of the President of the United States, and of his Secretary of the Treasury, who is wrestling with the financial statements that are being sent to us every day now, I suppose that that condition is due to the war in Europe. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Almost everything is due to the war in Europe now, except that deficiency which gentlemen on the Democratic side are not quite able clearly to explain.

Mr. TAGGART. Do you refuse to apply the principle of law——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Understand, I am not a lawyer; I am dealing with lawyers, but I am trying to explain to the dear public, for whom the Democratic Party has been speaking so plaintively for four years, why it is that when you said you were going to give the poor man a chance in the courts, and take the criminal malefactors up to the bar of justice, you now back away from the enforcement of your law, so that the poor man, if he ever was at a disadvantage, is left exactly where he was before, and the larger interests, with attorneys and ability to meet the expenses of litigation, are still in a favored position. If gentlemen who come from the Democratic States, and who raised this issue in behalf of the poorer litigant, are satisfied with that, why, they are welcome to it.

Mr. TAGGART. Would the gentleman object to adding a list of criminal malefactors in addition to those he has mentioned, and also explain why they are so choice in seeking their companions?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I noticed that when the war-risk insurance bill was up for consideration, 62 of them who did not want to invest their own money in providing an insurance company to take care of exports, and possibly war munitions they were sending to Europe, walked down to the White House and spent a very happy hour or two with the President, and got his approval of their scheme to take $5,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States, money belonging to your constituents and mine, to organize an insurance company for their own benefit. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. TAGGART. How much did the United States lose thereby?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The United States lost very severely on the first two ships that went down. All the losses have not yet been ascertained. Some of the cases are in dispute. I welcome the inquiries of the gentleman from Kansas. He is a very intelligent Member of this House, and I am pleased to have him go on with his questions. Now I pause to find out what the administration has done to make good the promises set forth in the Baltimore platform.

Mr. TAGGART. If you will permit me, I will just go on with my questions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is all right. That is what I want the gentleman to do.

Mr. TAGGART. Since you and I were small boys we have heard men on the stump talking about malefactors of great wealth who have been oppressing the poor and downtrodden.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is true; but that came from your side of the House, never from ours. We knew it to be buncombe then, just as it is buncombe now, which is proven by the fact that you have not done anything to relieve the situation complained of.

Mr. TAGGART. If you will go through the whole history of the jurisprudence of the United States, you can not find the name of one of them that was ever put in jail under any Republican administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not know about that. I think we settled the Northern Securities case. We did not go out with any flourish of trumpets as to what we were going to do. We usually went ahead and did it. For 16 years you promised the people you were going to do certain things. Finally by fooling them you got into power as a minority party. You are a minority party now, and you are assuming to run the affairs of this Government for a majority of the people who believe in a protective tariff, which you pretend not to believe in—a tariff that never imposed a tax on the people which any of them could feel or appreciate. Instead of that your only performance up to date has been to put an income tax upon business men and a war tax upon all the people. Now you propose to put the income tax upon the workingman and a war tax upon necessities.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. I rise to ask if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield for a question?

Mr. TAGGART. I think I have the floor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If it is for one of those tart Texas stories, I may not yield. The gentleman has a great reputation down there, and I must be a little careful——

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Since the gentleman quoted me a while ago, I just want to ask if he will yield for a question.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman does not want to yield, he does not have to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman for a question, certainly.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. I want to know, since the gentleman has quoted me, if he really thinks that the Democratic Party could be expected in three years to undo all the monopolies that the Republican Party has created in the last 10 years? [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not after hearing the gentleman's speech, do I think I could convince the gentleman. But the gentleman from Texas did convince me as to this: The gentleman quoted liberally from the Bible, and the Democrats do not often do that. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

But, gentlemen, I was observing that the Democratic Party had got mixed up on its platform. Many of the pledges made in 1912 had utterly disappeared, because the judgment of the President was superior to those of Mr. Bryan and others who framed the platform. The first break was the failure to give free tolls through the Panama Canal.

The high cost of living was to have been reduced under a solemn pledge of the Democratic Party, but that pledge has not been lived up to; the cost of living has gone higher and higher and higher, and the people have had no relief. The Baltimore platform promised to relieve the people of burdens which it pretended the Republican Party had imposed through a protective tariff. The administration afforded no relief, but added to the burdens of the people by taking away their employment and imposing direct taxes in time of peace. It denounced the Republican Party for extravagance and pledged economy in Government expenditures. It has been more extravagant and more wasteful than any preceding administration in the history of the Nation.

In view of its vacillating policy and its proved incompetency to be useful, except as a party of obstruction, we may readily commit the second-term proposition to the arbitrament of the people, leaving them to decide whether in the future they will prefer to sustain a Republican protective tariff system, which encourages industry and stimulates business throughout the land, or whether they will again submit to the specious, platform-breaking, tax-creating, business-destroying methods of the party in power. The President's challenge is clear and explicit. It ought to be accepted instantly and with a cheerful Republican countenance. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a statement made by the governor of Texas, in which he charges that the Democratic administration at Washington has been a complete failure.

Mr. HENRY. What is the request?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To publish a statement by your Gov. Colquitt, made a year ago.

Mr. HENRY. It is Gov. Ferguson now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Gov. Colquitt, while governor of the State, made a declaration which ought to be of interest to all Texans as it will be to the people of the United States. It relates to the utter incompetency of the Democratic administration at Washington and its failure to live up to any of its platform pledges.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement referred to above is as follows:

GOV. COLQUITT DECLARES PRESIDENT A FAILURE—EXECUTIVE OF LONE STAR STATE DENOUNCES MEN WHO ARE AT HEAD OF THE GOVERNMENT—MEXICAN POLICY ASSAILED.

HOUSTON, TEX., December 26, 1914.

The Wilson administration has been the greatest failure in the history of the Presidency. The South is a land literally flowing with milk and honey; it has made one of the biggest and best crops in its history, and yet, because of the utter incompetence of the men in charge of the Government, its business is prostrated, its credit is impaired, and thousands of its people are starving.

The administration's tariff law was pledged to lower the cost of living, and it has had the contrary effect. By putting raw materials on the free list and keeping the protective tariff on manufactured goods, it has condemned American farmers by hundreds of thousands to peonage and has enabled the manufacturers, getting their raw materials cheaper, to charge higher prices for their goods, which they have done. Hides were free-listed and shoes have gone higher. This is true of virtually every single item similarly treated in the administration tariff law. The American workingman pays more for the finished product, and both are robbed to further enrich the protected manufacturing trusts and combines.

The administration's foreign policy has been imbecile. It has allowed England to dictate conditions as to cotton shipments to European countries that enabled the English spinners to rob the American cotton growers of half the value of their crop.

England stopped American shipments until the English spinners had bought their supply at 6½ cents a pound and stored it in Texas and other southern warehouses. Then England consented to declare cotton not contraband, and France followed suit a day or two later. Our Government weakly submitted to England's dictation, playing into the hands of the English spinners and betraying the American cotton growers as completely as if this country were an English vassal State.

If I had been President, I would have served notice on England's premier that our foreign trade in cotton and other noncontraband commodities was going forward with or without England's consent, and, if necessary, I would have sent American ironclads to England's door to enforce that notice.

The administration's repeal of the Panama Canal tolls exemption in violation of the party's national platform was another weak surrender to England. If free tolls for American ships had not been repealed, hundreds of American-owned ships flying a foreign flag would have come under the American flag to get the benefit of exemption and we would to-day have an American merchant marine competent to carry our goods to foreign markets. We have no such merchant marine, and to supply it the Wilson administration is proposing to spend the taxpayers' money buying a subsidized national shipping service.

"EGREGIOUS FAILURE" IN MEXICO.

The Wilson-Bryan management of the Mexican affair has been an egregious failure. They landed an American army in Vera Cruz to force Huerta to salute the flag and have brought it back without getting the salute. They now ask Congress to appropriate more than $500,000 to pay the expenses of that ridiculous expedition. For what? What did it accomplish? It set all Mexico aflame against the Americans, not only in Mexico, but in Texas, where all along the north bank of the Rio Grande there are 10 Mexicans for 1 American.

It brought on a reign of terror all along the Texas border, so that when the Federal Government refused to afford protection for our people in their own State I was forced to send 1,200 Texas troops down there to give it. Mexican bandit gangs were crossing the border into Texas, raiding and terrorizing our scattered people. Women and children were huddled together in brick houses, menaced with murder and worse. My desk was flooded with telegrams from chambers of commerce, bankers, stockmen, and other responsible citizens, praying for protection at points all along our 1,200-mile frontier.

The Federal Government had only 60 troopers at Brownsville to cover more than two-thirds of that long border. When I rushed the Texas State troops down there, stationing a company at each of the principal border towns, I instructed them not to cross the river nor in any way to violate the neutrality law, but at all costs to protect the lives and property of Texas people.

Secretary of War Garrison telegraphed me that he thought it unwise to have two military forces occupying the same territory under separate commanders, and suggested that I withdraw the State troops. I wired him that I would withdraw the Texas troops when he sent an equal number of United States Regulars to take their place. And I kept our men there until he did send an equal number of Regulars to replace them at every place where our men were stationed.

I understand they had everything prepared at Washington to have me indicted by a Federal grand jury and put in a Federal prison, on the assumption that I meant to invade Mexico—a palpable absurdity, which only men utterly ignorant of the situation could have entertained. It is a fact, which the country does not know, that when our Texas troops arrived in Brownsville the Mexican commander at Matamoros, across the river, offered to surrender that city to the commander of the troops of United States cavalrymen. The commander at Matamoros evidently believed the Texas troops meant to take his city and thought the United States troops were more friendly than the Texans. The Washington conception of our business on the border was as ridiculous as that of the Mexican commander.

CALLS IT ENCOURAGING BANDITS.

Wilson and Bryan have stood by encouraging one gang of bandits after another while people were being butchered all over Mexico, while the vast American interests in that country were being confiscated and shot to pieces, and to-day the Mexican chaos is worse than at any time since Madero was assassinated. Villa is the dictator of the country, and I understand that all he wants is to be chief of police of the City of Mexico, with control of the gambling concessions in the City of Mexico and Juarez.

Our Government has kept England and Germany from restoring order in Mexico, and has itself done nothing but contribute to the disorder and lawlessness by its vacillating "watching and waiting" policy—if it can be called a policy. The property interests of Mexico and the big American exploiters of Mexican resources have got control of the situation absolutely, and these same interests have got the ear of our Government at Washington.

ANTITRUST LAWS "FAKE."

The administration's antitrust laws are barefaced fakes, so far as protecting the people from trust oppression is concerned. These laws please nobody else so well as they do the Standard Oil, the Steel, and other great trusts.

I believed at first that the Federal reserve banking act was the administration's one meritorious achievement, but national bankers tell me it is going to prove a failure. The control of the system, in practice, appears to rest in New York City instead of in Washington.

I am fully convinced the national election of 1916 will end the Democratic régime. The policies of the Democratic national administration have wholly failed either to curb monopolies or to lower the cost of living for the people, and they have materially contributed to deprive millions of wage earners of employment. The administration valorized $20,000,000,000 worth of corporate securities owned in the North and East by a Treasury Department order to national banks to loan money on listed securities at not less than the closing quotations of July 30, 1914.

But the same administration, when asked to allow the people to use a quarter of a billion dollars of their collective credit for two or three years to save them from losing $500,000,000 on their cotton crop, regarded valorization as violative of sound government.

The President stood in the road and condemned the South, which made him, to heavier loss and more widespread misery than it has known in three generations. He vindicated an obsolete theory of political economy, but he mighty near ruined the country doing it.

I raised among my personal friends in Texas more than $10,000 for the Wilson campaign fund, and the only favor I asked of him was that he appoint men who would aid the Texas State government to enforce law and order along the Mexican border. It was my earnest desire to assist in making the Democratic national administration a success, but I would not sacrifice the honor of my State nor the welfare of her people to win the favor of any administration.

At no time have I failed to get courteous treatment from the leaders of the Mexican revolution. I sympathize with the Mexican people, but I also sympathize with Americans who have property rights in Mexico that ought to have been protected.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT IN IOWA.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 73, and of the Senate bill which is practically of the same tenor, and I ask that it be considered immediately.

Mr. FERRIS. Reserving the right to object, what bill is it?

Mr. WEBB. It is a bill to change the time for holding court in some of the districts in Iowa.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I notice that the Senate bill makes a very marked change from the House bill, and I think the gentleman ought to let it go to the committee and be reported back.

Mr. WEBB. I will state that I consulted two gentlemen from Iowa mainly interested in it, Mr. GOOD and Mr. TOWNER, and they had no objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill in connection with the House bill.

Mr. MANN. I understand that, but still I think we ought to have the opinion of the committee on a matter involved in the bill where the Senate and the House differ.

Mr. WEBB. The Senate bill takes Johnson County out of the northern district and puts it in the southern. Those matters are generally left to the delegation of the State, and I called it up at the suggestion of the gentlemen from Iowa, Mr. TOWNER and Mr. GOOD.

Mr. MANN. The question involved in it is whether Congress can transfer a county from one district to another for the sole pleasure of a man who has just been lucky enough to be appointed judge of that court.

Mr. WEBB. That is true, but I want to say that that particular county for many years was in the southern district where it is now sought to be placed again.

The SPEAKER. Upon what does the gentleman from Illinois claim that the bill ought to go to the committee? Are the House and Senate bills different?

Mr. MANN. The House and the Senate bill are very different.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill is referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WEBB. That is entirely satisfactory to me.

COAL AND OIL LEASES.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 406) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CULLOP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read the bill by title.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to speak upon the terms of the pending measure. The bill speaks for itself. I have, however, thought it important to discuss the general principles upon which this legislation is based, because it has been charged that this bill is in violation of the moral, legal, equitable, and constitutional rights of the Western States.

Does the United States own the public lands in the Western States and has Congress the same power to sell, to lease, or to reserve these lands as any other private proprietor who may own lands within these States? A majority of your Committee on the Public Lands has answered this question in the affirmative, for without reaching such a conclusion it would have been impossible to have reported this bill in its present form. When we agree that the United States holds the public lands as owner, then there is a logical reason for every provision in this measure.

A minority of the committee believe that the United States holds these lands not as owner but as trustee. The minority report says:

It is true that the legal title to the public domain rests in the United States, but that title is simply held in trust with the ultimate object that it shall be transferred to the people who will develop it, and thereby make possible the creation of or the maintenance of independent States of the Union. It was said in Shively v. Bowlby (152 U. S., 1, 49):

"The territory is held by the United States for the benefit of the whole people and in trust for the several States to be ultimately created out of that territory."

To prove this contention the minority report refers to the terms of the cession to the United States of the western lands belonging to Virginia and the others of the original thirteen States. Prior to the adoption of the Articles of Confederation certain of the States, including Maryland and New Jersey, six in all, insisted that the western lands claimed by the remaining seven States of the Confederation ought to be handled for the general good of the entire Confederation and not retained and disposed of by the individual States alleging ownership thereof. The matter was formally laid before Congress by the State of Delaware February 23, 1779; by the State of Maryland May 21, 1779. New York, claiming 202,187 acres, was the first to respond, her delegates on March 7, 1780, presenting an act proposing to relinquish the lands claimed by her in the West—with respect to the jurisdiction as well as the right or preemption of sale, or the right or preemption of sale only, shall be and inure for the use and benefit of such of the United States as shall become members of the Federal alliance of the said States and for no other use or purpose whatever.

On receipt of this document the Congress of the Confederation adopted a resolution providing—that the unappropriated lands which may be ceded or relinquished to the United States by any particular State * * * shall be disposed of for the common benefit of the United States * * * that the lands shall be granted or settled at such times and under such regulations as shall hereafter be agreed on by the United States in Congress assembled or any nine or more of them.

Thereafter, and in compliance with the resolution, the following States made cessions of their territory in the West to the United States: New York, March 1, 1781; Virginia, March 1, 1784; Massachusetts, April 19, 1785; Connecticut, September 13, 1786, and May 30, 1800; South Carolina, August 9, 1787; North Carolina, February 25, 1790; Georgia, April 24, 1802.

The lands so ceded involved a total of 259,171,780 acres of land, extending as far south as the Gulf of Mexico, as far west as the Mississippi River, and as far north as the Great Lakes.

A decision of the Supreme Court, rendered in 1845, is quoted to show that the transaction between the United States and the original States constituted a contract and created a trust under which the United States secured control of the public lands, and that the United States holds the public lands for temporary purposes only and in trust for the States wherein they lie.

Allow me to read from the minority report:

In the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan (3 How., 212) the Supreme Court of the United States with great learning discusses these contracts between the several States and the United States and the meaning and force of the constitutional provisions thereafter passed. It is there declared as to the Government lands within such States that the United States never held any municipal sovereignty, jurisdiction, or right of soil in and to their territory, or in and to the territory of any of the new States, excepting the right over them of executing the trust, which trust was to provide for their disposition by cessions or sale. It is further held that every new State comes into the Union upon terms of equality with all other States, and such an equality can not exist if in any one State it exercises sovereign powers over the lands, while in another it has disposed of such lands, or in the execution of its trust must dispose of them. In Coyle v. Smith (221 U. S., 559) these doctrines are reasserted and affirmed, and the power of the United States to pass any law which will create inequality between the States has repeatedly by the Supreme Court of the United States itself been declared to be void and of no effect. (New Orleans v. De Armas, 9 Pet., 224; Groves v. Slaughter, 15 Pet., 449; Illinois Central R. R. v. Illinois, 146 U. S., 387; United States v. McBratney, 104 U. S., 621; Hardin v. Shedd, 190 U. S., 508; United States v. Winans, 198 U. S., 371.)

The conclusion reached in most of these cases is based upon the fact that the deeds from Virginia and all but two of the States that ceded their lands to the United States provided that these lands should be erected into new States that should be equal in every respect to the original States. It is, therefore, argued that until the public lands are disposed of, the new States are not on a footing of equality with the original States. This is the basis for the demand made by certain western governors that the public lands must be transferred to the States wherein they are located.

Unfortunately for the minority there is another line of decisions by the Supreme Court which hold that the United States owns the public lands.

By the act of Congress of March 3, 1807, Congress authorized the President to lease lead mines in Indiana Territory for terms not exceeding five years. In the case of the United States v. Gratiot et al. (14 Pet., 526) it was contended that Congress had no power to authorize leases of public lands and obtain profits from working mines; that Congress can not delegate the power to lease public lands. The Supreme Court, in substance, held that the power over the public lands is vested in Congress by the Constitution, without limitation; that the words "dispose of" the public lands, used in the Constitution, can not, under the decisions of the Supreme Court, receive any other construction than that Congress has power to authorize the leasing of lead mines in the public lands in the Territories of the United States. The court further states that the State of Illinois subsequently created out of a part of the Territory involved, "can not claim a right to the public lands within her limits. It has been the policy of the Government at all times, in disposing of the public lands, to reserve the mines for the use of the United States, and their real value can not be ascertained without causing them to be explored and worked under proper regulations."

In the case of Light v. United States (220 U. S. Rep., 536), the Supreme Court said:

* * * The Nation is an owner, and has made Congress the principal agent to dispose of its property. * * * Congress is the body to which is given the power to determine the conditions upon which the public lands shall be disposed of. (Butte City Water Co. v. Baker, 196 U. S., 126.) The Government has with respect to its own land the rights of an ordinary proprietor to maintain its possession and prosecute trespassers. It may deal with such lands precisely as an ordinary individual may deal with his farming property. It may sell or withhold them from sale. (Camfield v. United States, 167 U. S., 524.) And if it may withhold from sale and settlement, it may also as an owner object to its property being used for grazing purposes, for "the Government is charged with the duty and clothed with the power to protect the public domain from trespass and unlawful appropriations." (United States v. Beebe, 127 U. S., 342.)

The United States can prohibit absolutely or fix the terms on which its property may be used. As it can withhold or reserve the land, it can do so indefinitely. (Stearns v. Minnesota, 179 U. S., 243.) It is true that the "United States do not and can not hold property as a monarch may for private or personal purposes." (Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S., 158.) But that does not lead to the conclusions that it is without the rights incident to ownership, for the Constitution declares, section 3, Article IV, that "Congress shall have the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or the property belonging to the United States." The full scope of this paragraph has never been definitely settled. Primarily, at least, it is a grant of power to the United States of control over its property. (Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S., 89.)

All the public lands of the Nation are held in trust for the people of the whole country. (United States v. Trinidad Coal Co., 137 U. S., 160.) And it is not for the courts to say how that trust shall be administered. That is for Congress to determine. The courts can not compel it to set aside the lands for settlement, or to suffer them to be used for agricultural or grazing purposes, nor interfere when, in the exercise of its discretion, Congress establishes a forest reserve for what it decides to be national and public purposes. In the same way and in the exercise of the same trust it may establish a reserve and devote the property to some other national and public purpose. These are rights incident to proprietorship, to say nothing of the power of the United States as a sovereign over the property belonging to it.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. SLOAN. I desire to ask a question purely for information. The gentleman says that the Congress has not the full power of control or ownership that a monarch would have under other forms of government. Does the United States have any less dominion or power or right of ownership over the public lands than a monarch would have in another country?

Mr. HAYDEN. I was quoting from a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, where that statement is made. In another case the court said that the statement that the United States do not and can not hold property as a monarch may, for private or personal purposes, does not lead to the conclusion that it is not without the rights incident to ownership, for the Constitution declares that Congress shall have the power to dispose of the public lands.

Mr. SLOAN. Is there any power over land owned by the Government that the Government can not exercise, either to alienate it in any way or to use it or cultivate it under the direction of its servants?

Mr. HAYDEN. According to one line of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, the question asked by the gentleman is answered in the affirmative. On the other hand, there is another line of decisions inconsistent with the cases that I have just mentioned in which the court holds that the United States can not use its lands for purposes which would create inequality among the States.

Both the majority and the minority of the Public Lands Committee are therefore at liberty to quote our highest tribunal in support of their views and with equal vehemence to urge that the Supreme Court is with them.

As a Representative from Arizona, however, I do not have to read the contradictory decisions of the Supreme Court to find out whether or not the United States owns the public lands that are within the boundaries of my State. Congress and the people of Arizona have entered into an agreement which settles that question forever. The enabling act, under which Arizona was admitted into the Union "on an equal footing with the original States," provides that the people of the State shall agree to forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated and ungranted public lands lying within the boundaries thereof and to all lands lying within said boundaries owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribes, the right or title to which shall have been acquired through or from the United States or any prior sovereignty, and that, until the title of such Indian or Indian tribes shall have been extinguished, the same shall be and remain subject to the disposition and under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States.

The proclamation of the President declaring the admission of Arizona as a State was dated February 14, 1912. I am advised by the Director of the United States Geological Survey that prior to that date the following power-site reserves were created for the purpose of retaining lands valuable for water power in public ownership:

	Acres.
Approved Dec. 9, 1909, Gila River station	15,220
Approved Dec. 30, 1909, Bill Williams River station	67,270
Approved Jan. 6, 1910, Hassayampa River station	1,800
Approved Jan. 7, 1910, Little Colorado River station	27,810
Approved Apr. 15, 1911, Salt River station	96,000
Approved June 16, 1911, Hassayampa River, No. 2, station	10,000

Portions of these withdrawals have since been eliminated as not being necessary to the development of water power, and other withdrawals have been made from time to time, so that the total area now outstanding is 355,791 acres.

With respect to water-power sites, the enabling act provided that—

There is hereby reserved to the United States and excepted from the operation of any and all grants made or confirmed by this act to said proposed State all land actually or prospectively valuable for the development of water powers or power for hydroelectric use or transmission and which shall be ascertained and designated by the Secretary of the Interior within five years after the proclamation of the President declaring the admission of the State; and no lands so reserved and excepted shall be subject to any disposition whatsoever by said State, and any conveyance or transfer of such land by said State or any officer thereof shall be absolutely null and void within the period above named.

On February 14, 1912, the following areas in Arizona were included in outstanding withdrawals for the purpose of retaining mineral deposits in the ownership of the United States:

	Acres.
Oil	230,400

On the date of the admission of Arizona "into the Union on an equal footing with the original States" national forest reserves had been created covering an area of 13,339,390 acres of land within my State. The dates of the presidential proclamations creating these forests are as follows:

DATES OF CREATION OF FORESTS.

Grand Canyon, February 20, 1893.
Prescott, May 10, 1898.
San Francisco Mountains, August 17, 1898.
Santa Rita, April 11, 1902.
Santa Catalina, July 2, 1902.
Mount Graham, July 22, 1902.
Chiricahua, July 30, 1902.
Tonto, October 3, 1905.
Babaquivari, November 5, 1906.
Huachuca, November 6, 1906.
Tumacacori, November 7, 1906.
Dragoon, May 25, 1907.
Dixie, May 22, 1908.
Zuni, March 2, 1909.

The Apache and Sitgreaves National Forests were created July 1, 1908, from parts of the San Francisco Mountains Forest.

The Coconino National Forest was created July 2, 1908, from parts of the San Francisco Mountains National Forest.

The Coronado National Forest was created July 2, 1908, by a consolidation of the Santa Rita, Santa Catalina, Babaquivari, Huachua, Tumacacori, and Dragoon National Forests.

The Crook National Forest was created July 1, 1908, from portions of the Tonto and Mount Graham Forests.

The Kaibab National Forest was created July 2, 1908, from a portion of the Grand Canyon National Forest, with some additional areas.

The Tusayan National Forest was created July 28, 1910, from portions of the San Francisco Mountains Forest and the Grand Canyon Forest.

Indian reservations had also been established covering over one-quarter of the areas of Arizona at the time of statehood, as shown by the following table:

Indian reservation.	Area in acres.	Date of treaty, law, or Executive order establishing reserve.
Camp McDowell	24,971	Executive order, Sept. 15, 1903.
Colorado River	235,570	Act of Mar. 3, 1865.

San Carlos	1,834,240	Executive order, Nov. 9, 1871.
Walapai	730,949	Executive order, Jan. 4, 1883.
Total	19,551,045

National monuments had been created, which included over 800,000 acres, as follows:

Name.	Date created.	Area.
		Acres.
Grand Canyon	Jan. 11, 1908	806,400
Montezuma Castle	Dec. 8, 1906	160
Navajo	Mar. 20, 1909	360
Tonto	Dec. 19, 1907	640
Tumacacori	Sept. 15, 1908	10
Petrified Forest	July 31, 1911	25,625
Total		833,195

The unappropriated and unreserved public lands of the United States aggregated 40,595,723 acres on June 30, 1912.

I have set forth these figures to show the status of the lands under the ownership and control of the Federal Government at the time when Arizona became a State in order that it might be perfectly clear that practically all of the withdrawals, reserves, and reservations that now exist in Arizona were made while we were yet under a Territorial form of government. I trust that no one will dispute that Congress can do as it sees fit with the public lands in the Territories, because the Supreme Court, in the case of the United States against Gratiot, above cited, has said:

> The law of 1807, authorizing the leasing of lead mines, was passed before Illinois was organized as a State, and she can not now complain of any disposition or regulation of the lead mines previously made by Congress.

The existence of all these reserves and their nature was well known to the people of Arizona when they asked for admission into the Union. I have read the hearings before the Committee on the Territories, and no mention was made by anyone from Arizona that the people of the proposed State denied, or would deny, that the United States owned these lands and had a right to reserve or withdraw them from entry and sale. The then Delegate in Congress from Arizona made no protest against the inclusion in the enabling act of the article relating to the public lands which I read a few moments ago.

It may be true that Colorado and California, having been admitted to the Union before the establishment of the present policy of forest reserves and withdrawals for water power, coal, oil, gas, and so forth, have a right to complain against these methods of conserving the natural resources of the Nation. I do not criticize the legislatures of these States for passing resolutions such as have been incorporated in the minority report, because I know that they were adopted in the honest belief that this bill violates the legal and constitutional rights of the Western States. The Legislatures of Arizona, however, have never given expression to any such claim.

Just what is meant by the words in the enabling act admitting new States "into the Union on an equal footing with the original States"? A State is not land. Rhode Island can never be on an equal footing with Arizona in this respect. A State is the people who live on a certain area of land. The proof of this is that there never would have been a State of Arizona if the American people had not settled there. The land in Arizona lay as it is for ages. It was the same land; the same sun shone on it; the same winds blew over it; but there were no American people living on it, so that there could not be an American State. It made no difference to the land who owned it then or who owns it now, but it did make a difference to the people of Arizona when they accepted the enabling act and became a State in this Union. By the act of admission, as a people, they were given every political right, advantage, and immunity enjoyed by the people of any other State under the Constitution of the United States, and it is therefore true that as a State they are on an "equal footing" with the original States.

The enabling act contains, in theory, another limitation on the sovereignty of the State of Arizona. Do you know that the people of my State were actually required to acquiesce in the right and power of the United States to carry out the provisions of the reclamation act "to the same extent as if said State had remained a Territory"? We can never be on an "equal footing" with Illinois or Texas, because these States were not required to do anything so humiliating as that in order to be admitted into the Union. But, strange as it may seem, my people do not feel degraded by reason of their acceptance of this requirement of admission. Upon the contrary, they rejoice that under the reclamation act the desert no longer encroaches upon two of the fairest and richest irrigated valleys that are to be found on this continent.

In my opinion, the United States had the right to retain title permanently to all the lands in the West. As a matter of law, States could have been admitted into the Union where the citizens did not have a fee simple title to a square foot of land and where every man was a tenant of the United States. We all know that a tenant citizenry is most undesirable, and it is for this reason that Congress passed the homestead laws. Our homestead system has been demonstrated to be the best policy, but as a matter of legal right no such policy need ever have been adopted; and the proof of this lies in the fact that the first homestead law was not passed until over a half a century after the adoption of the Constitution.

It is an accepted truth that agricultural tenants make poor citizens. We advocate the homestead policy, not that we deny the right of the United States to refuse to sell its agricultural lands, but because we know that a nation of home owners, with a stake in the country, is more desirable than a tenantry, no matter how benevolent the landlord may be.

It is my solemn judgment that the homestead laws have done more than any other single cause to induce stability and order in our Government. If we had been cursed with a system of land laws such as have been upon the statute books of Mexico, revolutions would have been as frequent north of the Rio Grande as they are south of that historic stream. It is in the mind of the landless man with no home to lose that thoughts of revolution find lodgment. As long as there is an acre of public land suitable for home building it should be given without money and without price to any citizen who will live upon and use it beneficially.

While it is true that by becoming the owner of his own home a man becomes a better citizen, a supporter of law and order, and a believer in the protection of the rights of property, yet it is equally true that when any man becomes the owner of a natural monopoly, like water power, or coal, or oil, or gas, his ability to oppress his fellow men by enriching himself at their expense makes him an undesirable citizen. The farmer who breaks the raw land adds something to the wealth of the world and practices extortion on nobody. The owner of an unregulated natural monopoly likewise adds something to the wealth of the world, but unlike the farmer he has it in his power to take unto himself more than his fair share of the wealth that his industry and foresight has created.

I deny that this bill and the water-power bill are the first steps in the direction of leasing the public lands suitable for agricultural purposes. I know that it is not the intention of your committee nor of this Congress to in any way interfere with the orderly disposal of the public lands suitable for entry under the homestead laws. Upon the contrary, the Committee on the Public Lands has favorably reported a 640-acre grazing homestead bill that is more liberal in its provisions than any similar measure ever enacted into law. This bill is now on the calendar of the House, and I am confident that it will receive the support of the great majority of the membership of this body whenever it is placed upon its passage.

We have, however, recognized the essential difference between lands suitable for agriculture and lands valuable for water power, coal, oil, gas, sodium, potassium, or phosphates. We are agreed that the title to all agricultural lands should pass into private ownership as soon as possible under the homestead laws, but we believe that in order to prevent monopoly title should remain in the United States for lands containing water-power sites or nonmetalliferous minerals. This bill and the water-power bill that has just passed the House have therefore provided for a leasing system covering lands of the character that I have just mentioned.

In the hearings on the water-power bill the following table is printed showing the approximate amount of water power available in the power-site reserves in Arizona.

Stream.	Minimum horsepower	Horsepower with storage.
Little Colorado River	1,000	2,000
Bill Williams River	1,000	12,000
Gila River	1,500	4,500
San Francisco River	200	1,200
Salt River	18,000	60,000
Hassayampa River	550	2,600
Colorado River	44,000	100,000
Approximate total	66,000	183,000

The chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, Mr. FERRIS, in his remarks the other day printed a table showing the potential water-power resources of the several States, in which it appears that in Arizona it may be possible to in time develop 1,698,000 horsepower.

Under existing law this great store of energy has not and can not be developed. I want to see something done with this and the other great natural resources of Arizona during the lifetime of the present generation. Let us therefore be practical. Why stop to argue whether one State is on an "equal footing" with another, when we have solemnly agreed, with respect to the public lands within the borders of Arizona, that we have waived our rights and claim no interest in them? It is high time that we recognize this fact, and then proceed to formulate a policy that will make the public lands available for the highest use. I know that the people of Arizona have not the slightest intention of attempting to repudiate the solemn and irrevocable agreement into which they have entered. They admit that the public lands in Arizona are owned by the United States. That is all past, settled, and done, and now there is other work to do. We know that the water power, the coal, the oil, the gas, and the other mineral resources on the public domain have been locked up. Yes, for over eight long years Congress has locked them up and thrown away the key. We want the door of development opened, and this bill does that very thing. It makes available for use a storehouse of wealth that is essential to the prosperity of every one of the public-land States. It encourages the investments of capital in these enterprises and at the same time prevents monopoly. It is this kind of a law that will in reality place Arizona and the other Western States on an "equal footing" with the original States by promoting the prosperity of her citizens. Who wants to trade a living reality for a dead theory? [Applause.]

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON].

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the people of California are overwhelmingly in favor of the principles embodied in the leasing bill under consideration and in the Ferris power-site bill which passed the House the other day.

The Legislature of California passed in 1913 a water conservation act similar in principle to the Ferris bills. It has applied conservation to the human resources of the State by enacting laws to promote human welfare and to relieve the people from economic injustice. We have recently enacted child-labor laws, a workmen's compensation act, an eight-hour law for women, and similar enlightened measures. We have on our statute books the best public-utilities act in the country, whose operation is saving the people $6,000,000 a year. Our "blue-sky" law, which regulates the issue of stocks and securities by private corporations, has the support and approval of the most conservative financial interests in the State. I am speaking advisedly when I say that there is now practically no opposition to these various laws, and that no one can point to any public detriment arising from their operation. There is universal agreement as to their good effect.

All of these acts are in harmony with the spirit of the Ferris bills. In expressing my approval of the Ferris bills I feel, therefore, that I am voicing the sentiments of the people of California, as disclosed in the spirit of their recent legislation.

The present measures were designed by Secretary Lane and by able sponsors in the House to conserve and develop our national resources as prudent men would conserve and develop their private properties. In these matters the Government is at last applying ordinary business judgment. Water-power sites, coal, gas, oil, and the like are too valuable, too concentrated and limited in distribution, to pass to the first comer at a nominal price as we have passed our agricultural and grazing lands.

If California had earlier acted with the foresight displayed in the Ferris bills, she would now be receiving a revenue from the exploitation of her natural resources that would go far toward supporting the expenses of the State government.

For instance, with the exception of the greater part of the San Francisco Harbor front and small portions of the water fronts of other California cities where partial municipal control or ownership has been acquired after years of litigation, all of the land in the State capable of development for navigation purposes is now in the hands of private persons. It was alienated in lots as high as 320 acres, at a nominal price per acre, through patent from the State under our tide-land act. The State permitted its sale upon the theory that it was capable of agricultural reclamation. A great part of it is never uncovered at the lowest tide. Very little of it has ever been put to agricultural or any other use. The greater part of it had, at the time of its alienation, and now has, only a use and value for purposes of navigation. When the city of Berkeley put its municipal wharf a mile into San Francisco Bay, it was compelled to buy the whole right of way at a price of about $1,500 per acre from the grantee of persons who had acquired it from the State at $1.25 per acre as land capable of agricultural reclamation.

Some of the objections to the Ferris bills have a very familiar ring. The same argument has been invoked in our State legislatures when the interests of the State have clashed with the self-interest of a county or city. Our richest and most populous center has more than once claimed that it was unfair for it to contribute in taxes a third of the State revenues and to receive in State expenditures far less than this fractional amount. It contended that the revenues or property taken from it constituted a trust fund for its benefit. What would the opposing gentlemen here say to the State of New York if she invoked such reasoning at this time in respect of the Federal income tax collected within her borders? What would they say if the argument were made that the Federal Government should spend in each Western State only such Federal moneys as were collected from that State?

We have learned a great deal in the last few years. Never again will our State sell for a song rights or properties of great potential value capable of being used for all time as a monopoly. No modern municipality now disposes of its franchises in the old haphazard, spendthrift way. It is high time that the Federal Government should abandon such wasteful practices. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CULLOP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 406) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 406, which we have just been considering, the oil and gas leasing bill, be made privileged for the balance of this week, retaining all rights with reference to Calendar Wednesday, and that general debate on the bill be limited to six hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 406 shall have a privileged status during the rest of the week, not affecting the rights on Calendar Wednesday, and that general debate shall be limited to six hours, to be controlled one-half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and one-half by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GRAIN GAMBLERS AND THE FARMERS.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an article by Hon. J. E. Kelley, of Pierre, S. Dak., on grain gamblers and the farmers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2409) to authorize the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at the city of Steubenville, Jefferson County, Ohio.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 12, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of the Chief of Engineers on condition of the Aqueduct Bridge, Washington, D. C. (H. Doc. No. 539), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BARNHART, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8664) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 32), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 407) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 35), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7611) authorizing the Seaboard Air Line Railway Co., a corporation, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge or bridges and approaches thereto across what is known as Back River, a part of the Savannah River, at a point between Jasper County, S. C., and Chatham County, Ga., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 33), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SLAYDEN, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4678) incorporating the American Academy of Arts and Letters, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 34), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1797) granting an increase of pension to Addison M. Zoll; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 1924) granting an increase of pension to John F. Thomas; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 5918) granting a pension to Emma R. Walters; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 7818) granting a pension to Jacob Kuhn; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 2780) granting a pension to Martin Laughlin; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 4345) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth H. Brayton; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 3014) granting a pension to Alexander Frazier; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 8645) for the erection of a Federal building for the United States post office at Framingham, Mass.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BACHARACH: A bill (H. R. 8646) to increase the limit of cost of post-office site and building at Millville, N. J.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WHALEY: A bill (H. R. 8647) to authorize one-half of the water of the Santee River to be diverted and flowed into the Cooper River for the purpose of maintaining a canal connecting these two rivers; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8648) providing for a survey of Ashley River, S. C.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SISSON: A bill (H. R. 8649) to simplify procedure in the equity courts of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 8650) to amend section 3 of the act of Congress approved February 28, 1898, entitled "An act in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8651) to simplify procedure in the law courts of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 12, 1916.

Rev. Boyd V. Switzer, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in the attainment of the high ideals that characterize us as a Nation as well as in the unique position that we occupy among the nations of the earth, we recognize Thee to be the invisible yet mighty power in our life. Surely the hand that made us is divine. Beyond all measure Thou hast blessed and honored us in choosing us to exemplify both in our national life and in our relations to all the nations of the world those larger and finer truths revealed by Thy eternal Son. Do Thou continue to inspire us with that spirit divine that we may be true and faithful to the trust of our high calling. In Jesus' name. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

GEORGETOWN BARGE, DOCK, ELEVATOR & RAILWAY CO. (H. DOC. NO. 546).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator & Railway Co. for the year 1915, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a great number of memorials in the form of communications to myself from citizens of North Dakota, in opposition to great appropriations for preparedness for national defense. I ask that one be read and that all be referred to the appropriate committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

FARGO, N. DAK., December 28, 1915.

Senator ASLE GRONNA, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As a citizen of North Dakota I urge you to use whatever influence you may deem advisable in opposition to the program for the increase of our Army and Navy. The large standing armies, in my opinion, have contributed largely to the present European conflict. The policy of preparedness has no limitation as to its extent. Furthermore, the taxes used in sustaining a large Army and Navy may be better turned into channels of constructive legislation and education.

Hoping that this request and these reasons may commit themselves to your consideration, I am,

Very truly, yours, EDWIN F. MOORE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorials will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I present 12 memorials in the form of personal communications to me, touching the question of preparedness, which I request be referred to the appropriate committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorials will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota presented memorials of sundry citizens of Leola, Mitchell, Waubay, Wessington Springs, Lake Andes, and Rapid City, all in the State of South Dakota, remonstrating against an increase in armaments, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GALLINGER presented the memorial of Edith P. Flanders, State superintendent, department of peace, Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Grasmere, N. H., remonstrating against an increase in armaments, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BRYAN presented a petition of the Manatee County Medical Association, of Florida, praying for an increase in the Medical Corps of the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SAN ANTONIO BICENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. From the Committee on Industrial Expositions I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 72) to provide for holding the San Antonio Bicentennial Exposition in 1918, and I submit a report (No. 39) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 76) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan 1,000 tents and 1,000 cots for the use of the encampment of the United Confederate Veterans to be held at Birmingham, Ala., in May, 1916; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXHIBIT OF STATE RESOURCES.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I introduce a bill and ask that it, with the accompanying papers, be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Industrial Expositions.

The bill (S. 3444) to provide for a permanent exhibit of the resources of the States of the Union in or near Washington, D. C., was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Industrial Expositions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to investigate and report to Congress the expediency of having the Government of the United States set apart a tract of its lands in or near the city of Washington, D. C., sufficient in area to permit each State and Territory of the Union to construct, at the expense of such State and Territory, a building suitable for the purpose of installing and maintaining therein a permanent exhibit illustrative of its natural, agricultural, industrial, and educational resources.

SEC. 2. That said Secretary of Agriculture shall make his report to Congress not later than January 1, 1917.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the carrying out of the purposes of this act. Said appropriation shall be immediately available.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 11, 1916.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
Chairman Committee on Industrial Expositions,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have the honor to present, on behalf of the States Permanent Exposition Society, the attached bill, which you are respectfully requested to present to the Senate. You will note that the measure as amended received the approval of the Senate Committee on Industrial Expositions and was favorably reported to the Senate in the Sixty-third Congress, but owing to the great pressure of legislation pending in that session this bill, together with many other meritorious measures, was not reached on the calendar before adjournment on March 4 last.

This bill is submitted entirely on its merits and comes to the Senate with an almost unprecedented indorsement of the governors of the States of the Union, hundreds of commercial associations, trades bodies, and civic organizations throughout the country. In fact, so strongly has the purpose of the bill commended itself that a number of the governors of the States have already selected State committees to cooperate in the establishment of permanent exhibits of the Nation's resources at the National Capital.

Aside from the great commercial advantages to be gained by such permanent exhibits at Washington, such an exposition will tend to inspire a wholesome and friendly competition among the States of the Union, and will prove the means of the saving of millions of dollars which have heretofore been expended by the various States through participation in great expositions of a temporary character. This great economy can more readily be appreciated when we consider the vast sums of money which have in the past been expended in the construction and maintenance of handsome and imposing State buildings on the sites of our great expositions and which, after having served their purpose for but a few months, are dismantled and demolished.

A vast amount of labor has been involved in presenting the merits of this bill to the country, and practically all of the exploitation work, correspondence, etc., has been accomplished through the earnest, patriotic, and gratuitous services of Mr. Mark A. Woodell, who has had a long experience in both national and international expositions, and whose ability has enabled him to intelligently present to the country the great industrial and commercial advantages which will result through the establishment of such permanent exhibits of the Nation's resources at the seat of our Government.

We beg to submit the report of the Senate Committee on Industrial Expositions, together with statement attached, to the committee of the House of Representatives, and would thank you to request that they be incorporated in the RECORD.

Assuring you of our high esteem and of our hearty cooperation in your efforts, we have the honor to remain,

Faithfully, yours,

STATES PERMANENT EXPOSITION SOCIETY,
By R. G. FINNEY, Chairman.

PERMANENT EXHIBIT OF RESOURCES OF THE STATES AND TERRITORIES OF THE UNION.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Industrial Expositions, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Industrial Expositions, to whom was referred S. 3971, providing for a permanent exhibit of the resources of the States of the Union in or near Washington, D. C., having had the same under consideration, report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to investigate and report to Congress the expediency of having the Government of the United States set apart a tract of its lands in or near the city of Washington, D. C., sufficient in area to permit each State and Territory of the Union to construct, at the expense of such State and Territory, a building suitable for the purpose of installing and maintaining therein a permanent exhibit illustrative of its natural, agricultural, industrial, and education resources.

"SEC. 2. That said Secretary of Agriculture shall make his report to Congress not later than January 1, 1915.

"SEC. 3. That the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the carrying out of the purposes of this act. Said appropriation shall be immediately available."

[From report of House committee.]

For many years past the various States of the Union have been expending large sums of money for the purpose of advertising to the outside world the advantages possessed by each State over other sections of the country, and these expenditures and these efforts have been largely supplemented by appropriations made by railroads, commercial organizations, and individuals. This advertising takes many shapes, but in probably no other form of advertising does a State—through appropriations made from the treasury—expend such large sums as in exhibits made of its resources at the various State, national, and international expositions which are constantly being held in this country and abroad.

There are two great objections to exhibits of this character, however, so serious that it can well be doubted whether a State receives from such sources an adequate return for the moneys invested. The first of these objections is that an exposition is temporary in character, and the displays made there must be viewed, if at all, within three, four, or six months. The second objection is that visitors to expositions are there in a holiday mood and are not disposed to make a study of exhibits illustrating the resources of any particular community. But the practice has so grown that it is doubtful whether a State can refuse to make an exhibit at any national or international exposition, because to refuse to do so would be to make that State conspicuous by its absence.

The erection at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, of State buildings within which to house a complete display of the national wealth and resources of the several States and Territories in education, manufacturing, agriculture, and in the arts is worthy of consideration. The erection of these buildings upon an appropriate site would add much to the beauty of the National Capital; it would stimulate a greater feeling of patriotism in the Federal Government, and would have a tendency to cement in closer bonds the people of the various States. It would furnish a most complete advertisement of the resources of a State, located at a strategic point where it could be viewed by thousands of visitors every year. What more appropriate exposition idea than to display here, in permanent manner, exhibits illustrative of the wealth of the States in agriculture, forestry, mining, manufacturing, and the arts? Such an exhibit would be of great educational value to the people of our country, and it would prove an important factor in increasing trade, not alone with the several States of the Union but with foreign nations.

The establishing of the various State exhibits would furnish to foreign nations a most convincing argument for peace, in that the representatives of such foreign Governments could see at a glance the tremendous resources and wonderful possibilities of the United States. All that would be required of the National Government would be to furnish to the different States a proper and convenient site, on lands now owned by the Government, upon which to erect these buildings. Further than this the committee thinks the National Government should not go. The cost of the erection of the buildings, the expense of the installation of the various exhibits and the maintenance thereof, and all or any expenses incident thereto should be borne solely, wholly, and alone by the respective States which may establish their exhibits.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to Senate bill 381, the Philippine government bill. It is introduced at this time for the purpose of correcting certain verbal inaccuracies in the amendment covering the same general subject introduced by me yesterday. I ask that it may be printed and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed, to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas to the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Island, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, viz, insert at the end of the bill the following:

"SEC. —. The President is hereby authorized and directed to withdraw and surrender all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty now existing and exercised by the United States in and over the territory and people of the Philippines, and he shall on behalf of the United States fully recognize the independence of the said Philippines as a separate and self-governing nation and acknowledge the authority and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof. This transfer of possession, sovereignty, and governmental control shall be completed and become absolute within two years from the date of the approval of this act, under the terms and in the manner hereinafter prescribed. For the purpose of a complete and prompt compliance with this direction, the President is hereby invested with full power and authority to make such orders and regulations and to enter into such negotiations with the authorities of said Philippines or others as may be necessary to finally settle and adjust all property rights and other relations as between the United States and the said Philippines, and to cause to be acknowledged, respected, and safeguarded all of the personal and property rights of citizens or corporations of the United States resident or engaged in business in said Philippines or having property interests therein. In any such settlement or adjustment so made in respect to the rights and property of the United States as against the said Philippines the President shall reserve or acquire such lands and rights and privileges appurtenant thereto as may, in his judgment, be required by the United States for naval bases and coaling stations within the territory of said Philippines.

"Immediately after the passage of this act the President shall invite the cooperation of the principal nations interested in the affairs of that part of the world in which the Philippines are located, for the purpose and to the end that the cooperating nations shall mutually pledge themselves, in the form of a treaty or other binding agreement, to recognize and respect the sovereignty and independence of the said Philippines, and also to mutually obligate themselves, equally and not one primarily nor to any greater extent than another, to maintain as against external force the sovereignty of said Philippines for the period of five years from the taking effect of such treaty or agreement. If any of the nations so invited to join the United States in such undertaking shall decline to do so, then the President shall include as parties to such convention or agreement such nations as may be willing to join therein and to assume such obligations; and if none are willing to so unite therein, then the President is authorized to give such guaranty on behalf of the United States alone."

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

"The President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to indicate to the great powers of the world the desire of this Government to extend to the Philippine Islands and the Philippine people full and complete independence whenever it shall be warranted in the belief that such independence will be permanent and be respected by the other powers of the world. The President is further authorized and requested to secure from such other powers such agreements as will insure the independence of said islands in perpetuity; and when such agreements have been made he shall forthwith direct a convention to be held in such islands for the purpose of adopting a constitution providing for a republican form of government, and as soon as such constitution has been adopted and officers have been elected and a government inaugurated thereunder he shall, by proclamation, declare such islands and the people thereof to be a free and independent state with all the powers of complete sovereignty."

SALARIES OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3396) temporarily reducing salaries of persons in the Federal service, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment and ordered to be printed.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE JAPANESE NAVY.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have a letter from a gentleman in Singapore, Straits Settlements. It is very brief. He incloses a newspaper article relating to the great development of the Japanese Navy. It is a very interesting communication, and I ask that the letter and the newspaper article be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

There being no objection, the letter and article indicated were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GENERAL RUBBER CO.,
Singapore, Straits Settlements, November 25, 1915.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
United States Capitol, Washington, D. C.,
United States of America.

DEAR SIR: As a citizen of the State of Massachusetts (Brockton), I desire to call your attention to the newspaper clipping inclosed with respect to the development of the Japanese Navy, taken from the Straits Times (Singapore, Straits Settlements) of September 1, 1915. I wish it were possible for you personally to come to the East to secure first-hand information on this very important subject.

Our flag has practically been removed from the commerce on the Pacific by the sale of the boats of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. to the Atlantic Transport Co. Already our shipping facilities are badly congested.

We have a wonderful opportunity to increase our trade in the East, but such laws as the La Follette amendment make progress exceedingly difficult.

We need a Navy second to none in power and efficiency.

Yours, truly,

EDGAR B. DAVIS, Vice President.

OUR EASTERN ALLY—GREAT DEVELOPMENT OF THE JAPANESE NAVY.

The following has been communicated to a Ceylon contemporary:

"The battle of Tsushima remains the most important event in the naval history of the East connected with modern times. Japan immediately took rank among the sea powers of the world; and, although considerable difficulty has often been experienced over her naval votes, the fleet to-day is one which commands the respect of all European nations. As an ally of Great Britain she has taken her share in the great war, her part in the capture of Kiauchau and in patrolling the eastern seas, being acts which the mother country has gratefully acknowledged. But the development of the navy is proceeding apace, the latest item of interest being an announcement in a Straits exchange that the superdreadnaught Yamashio, 30,600 tons, which is under construction at Yokosuka at present, will be launched on November 3 with brilliant ceremony.

"Our eastern ally may well be proud of her growing fleet, composed, as it will be in a short time, of vessels which can give battle to any of the best vessels afloat of foreign powers. The Yamashio is a sister ship of the Fuso, 31,000 tons, which is now being rigged at Kure. But there is this exception, that the former is expected to carry ten 15-inch guns and sixteen 6-inch guns against the Fuso's twelve 14-inch guns and sixteen 6-inch. While these two vessels, ranking as superdreadnaughts, displace over 30,000 tons, it is an interesting fact that the preceding class of battleships, composed of the Kawachi and Settsu, displace only 20,800 tons. The latter vessels had as their predecessors the Satsuma and Aki, which are also reckoned as dreadnaughts, although they carry four 12-inch and twelve 10-inch guns as their main armament. The Satsuma has a displacement of 19,350 tons, with a speed of 18.5 knots, and the Aki a displacement of 19,800 tons, with a speed of 20.5 knots.

"The reduced program 1913–1917 aimed at giving the nation in the latter year 12 vessels of the dreadnaught type, four being battleships of the Kawachi and Satsuma classes, with the Fuso—which was floated at Kure on March 18 last, with, it is stated, engines in place and guns mounted—and three additional vessels and four battle cruisers. Of the last-named type of vessel the Kongo is the only one built in England. While she has the same displacement as the other vessels built in Japan, her speed is only 25 knots against 27 and 28 knots. This vessel is also provided with four high-angle 12-pounder guns for repelling air craft. The side armor of the Hiyei, Haruna, and Kirishima is carried to the height of the boat deck, and is continued on the same level as the forecastle, constituting a citadel, in which are the casemates of the 6-inch guns. An armored deck runs from end to end and there are two armored decks. Arrangements are made for burning both coal and oil; the capacity for the former is 4,000 tons and for the latter 1,000 tons. There are three funnels and two masts.

"The following table shows at a glance the battleships and battle cruisers of recent and current construction, but to which is added the Satsuma and Aki:

	Displacement.	Built.	Guns.	Speed.
Battleships:
Fuso	31,000	.....	12 14-inch	22.5
Yamashio	30,600	.....	10 15-inch	22.5
Kawachi	20,800	1912	12 12-inch	20.5
Settsu	20,800	1912	do	20.5
Satsuma	19,350	1910	4 12-inch and 12 10-inch.	18.5
Aki	19,800	1911	do	20.5
Battle cruisers:
Haruna	27,500	1915	8 14-inch	27
Hiyei	27,500	1914	do	27
Kirishima	27,500	1915	do	28
Kongo	27,500	1915	do	25

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I offer a concurrent resolution and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 8) was read, as follows:

Whereas Mexico is now and has for several years been rent with civil strife, which, in the absence of any government able adequately to protect life and property, has degenerated into a condition of murder, rapine, and pillage, resulting in the loss of the lives of American citizens as well as Europeans there and the destruction of their property; and

Whereas many such outrages have been committed by the armed forces of some one or more of the alleged revolutionary leaders, whose warfare and followers are a method of brigandage perpetrated by bandits; and

Whereas conditions since the recognition of Carranza, one of the alleged revolutionary leaders, show no improvement, nor does his government manifest any tendency or sufficient strength to restore order or maintain civil government adequate to the protection of life and property; and

Whereas this Government has promulgated and still adheres to, so far as known, what is commonly called the Monroe doctrine, under which the Governments of the Old World are prevented from the protection of their own citizens or subjects by armed force, and such foreign Governments being so barred from the protection of their citizens or subjects because of the attitude of the United States on the Monroe doctrine, thereby render, it is alleged, the United States responsible for the loss of life or property resulting from the conditions in Mexico, and such claim, whether well founded or not, is of an arbitrable character, which may subject us to arbitration before some proper tribunal on the question of damages; and

Whereas such civil strife in northern Mexico has endangered the life, limb, and property of the people of the border States of this country, and conditions have now reached that stage no longer tolerable either to the peace and good order of the border States of this Union or the life and security of American citizens or other aliens in Mexico: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Senate, the House concurring, that the Government demand of Carranza, who has been recently recognized as the head of an established Government in Mexico, that he protect and save harmless the lives and property of American and other aliens in that country; and

That the other Governments in the Western Hemisphere that lately joined in such recognition be invited to unite in that demand, and that in the event of failure of Carranza promptly to furnish such protection that the President be, and is hereby, requested to invite the cooperation of such Governments heretofore joining with us in intervening for the restoration of peace and good order and the protection of the lives and property not only of American citizens, but other aliens and of peaceable Mexican citizens, and that when such order is restored and a government adequate to continue and sustain such protection is established that the United States withdraw from that country; and

It is further declared to be the sole and only purpose of this Government so to enter the territory of Mexico for the purpose indicated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in connection with the resolution regarding Mexico submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], and which went properly to the Committee on Foreign Relations, I want to read a telegram this moment received from Hon. L. W. Holmes, of Keene, N. H., a judge in my State. The telegram is as follows:

Where is my son, Thomas F. Holmes, sole survivor of recent Mexican outrage? Please do everything possible to locate him.

L. W. HOLMES.

I read this message, Mr. President, to show that the horrible outrage recently committed in Mexico is worthy of the immediate attention not only of the Congress of the United States but of the executive department as well. I ask that the telegram be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution and the telegram will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

LANDS IN NEVADA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

The bill (S. 2520) granting to the State of Nevada 7,000,000 acres of land in said State for the use and benefit of the public schools of Nevada and the State University of the State of Nevada was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

Mr. PITTMAN. I heard no objection to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that it would take too long this morning to discuss the bill and have it passed in the morning hour. A number of Senators spoke to me in relation to it, and they desire to discuss the question if the bill is going to be considered. For that reason I object.

Mr. PITTMAN. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection to this bill. I do not think it is going to take long to consider the matter, and certainly we have more time now to consider a matter of this kind than we shall have later on in the session when important bills come before us that are now being considered in committees. It seems to me that we should clear the calendar as much as possible during this period of the session. This bill has been upon the calendar for weeks and it stands at the head of the calendar. I sincerely hope the Senator will allow the Senate to proceed with its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I can not allow it to be considered, if my objection will take it over, this morning, because of the fact that I know Senators are away who wish to discuss the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I join in the request that the bill shall go over for to-day. I want to look into it a little more carefully before it is considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 2521) legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Central Pacific Railroad Co. and others within the State of Nevada was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when the calendar was under consideration day before yesterday I objected to the consideration of this bill. Since that time I have received the information I desired, and for which I wrote, and I have no objection to its consideration now.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then let the bill be proceeded with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been read, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada whether this bill differs in any respect from a similar bill which was under consideration by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will state, Mr. President, that a similar bill was reported out favorably by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate and it passed this body. In the other body it was limited in its scope and effect. The Senate applied it to all the lands on the right of way in the State of Nevada. The House of Representatives limited it to five certain towns upon the right of way. It left out the town of Lovelocks on the theory that the conditions at Lovelocks were not the same as in the other towns. The evidence has since disclosed that the identical conditions exist with regard to the town of Lovelocks as in the other towns for which the law was passed. This is simply identical with the law that has been passed with regard to the other towns and the situation is exactly the same with regard to the town to which this bill applies.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the bill is satisfactory to the Senator from Nevada, I do not intend to object to it, but I think it is appropriate for me to say in connection with the consideration of this bill that it is peculiarly a measure that should have gone to the Committee on the Judiciary. It seems to me that we are falling into a new practice here in the Senate of sending bills to inappropriate committees, and that it is a practice which ought to cease.

This is a subject matter which has been before the Judiciary Committee repeatedly in connection with validating conveyances of land in Nebraska and Wyoming. A bill similar to this, affecting lands in Nevada, has been before the Judiciary Committee. I am not going to object to the consideration of this bill; but I shall hereafter object, if I have the opportunity, to similar bills going to the Public Lands Committee. They ought to be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

The bill (S. 1053) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I earnestly hope that the Senator from Utah will not insist upon his objection. This is a bill identical with one which passed the House of Representatives at the last session, which was reported favorably by the Committee on Public Lands, and of all the bills relative to the West is the one which will be of some value to the man who has to work and is trying to build up the West. I deeply regret that this bill can not now be passed. I hope the Senator from Utah will withdraw his objection to its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not this morning withdraw my objection to the consideration of this bill. I will say to the Senator from Arizona that there are certain amendments, and one particular amendment, which I desire to offer to the bill. I know the bill will lead to considerable discussion, and at this time it would not be fair to discuss it as it ought to be discussed.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a word in reference to this bill. When the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], a few days ago, requested that the bill be allowed to go over, I readily consented, and stated that I should not ask for the consideration of the bill at that time; but the bill has once been called up since then, and has a second time gone over. I therefore trust that we may have the consideration of the bill proceeded with the next time it is called upon the calendar. I merely wished to make that statement.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I coincide with the views of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. I hope that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], whenever the opportunity shall again offer, will be prepared to submit whatever amendments he desires to offer to the bill, in order that it may then be discussed. We have in these mornings early in the session probably more time than we shall again have for such discussion. I have no doubt that in an hour and a half's discussion great light could be thrown upon the bill; and I sincerely join in the hope expressed by the Senator from South Dakota, that some consideration may be given to the bill, and that it shall not be passed over as a pro forma matter every morning when the calendar is called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

NEWSPAPER PUBLICATION OF LAND-OFFICE NOTICES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1062) relating to the duties of registers of United States land offices and the publication in newspapers of official land-office notices.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not think that bill should pass without amendment. I could not foresee that is was coming up this morning; but I shall object to the consideration of the measure unless it can be so amended as that in its practical application such publications will appear in newspapers near to or in the vicinity of the land affected. That is the purpose of the existing statute upon this subject, and, of course, it ought to be observed in all other statutes upon the subject.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, that is the intention of the bill, and I should be glad to have the Senator from Colorado offer such an amendment right now. I should be glad to have it incorporated in the bill. Let us have the bill now disposed of.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall be glad to prepare my amendment, if I can have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, while the Senator from Colorado is preparing his amendment, I will say a few words in connection with the bill. Twice this bill has been favorably reported unanimously by the Senate Committee on Public Lands. It once passed the Senate, in this exact shape, unanimously, I think; I do not think there was a dissenting vote.

The object of the bill is this: In a number of places in Montana and in other parts of the West, there are towns which publish only daily newspapers, having no weekly editions. When those newspapers are the nearest ones to land affected by land-office notices, the notices must be published in those daily newspapers. Therefore, such notices are published seven times a week, instead of once a week. The department officials hold that where the notice is published in a daily newspaper it must be published every day in the week. Hence, when a homestead or a mining claim is located nearest to a town where only a daily newspaper, having no weekly edition, is published, and where there is no weekly paper, the land-office officials require the notice to be published in that daily newspaper seven times a week for 4 or 6 or 10 weeks, dependent on the nature of the publication. A poor man who has to pay for publishing such a notice is required to pay about seven times what he would be required to pay if the same notice appeared but once a week in a weekly newspaper. This practice works a very great hardship on some people. The object of the bill is such that where the nearest newspaper is a daily newspaper, without any weekly edition, the notice may be published once a week only in each Saturday's issue of the daily for 4 or 6 or 10 weeks, as the case may be. That would only cost the man who pays for publishing it the same price as it would if the notice were published in a weekly paper—about one-seventh of the cost he is now required to pay.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am in entire sympathy with the purpose of the Senator, as he is in sympathy with my suggestion. So I move to amend the bill by inserting after the word "circulation," on page 1, line 7, the words "and published nearest to the land affected."

Mr. MYERS. I am willing to accept that amendment, and I hope it will be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Ought not the amendment read "published in the newspaper published in a town or a city or a place nearest to the land affected," instead of providing that such notices shall be in the newspaper itself which is published nearest such land?

Mr. THOMAS. Let it read "in the town nearest to the land affected."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is right. Otherwise if the notice had to be published in a newspaper nearest to the land affected, confining it to one paper, the charge might be four times what it ought to be.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Colorado that the amendment offered by him should follow the language of the present statute, lest difficulty in construction might arise.

Mr. THOMAS. I agree with the Senator. I prepared the amendment, however, on the spur of the moment, because the bill was up for consideration and I did not want to be guilty of discourtesy to the Senator in charge of the bill by objecting to its present consideration if it could be passed with the suggested amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I perceive from the language suggested by the Senator from Colorado that that is his purpose; but the language ought to conform to that of the existing statute.

Mr. THOMAS. Has the Senator at hand the language of the existing statute? If so, I will very cheerfully accept it as a substitute for the proposed amendment, if there is any difference.

Mr. WALSH. I simply thought that I should make the suggestion for the purpose of perfecting the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator for doing so, and I quite agree with him that the identical language of the existing statute is the language that should be inserted here.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, if my colleague will permit, I have here the language of the existing law. It reads:

In a newspaper to be by him designated—

That is, by the register—

as published nearest such claim.

That is the language of the statute.

Mr. WALSH. That will serve the purpose, I think.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator from Colorado will withdraw his amendment, I will offer that amendment to make the bill conform to the language of the present statute.

Mr. THOMAS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Then, Mr. President, I move that the bill be amended by inserting, after the word "him," in line 5, the words "as published nearest to the land affected." I ask the Secretary to state the amendment which I have offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 5, after the word "him," it is proposed to insert "as published nearest to the land affected."

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question, in order that I may understand the matter.

Mr. MYERS. I shall be glad to answer any question.

Mr. HUGHES. Will not the effect of the amendment as now proposed be to cause the register to measure up the distance, thereby putting him to a great deal of inconvenience?

Mr. MYERS. The proposed amendment is the language of the present law.

Mr. HUGHES. Would there be any objection to leaving this matter to the discretion of the register, by permitting him to have such notices published in a paper as near as possible, rather than in a paper published "nearest the land affected"?

Mr. MYERS. All he can do now is to exercise his judgment as to which is the nearest. He does not have to go out and measure the distance.

Mr. HUGHES. It does not say that. This provision commands him in direct language to publish the notice in a newspaper nearest to the land affected.

Mr. MYERS. That is the law now, and it is merely proposed to incorporate in the pending bill the language of the law. It will not make it any worse than it is now, and I do not want to change the law in that respect. That was not my intention at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be again stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Montana that the amendment be inserted in line 8, after the word "time."

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I think the amendment is inserted at the proper place and that it governs everything that follows thereafter. I thank the Senator for his suggestion, but I think the amendment which had been adopted attains the end sought.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I suggest that after the word "circulation," in line 1, page 2, the words "so situated" be inserted.

Mr. MYERS. I accept that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 1, after the words "general circulation," it is proposed to insert the words "so situated."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, after the word "him," in line 5, and preceding the amendment just adopted, offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], I offer the following amendment, namely, to insert the words "or in case of a public-land entry by the entryman." The purpose, of course, is to allow the party entering public lands himself to make a contract with the newspaper and designate the paper published nearest to the entry.

This has been, Mr. President, the policy in some instances, I think, in times past, but the present policy is to compel the publication in a paper designated by the register himself and to compel the entryman to pay the charge as fixed by the paper without giving him an opportunity to have a contract for his publication.

Mr. President, if I sought to inject a little trouble into this discussion, by requesting a little time to go to my office—and I know the Senator would yield to me for that purpose—I might produce some exceedingly interesting correspondence between officials of this Government upon this subject. As I have not that official correspondence in my desk, but I have it in my office, I will not ask the indulgence of the Senate nor trespass upon the patience of the Senator from Montana by a request for time. I do think, however, that the entryman should be allowed to designate and contract with the paper published nearest to the land as to the terms upon which such publication shall be made. The entryman pays for it—not the register, not the United States Government. When he enters a piece of land, and notice of publication is made, it is made by the register; it is made in a paper designated by the register, and it is very often made on onerous conditions to the entryman himself, who must pay the cost. Now, aside from the reward for some partisan paper, what earthly objection can there be to allowing the entryman who must pay the cost to designate the paper in which the publication shall be made?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not be adopted. I do not think it is fair or wise. I can see the object and the working of it, of course, instantly. As I understand, from March, 1893, until March, 1897, during the second administration of President Cleveland, that was the practice—to allow an entryman to designate which one of two papers equally near to the land should publish his final-proof notice. It is my understanding, however, that for 16 years, from March, 1897, to March, 1913, such was not the practice; that during all those 16 years the register was authorized to designate the newspaper, and where two newspapers of general circulation were equally near to the land the Republican newspaper was invariably designated by the registers, who were then, of course, all Republicans. Now that the Democrats have come into power I think the same rule should prevail.

The Senator from New Mexico asks what reasonable objection there could be to this amendment. I offer this objection: "Turn about is fair play." The Republican newspapers under Republican registers for 16 years, from March, 1897, to March, 1913, had these publications, where Republican and Democratic newspapers were equally near to the land. Now, I say, let those who are in power have the advantage of the same practice. The Republicans made the rule; now let them take their own medicine without complaining.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MYERS. With great pleasure.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I understand the Senator, he concedes that the purpose of this bill, or one of the purposes of this bill, is, to the extent that business of this character will do it, to build up Democratic newspapers.

Mr. MYERS. Did the Senator ask if that is the object of my bill? Oh, no; not all. I explained the object of the bill a few moments ago. It will not have any such effect. The object of the bill is this: Where the newspaper published nearest to the land, homestead, or mining claim is a daily newspaper, issued seven times a week, and has no weekly edition, and there is no weekly newspaper published nearer to the land, and where under those circumstances the notice must be published in a daily newspaper, the present law and the practice are such that it must be published seven times a week for 4 or 8 or 10 weeks, as the case may be, at about seven times the cost to the poor claimant, as compared to what it would cost him if it were published in a weekly newspaper. The object of this bill is to cut down the cost to the claimant of a land or a mining claim; to cut down the cost of publishing his notice to about one-seventh of what it is now in those cases.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, at any rate, the opposition of the Senator from Montana to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico is based upon his desire to build up the business of Democratic newspapers. Am I correct about that?

Mr. MYERS. It is based upon the motto that "Turn about is fair play."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am correct about that; am I not?

Mr. MYERS. It is based upon equity and justice—upon the principle that when Republican newspapers had these publications 16 years, the Democrats, if they publish papers equally near to the land, ought to have them four years.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That may be another way of stating what I have suggested; but it is not quite a categorical reply to what I have asked.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator please ask the question again? Then I will try to give a categorical answer.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My question is whether or not the opposition of the Senator from Montana to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico is not based upon the desire of the Senator from Montana to build up the business of the Democratic newspapers in the West?

Mr. MYERS. Unhesitatingly, yes, sir. When the Democrats are in power I believe in letting the Democrats have the offices, the benefits, and the newspaper publications. If I did not believe that I would not be much of a Democrat.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is precisely what I thought; and I admire the Senator's candor, at least.

Mr. MYERS. I try to be candid in everything, especially in politics.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FALL. And in public business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But does the Senator think that it is in accord with the highest ethics to insist upon building up a Democratic newspaper at the expense of a land entryman? Let me say further, before the Senator answers that question, that if the entryman is permitted to select the newspaper in which his notice will be published he undoubtedly will be able to make better terms than if it is left to the register to select arbitrarily a Democratic newspaper and to select that particular Democratic newspaper which may give most support to the party. Why should not the entryman be permitted to save that amount of money? Why should the Senator from Montana insist upon building up these Democratic newspapers in the West at the expense of these entrymen, very many of them poor men, who are compelled to undergo considerable struggle and hardship in order to make a living?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to know why the Senator from Utah, out of his excessive love for the poor entryman, did not make that suggestion during the 16 years of Republican rule? Why his sudden conversion to such extraordinary love for the poor entryman, now that the Democrats have come into power in the country? What had become of that love during all the 16 years the Republican Party was in power?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Utah would have made that suggestion if it had occurred to him.

Mr. MYERS. Why does it occur now? Why at this opportune time, when for 16 years he had time to think it over under Republican rule? Does all love of his fellow men, all love of fairness, all love of honesty, all desire to see the laws of the country honestly administered for the benefit of the people have to be suggested to him by a Democrat?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But certainly a suggestion of that kind, which is so manifestly just, is better to be made late than never; and I make it now.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I appreciate the little joke which Republican Senators on the other side are enjoying over this bill. Now that they have enjoyed it, I think it is time to dispose of the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the Senator misunderstands the temper in which these suggestions are made upon this side. They are not made in a jocular way. They are made earnestly. The truth about it is that a great deal of money can be saved to these entrymen if they are permitted to select the newspapers in which these notices shall be published, and they ought to be permitted to do it. There is no reason in justice or common sense why they should not be permitted to do it. It is a general practice, as I understand, with reference to court notices, to permit the litigant who brings about the publication of a notice of a summons, for example, to select the newspaper in which it shall be printed. We do not ordinarily give the clerk of a court the control over such publications as that which is now possessed by the register of a land office, and there is every reason why the entryman should be permitted to select the newspaper. So far as I am concerned, I am not jocular about it; I am very much in earnest about it, and I shall support the amendment which the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] has offered.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, this is simply another illustration of the old story of "locking the barn after the horse is stolen," and another case of "whose ox is gored." After Republican newspapers had for 16 years enjoyed this privilege at the expense of the entrymen, our friends on the other side, the Republican Senators, suddenly display great zeal for the purpose of saving the entrymen a few dollars. These notices are printed at legal rates, and the newspapers which publish them under the order of the register of the land office are not allowed to charge any more than the legal rate or a fair and just rate, fixed by the Department of the Interior. I believe that the laborer is worthy of his hire; and when a notice is published in a newspaper I believe a fair rate of compensation ought to be paid for it, and that is all that is permitted under the present practice.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have just come into the Chamber and did not hear the amendment read, but I had decided yesterday that when this bill was reached on the calendar I should offer an amendment having the effect that I judge from the remarks of Senators this amendment has. I therefore support the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

I should like to say, in reply to the Senator from Montana, that it is no excuse now to defend a practice that I think is admittedly wrong on the ground that some other political party, when it had the right to change it, did not make the change. If we go on that theory, there never will be a reform in government brought about. In fact, the Democratic Party is in control of the Government of the United States first because the people were dissatisfied with the Republican Party, and second because they believed the promises that were made to them by the Democratic Party. It is no excuse now for a Democrat to say: "We will keep on doing wrong because the Republicans, when they were in power, did wrong." It seems to me that if you want to get the good will of the people you ought to improve upon the conditions that you charge to be wrong and that you have promised from every stump in the country that you would remedy.

Here is an opportunity to remedy one wrong—a small one, it is true—and it is to the discredit of the Republican Party that through 16 years they did not make this change. It is equally to the discredit of the Democratic Party that they refuse to make it now when it is called to their attention, and they have an opportunity to redeem one of the promises of economy that they have heralded all over this country, and that helped to give them the political victory.

Why, Mr. President, I have never since I have been here seen anything offered as an improvement or a reform in any practice or proceeding, but we have had somebody get up and say, "Why the other party did just as badly when they were in power." I submit that that never is an excuse, and it is not justified at any time unless Democrats are going to say, "We are going to follow the sins and the wrongs of the Republican Party, and the only defense that we make to the country is that we are no worse than you were." You promised to be better. Here is an opportunity to improve on one of the things that was wrong and always has been wrong under any party and every party that has ever had control.

Mr. President, it has not been only the Republican Party that has been wrong. The Democratic Party has been wrong when it was in power. I want to tell you of a little incident that came to my personal attention. Quite a number of years ago I was down through the State of Kansas on some business and I happened to come into Ness City. Ness City is the county seat of Ness County, in southwestern Kansas, and this was at a time when the homesteaders were proving up on their land. It is in a beautiful country, and it is a beautiful little city. It was very prosperous. I met on the street an old schoolmate that I had not seen since I had left school. I knew him well there. He was one of the finest fellows I ever knew, and I asked him what he was doing in Ness City. "Well," he said, "I came here some time ago and saw a great opening for a Democratic newspaper. There was really no Democratic Party in this county. There is not very much to it now, but I have organized the Democratic Party and started a newspaper. The reason I say there is a great opening here for a Democratic newspaper is because nearly everybody in this county is proving up now on his land, so I started a newspaper." Grover Cleveland was then President and the Democrats had all the offices, including the land offices.

I went into his office and saw the little newspaper that he had started, and he sent me several copies of it afterwards. He had to have extra sheets in the newspaper to print all the final-proof notices, and he said to me: "There is not a man who makes final proof in this county but that must pay me the full legal fee." He had, as I remember, in the issue that I saw something over 100 such notices. He said that was about an average of the way in which it was running. He charged the full legal fee. There were several other newspapers in the county, but none of them could get any of the business, because he was the only Democratic editor there was and edited the only Democratic newspaper, and hence every man in the county had to pay him the legal fee, and pay it in advance, before he could make final proof on his homestead. If the entryman had been allowed to select the paper of publication he undoubtedly would have gotten his share—perhaps more than his share—but the price would have been cut. There was not any other excuse for the existence of that newspaper except the final-proof notices, and he was making a big thing out of it, because he could get them all, and all because it was a Democratic paper.

That was a good thing for him. It might have been a good thing for the Democratic Party; it built it up there; and if it is the duty of the final-proof men, the homesteaders, to pay to build up whichever party is in power, then that practice ought to be continued. If, however, we want to be fair to the men and the women who go out on the frontier and locate on the desert and tame it and subdue it, then we ought to give them an opportunity to select the newspaper in which these final-proof notices shall be published, and permit them to get the benefit of any competition that that kind of a law will bring about.

I do not believe there is a State in the Union that does not provide, for instance, in the publication of summons against a nonresident defendant, that the plaintiff who has to publish the summons may select the newspaper in which it shall be published. He may have to select a legal newspaper; he will have to comply with the law in that respect; but if the legal rate for the publication, for instance, of a final-proof notice is $10, and I can get a legal newspaper to publish it for $5, why should I not get the benefit of that kind of a condition? And that, as I understand, is the object of this amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Nebraska has been an able judge in his State, and he will be able to advise us concerning the statutes of the State, I presume, on the matter to which he adverted. Are we to understand the Senator from Nebraska now to state that under the laws of that State one seeking to procure publication of summons, getting service by publication, may himself select the paper which is to publish it?

Mr. NORRIS. That is just what I mean to say.

Mr. WALSH. Then, I undertake to say, the laws of Nebraska are peculiar in that respect, because I should consider that as a very vicious provision. The laws of my State, and the laws of every other State to which my attention has been called—it has not been directed specifically to that of the State of Nebraska—provide that the clerk or judge shall designate the paper most likely to give notice. If that were not the law in divorce cases, as a matter of course the applicant would invariably select the paper least likely to give notice. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to this circumstance. So, in case of the publication of the notice of an execution sale, I know of no State which permits the execution creditor to designate the paper in which the notice of execution sale may be printed, because obviously he would select the one that would be least likely to give notice provided he desired to purchase the property without opposition at all.

I think upon reflection the Senator will not care to stand sponsor for the proposition that it is the universal practice in the publication of legal notices to permit the party who desires the notice published to select the paper in which it is to be printed. The very purpose of requiring the publication is that it shall be effective to give notice, and ordinarily the party who wants the action taken is not particularly desirous that notice shall be given.

Mr. President, there is publication——

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that I did not intend to yield the floor. I was yielding for a question.

Mr. WALSH. I have gotten through with the question. I will send for the statutes of Nebraska.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me?

Mr. NORRIS. Not at the present time. I want to answer the Senator from Montana first as to the question he asked me.

I believe it is universal, or nearly so, that the laws of the States providing for publication of summons against a nonresident defendant permit the plaintiff to select the paper. He could not select any paper in the State, I suppose. Some States have laws which define a legal newspaper. He must select a paper that is a legal newspaper. He must select one usually, the law provides, that is published in the community where the action is pending, and if real estate is involved, where the real estate is located.

Now, that is not confined to Nebraska. That is true of Kansas. Here is the Senator from Kansas just going out. If I am not stating the law right, he will correct me. It is true of other States. I have never had any business in court in summoning a nonresident defendant by publication in any State where I found that that was not true. There are other cases, it is true, in my State and in others, such as the case of a guardian's sale, for instance, or a sheriff's sale, where the particular officer of the court selects the newspapers.

The Senator referred to a judge in Nebraska. There are cases where the judge selects the newspaper, as, for instance, the sale of an insane person's estate or a guardian's estate or a sale of real estate by an administrator or something of that kind he selects the newspaper, and I have never yet known in my experience of a judge who did not permit the person asking for the order to select the newspaper in which it should be published, provided, only, he selected a legal newspaper.

The Senator says the object is to give notice, but bear in mind that it is admitted here that the object in this case is not to give notice, but to give a publication fee to a Democratic newspaper. This is not to get notice; it is to permit a Democratic newspaper to get a fee out of a homesteader. That is the object of the law now. When the Republicans were in power it was to permit a Republican newspaper to get into the pocket of a homesteader.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. The law now provides, and if the bill is enacted it will continue to provide, that the notice must be published in the bona fide newspaper of general circulation which is the nearest to the land.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. MYERS. Under that provision if a Republican newspaper is nearest to the land the Republican newspaper gets it, and if a Democratic newspaper of general circulation is nearest to the land the Democratic newspaper would get it. One would conclude from the discussion on the other side that if this bill passes there would be a sweeping revolution, so that all notices would be published in Democratic newspapers always.

Mr. NORRIS. That will nearly always be the fact, I will say to the Senator. I will state what is usually the case. I have lived for 25 years in a country where the publications were being made, and I think I know something about it. There are some exceptions to it, but as a rule there are two newspapers published in a town. One is a Democratic paper and the other is a Republican paper. The land office will determine——

Mr. MYERS. Right there, Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Let me finish and then I will yield to the Senator again. The land office will not determine as between those two newspapers located in the same town as to which is nearest to the land. They are located in the same town although one may be a few rods nearer to the land than the other, but they are considered to be at the same distance, and that is proper. I am not complaining of that. Any newspaper published in that town nearest the land, if it is otherwise a legal newspaper, is a proper and a legal publication and fulfills the requirements of the law. That means that there is a choice between a Democratic paper and a Republican paper, or perhaps between two Democratic papers and two Republican papers, but even if there were two Democratic papers, the land office man, under the laws that exist now, would give it to the Democratic paper that was the favorite with whichever faction happened to control the land office. If he were a Republican, he would do the same in Republican times, of course. So there is no competition. The man charges the full legal rate. The law of the State provides what the legal rate shall be, but that does not prohibit a man from publishing a notice at one-half the legal rate, and as a rule, if there is competition between the newspapers, a man wants to select a newspaper in which he can get publication for less than the legal rate.

There might be cases, as the Senator from Montana said, where there would be only one newspaper that would be nearest the land. It would be the duty then of the land office official to permit this publication in that particular newspaper, even though it would be of a different political stripe.

Mr. MYERS. On that point, if the Senator will allow me, there are more than a hundred newspapers in the State of Montana. Some of them are Republican papers, and they get their share of the publication.

Mr. NORRIS. If that be true now, and if the receivers and registers in the land offices of Montana are that fair and that honest and are that much interested in the homesteader, then, for God's sake, why not put in the law a provision which will require everybody to be that good, and let us have that spread all over the country instead of confining it to Montana?

I yield now to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], who rose a moment ago.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I simply wanted to reply to what the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] suggested, and I will do that later.

Mr. NORRIS. All right. I have finished what I desired to say.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in connection with the telegram I read a few moments ago from Hon. L. W. Holmes, of Keene, N. H., inquiring as to the whereabouts of his son, whom he described as the sole survivor of the recent Mexican outrage, I have communicated with the State Department over the telephone, and desire to read a telegram from the department, so that it may go into the RECORD in connection with the original telegram. The State Department says:

> Mr. Holmes is in Chihuahua. A special train has gone from El Paso to bring in the bodies, and he will probably return on that train to El Paso to-night.

Mr. President, I want to add a single word, to the effect that it seems to me, in view of this horrible outrage, that the time for "watchful waiting" in Mexican affairs should cease and that our Government should take summary means to protect the lives of American citizens in that ill-fated country.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am, of course, in sympathy with the Senator, and every Senator here with red blood is in sympathy with the Senator from New Hampshire in his statement that everything possible and within reason should be done to prevent outrages like that reported in the newspapers this morning; and every man will agree that condign punishment should be meted out to the assassins who committed the crime. There can be no differences between us as to that.

The Senator from New Hampshire says he thinks the time has come when what he terms and is generally termed the policy of "watchful waiting" should end and that some affirmative step should be taken to protect the lives of American citizens in Mexico. Would the Senator object to informing the Senate and the country just what he thinks our Government should do in that behalf?

The Senator from New Hampshire is an able and experienced man in our legislative life. No man in the Senate has had more to do with molding and directing the course of our public affairs, and he knows—I am not saying this in any hypercritical way—he knows as well as I that we can say easily that a thing ought to stop; we can denounce it; we can insist that adequate punishment should be administered to murderous ruffians. But the thing that now especially concerns me, as one Senator—and I think it concerns a great many other people in and outside of Congress—is as to just what we ought to do. There is where we come to face a difficulty; and it is upon that very important and urgent question that I would be glad to have the opinion of the wise and experienced Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the records of the Senate will show that I have carefully refrained during all this controversy from criticizing our Government in the Mexican matter, yet I have strongly felt that the lives of American citizens and their property interests in the adjoining Republic of Mexico should be safeguarded and protected. I have realized the difficulties that confronted the administration, and I have had no disposition to embarrass the administration simply because it was not of my own party. But here is a very serious matter that confronts us. We are told that 17 American citizens had their clothing removed and they were stood up and shot by citizens of Mexico.

A little time ago, Mr. President, the country was thrown almost into convulsions over the fact that a single American citizen had lost his life through the torpedoing of a foreign ship, and there was strong feeling that our Government ought to seek reparation for the life of that citizen. That number has been multiplied by 17 in Mexico, added to the hundreds of other Americans who had previously been slaughtered in that unfortunate country.

Now, the distinguished Senator from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, dealing with this important subject asks me what I would recommend or what I would do. First, I will say that I am not a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and have not given attention to our relations with foreign Governments, as has the Senator from Missouri. Next, I am not a constitutional lawyer, and can not discuss the matter from an international standpoint, as can the Senator from Missouri. But I will say that inasmuch as the President of the United States has recognized Mr. Carranza as the constitutional head of the Mexican Government, if I were in his place I would demand of Carranza that reparation such as our country might see fit to demand should be made, in view of this inhuman slaughter of American citizens; and if Carranza admitted his inability to protect our citizens in Mexico, if I were the President of the United States I would ask Congress to seriously consider the question as to what was the further duty of the Executive in a matter of this kind. That is what I would do. It might be unwise; I am not going to argue that phase of this question; but I do say that, as an American citizen, very serious notice should be taken of this outrage, and we ought to settle once for all whether the lives of American citizens are safe when they cross the Rio Grande into the territory of the Republic of Mexico. That is what I would do.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire, as the recognized leader upon this side of the Chamber, speaks in a measure for his party. I do not assume to speak for my party nor to express views other than those which I entertain myself. I do not know that they would meet with the approval of any other individual in this Chamber or throughout the country. But it seems to me there is no longer reason, after these long weary months in dealing with the Mexican question, why American citizens should not give voice to their real sentiments and their real feelings concerning these matters. I have long entertained the views I now hold, and have refrained from giving voice to them until I feel that neither patience nor patriotism requires me longer to keep silence. Whatever of hazard there may be in giving them or whatever criticism they may invoke are to be considered as personal to the one who utters them.

Five years ago next March, Mr. President, 7 American citizens were murdered just on this side of the border line near Douglas, Ariz., and 11 others were wounded. I have never talked with anyone who has traveled in Mexico since who did not say that the Mexican people expected at that time to see the American Government, in harmony with its ancient traditions, enter upon a decisive and positive policy for the protection of American citizens. The Mexican people expected it upon every hand. They anticipated that that power, which had been used by the American people even at the time when we were a small and struggling Nation, to protect American citizenship, upon whatever part of the earth it might be found, would be exercised against them, and they braced themselves for that attitude upon our part and fully expected it. We did not go. We gave them to believe from our conduct that we were afraid. They did not interpret our great desire for peace as anything other than fear. We have gathered the harvest of indecision many times since.

Mr. President, with that incident five years ago last March began that compromising side-stepping, procrastinating, apologizing, un-American policy of leaving the American citizen to struggle for himself against bandits and outlaws, against assassins and murderers. It was a policy not heretofore popular with the manly men who had built up and thus far maintained the prestige of our country. We have had five years of it, and the culmination, in my judgment, is not yet, although this morning we have brought to us the fact that 17 American citizens, carrying a passport, as I understand, from the State Department, or from its representative—no doubt a great consolation to them as they stood stripped and naked to be shot—were lined up against the wall of an adobe and coldly, defiantly murdered. That is only a part of the story of these very nauseating details.

Other things have been smothered; fortunately, this transpired in a way that it could not be smothered; but these things have been smothered for the last five years. Sir, if you took the lid off the State Department and should send to the Senate Chamber the notes of the Brazilian minister as to the treatment of American citizens and the insults to the American flag in Mexico, it would not take the American people long to determine what they should do. I maintain that indifference to the rights of our fellow citizens when challenged is not a characteristic of the American people. I maintain in these matters they have not known the facts.

For five years American women have suffered outrages, worse a thousand times than death to them; for five years American citizens have suffered death in ways that human language is inadequate to describe. I shall not go into details now. We know enough this morning. Shall we wait longer to know whether or not a side-stepping, compromising policy is either going to insure protection to our citizens or dignity and honor to the American flag?

I do not know what others would do nor have I authority to speak for anyone except myself, but I would demand of Carranza immediate protection for American citizenship in Mexico, and if he was not able to give assurance in such a way that no man could doubt that it could and would be carried out, I would intervene in Mexico for the purpose of protecting American rights and American citizens. I would protect the American passport when issued at whatever cost. I would make even the fiends of Mexico know its worth. I do not believe anything is to be gained in the long run by this policy of waiting for a nation like Mexico to settle its difficulties when those difficulties involve the rights of our own people. Retribution, in my judgment, moves swiftly for the nation which forgets or abandons its own.

We do not want Mexican territory; we do not want to impeach Mexican sovereignty; we want the Mexican people to settle their own troubles; but we do want, and we are entitled to have, protection to American citizens, and yet even in the face of our treaties we have refused to protect them. We have been greatly disturbed through the last year and a half because the Belgian treaty was ignored, because neutral rights here and there have been trampled under foot. We have felt deeply and profoundly on these questions. We have a treaty with Mexico by which the protection of the rights of our citizens are guaranteed in that territory. Are the treaties of the United States to be made "a scrap of paper" also because we have not the courage to say to that nation that those rights there guaranteed shall be protected? Before we would teach the nations of the earth to respect their treaties let us teach those who violate them to respect ours.

Mr. President, I, like the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], have sympathized with the President in this difficult situation. Only upon one former occasion have I undertaken to express myself in regard to it, and that expression was precisely in accordance with the views which I now hold, that this is a mistaken policy—mistaken upon the part of the predecessor of the President, mistaken upon the part of the President, if you please—that a decisive, determined, explicit, unquestioned American policy which has at its heart and core the protection of American citizens at whatever cost is the only policy which should characterize men in whose veins flows the red blood of Americans. This is not a party question; it rises higher. It is a question of whether we are prepared to defend and protect the lives of those who rely on our passports and trust in the integrity of our institutions. There can be but one side to that question to all who feel an interest in the honor and dignity and mission of this Republic.

Mr. STONE, Mr. LEWIS, and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I asked the question I did of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] in perfect good faith, and especially without any thought other than that he is too large a man to view a question of this gravity and nature from a partisan standpoint. It seems to me that what we call politics has no place in the consideration of questions of this character, and I have felt that the Senator from New Hampshire might be relied upon to discuss such questions as this from a nonpartisan standpoint.

The horror of the crime as reported in the newspapers this morning appals everyone. That the men who committed it should be punished according to their deserts—and that means death—there can be no doubt. Mr. President, all I know of this sad affair is what I have read in the newspapers. As I understand it, a number of bandits stopped a train, took off 17 unarmed men, subjected them to the indignity of stripping them naked, and then murdered them. Who did it? We are told it was done by a band of unknown and irresponsible bandits. The motive moving them, I think, was different from that which in our recent history moved American bandits to stop trains, to rob express cars, to go through passenger cars with masks on their faces and pistols in their hands, compelling unarmed passengers to surrender their valuables, and at the least sign of resistance to kill them. We know that many have been killed in this country by this class of wild and reckless criminals. Of course wherever such crimes are committed the criminals should be hunted down and punished. A crime of that kind committed in any State of this Union is more apt to be followed with a vigorous and ceaseless search for the criminals than if committed in Mexico under present conditions there. For five years or more Mexico has been in tumult; Mexico has been one wide field of disorder and anarchy, and it is only until within the last two or three months that anything really approaching a settled government has been established, or the establishment of such a government seriously attempted.

Mr. President, I am as much concerned as any man—but no more than any other Senator, I hope—in the protection of American lives and American property in Mexico and everywhere. We all desire that. I very well recall the incident referred to by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] occurring at Douglas, and I remember also what occurred at El Paso a short time later. At that time I offered a resolution in the Senate authorizing the President of the United States to employ the military forces of this country, in certain contingencies, left largely to his discretion, to prevent a recurrence of such outrages. That resolution was debated here in the presence of nearly every Senator occupying a seat here at this time. On the Republican side the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the then Senator from New York who recently had left the office of Secretary of State—I speak of former Senator Root—and my lamented friend from Georgia, Senator Bacon, upon this side, and other Senators on both sides spoke in very critical terms—quite caustic, indeed, and somewhat harsh in some of their observations—in opposition to that resolution. I recall the language, or the substance of the language, used by the great Senator from New York, Mr. Root, when he said that any movement along that line was to take a step backward in the march of human civilization.

There was not a Senator, Mr. President, on the other side or on this side of the Chamber who expressed himself on the floor as being favorable to that resolution or to any resolution of like kind, either in the substance or the spirit of it. Everyone who spoke at all expressed himself in unequivocal terms of opposition to any policy like that outlined in my resolution.

The then President, Mr. Taft, desired to confer with me about the resolution while it was pending. I went to see him and talked the matter over with him. We know what his policy was. He then thought that resolutions of that kind and the discussions of such resolutions were unfortunate; that the effect in Mexico would be bad and tend to obstruct the policy he was pursuing and which he felt confident would ultimate in composing conditions in that Republic. And, Mr. President, from the time he appealed to me, but without any change of opinion, I acquiesced in the policy of the President; I have been acquiescing in it ever since; I am acquiescing in it to-day.

There is not a Senator here, there is not a right-thinking man in America, who does not hope and pray that these serious and difficult questions may be solved without a resort to force on our part. President Wilson believes that we are now approaching a point where these difficult and delicate problems will be solved; and I not only hope that this is true, as I am sure you do, but I have felt that we ought all of us as American Senators, not as Republicans or as Democrats, give him our support at this time in order to see whether this experiment which he is supporting will be disappointing or whether it will succeed.

Now, suddenly this frightful thing has happened, and it is calculated to arouse the hot, resentful blood of our people. It is not unlike the sinking of the Maine in the harbor of Habana, or of other things of that kind. In 1898 there were only two alternatives for us. We had either to wait with great patience to settle our troubles with Spain by peaceful means or go to war. We chose the latter, and chose it against the judgment and wish of President McKinley, who was a high-minded, noble gentleman, and a lover of peace, who believed the questions at issue could be settled without a resort to arms. But the people overrode the President and had war, and we won, at considerable cost of life and treasure. Whether we benefited by our victory remains a question about which different people have different opinions.

Mr. President, what are we going to do now? That is the question confronting us, and that is why I asked the question I did of my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. What are we going to do? What would you have us do? The Senator from New Hampshire says, first, that he would demand of Gen. Carranza that he prevent things of this kind, or, when they do happen, that he hunt down the criminals and punish them. If that demand should be made, I assume Gen. Carranza will promptly promise to use all the power at his command—and promise with the utmost sincerity, too—to run down these criminals and bring them to justice.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. Does not the Senator think that if the State Department would refuse to permit Mexican troops to cross the territory of the United States in going from one part of Mexico to another, and if the State Department would prevent Mexican generals representing the Carranza Government from having headquarters in the United States, perhaps some of this trouble would be stopped?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, that may be or may not be true; I do not know. The Senator's question implies a criticism of the act allowing Carranza troops to pass through our territory. I do not wish to be diverted into that kind of a discussion. It would be too far removed from the grave question we are discussing apart from partisan politics. The Senator from Kansas has his opinion concerning the matters he inquires about. So have I. But at this time, and while we are considering a grave international question, I do not wish to cross the line which separates such a question from local political controversy.

The Senator from New Hampshire said he would make this demand of Carranza. Let us presume it to be made, and then presume that Gen. Carranza should respond in a way we could not object to. Let us presume that he should acknowledge the justice of our demand and promise to do everything possible to punish the criminals, to pay damages, and strive to prevent like outrages in the future. What then? The Senator would not then instantly and on the spot demand war. In effect he says not; but he says if Carranza failed to demonstrate his ability to control the situation and preserve order he would have the President lay the whole question before Congress as to our duty and our policy. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is a little more explicit and definite than the Senator from New Hampshire. He says he would have us intervene. The Senator from New Hampshire says that he would advise the President to lay the matter before the Congress and take the opinion of the Congress. But take our opinion about what? I presume as to what we should do. Does the Senator mean that we should declare war, or direct an act that would amount to war?

Mr. GALLINGER. I meant precisely that.

Mr. STONE. Now I see better where the Senator stands. There is not much difference between his attitude and that of the Senator from Idaho. I am not going to ask—I would not do that—what the attitude of any Senator would be if that subject were before the Senate, because that ought to be a subject to be taken up for discussion at that time. This is neither the time nor the occasion for that.

I do not know whether Senators on that side or this have changed their opinions in the last year or two. I do know that two or three years ago, when this subject was up, there was not a Senator on either side who was not against war. I recall a resolution I offered after the bloody affairs at Douglas and El Paso authorizing the President to employ the military forces of the United States to prevent a repetition of such outrages. I got no support from either side for the resolution. It seemed to be under a universal condemnation.

Mr. BORAH. When the Senator says there was no Senator on this side who did not condemn the resolution, the Senator does not mean that all Senators upon this side expressed their condemnation?

Mr. STONE. No; I do not. I only mean to say that those who spoke on that side and on this spoke in opposition to the resolution, and no one spoke in favor of it. I stood alone.

Mr. BORAH. There has always been a certain amount of reticence upon the part of some of us, especially who were less familiar with these things; but in so far as we expressed ourselves in private, there was no doubt about the view of the Senator from Idaho at that time being the same as now.

Mr. STONE. Of course I do not know what the private opinions of Senators were. I only say that when we had that discussion here all of one afternoon there was not a Senator on either side who spoke at all who did not speak in condemnation of the resolution and of any policy such as was outlined in the resolution I had offered and which was pending. I stood alone. I am not criticizing Senators for that. I am not adverting to it for the purpose of saying anything in the nature of criticism. I simply refer to the fact to say that it has been for five years the consistent policy of the Government, at both ends of the avenue—executive and legislative—so far as we have had any expression, to try to compose these Mexican troubles without a resort to force. Now, if we are going to change our attitude we should all agree to go about it in a very thoughtful, considerate, and deliberate way, and not be quick merely to bring up some unhappy circumstance or incident here and there, no matter what it is, with no apparent definite purpose except to excite ourselves and other people. Let us get far away from narrow considerations and deal with such questions as we now have before us in a broad, patriotic way, looking solely to the honor and welfare of our people and country, and this without forgetting our duty to our neighbors.

The Senator from New Hampshire suggests two alternatives to be followed in their order. First, he would demand of the de facto government in Mexico—the Carranza government—that it shall prohibit future outrages of the kind in question, and punish those who may commit them. If it should be demonstrated that this de facto government can not do this, then comes the second alternative. The incapacity of the Carranza government, even in the present emergency, has not yet been demonstrated. The crime we complain of was committed only yesterday; the criminals, I suppose, have fled to the mountains. If such a crime had been committed in the mountains of Pennsylvania or Colorado you would hardly have the criminals behind iron bars in 12 hours——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, of course the Senator did not understand me even to intimate that this matter could be settled in a day as between the Government of the United States and the authorities of Mexico.

Mr. STONE. No; the Senator intends to be fair. There is no controversy between us. I am merely saying that we could not expect a matter of this kind to be brought to a conclusion in Mexico or here within a day. Such crimes may be committed or like things done in future, and they may be done in the United States as well as elsewhere. We can recall the murder of Italians in New Orleans. We can recall frightful things done by mobs on the Pacific coast. I will not elaborate on this line. I would be ashamed to do so. In a sense these Mexican murderers were not a mob. They were a band of bandits; and yet, strange to say, they were not seeking to rob, but to murder. They were political bandits no doubt moved by the supreme idea of embroiling the United States with the Carranza government. It is impossible that robbery should have been the motive. Then, why was the murder committed, unless it was to drive the United States into some hostile action? It would seem inevitable that the crime was committed by people unfriendly to the Carranza government, and therefore with a view to making trouble between that embryo government and this.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will permit me, he has compared this atrocious act, an account of which is given in the papers this morning, with some things that have happened in our own country, for example, the killing of the Italians at New Orleans. He has compared it with the ordinary holding up of a train, the robbery and murder of passengers. I call the Senator's attention, however, to this one significant difference between what has occurred in Mexico and any of the cases that have occurred in the United States——

Mr. STONE. I do not pretend that they are parallel.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; but I understood the Senator was using them as illustrations. If we are to believe the statements made by the newspapers this morning, these men undertook to go to the mines upon the assurance of Carranza that they would be protected. That assurance was transmitted through the State Department, as the newspapers inform us; and the newspapers further tell us that before the men departed they requested that the Carranza Government should furnish them protection in the form of a guard, showing that they were apprehensive of the situation, and that the request was refused. Now, I can not imagine, and I think the Senator from Missouri can not imagine, a situation of that kind existing in the United States, where if the attention of our Government was called to the fact that there was danger of a murderous assault being made upon the citizens of a foreign country our Government would not take steps to protect them, whereas in this affair in Mexico protection was refused, although, as now appears, the danger was extreme and imminent.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss details of that kind. I do not know the facts, nor does the Senator from Utah. Before we discuss the facts—the details of this occurrence—let us wait until we get them.

Mr. President, I wish to conclude by saying that I fully agree that our Government should do everything it can do to protect our people in Mexico, or, as for that matter, to protect our people anywhere else in the world. That should go even without saying. I undertake to affirm that the President of the United States will do whatever he can do within his authority to protect our people in Mexico and elsewhere, throughout the world, and do everything he can to insure the punishment of those who commit crimes against Americans. All of us ought to agree to that. Every right thinking American does agree to that.

Mr. President, if the Carranza government, which we have recognized and in a way helped to establish, should unhappily prove itself to be absolutely inefficient, then, indeed, must we face the question whether we must go to Mexico, as the Senator from Idaho now says we must, with arms in our hands. But certainly we have not yet reached that point. Our duty now is to give countenance, encouragement, and aid to the government we have recognized to the end that we shall not embarrass that government in the difficult task it has undertaken of establishing peace, order, stability, and liberty in Mexico. For the present I want to leave this matter with the President of the United States to deal with, feeling sure that he will deal with it to the best of his great abilities and his high patriotism, and with every desire to protect our people in all their rights. Can we doubt that he will, at least, do everything that any of us could do if we were in his place? I deprecate anything here calculated to increase or aggravate excitement in the country. The public indignation over this outrage is already sufficient. Here we are bound by duty to act calmly and deliberately, and especially should we treat all international questions without a tinge of partisanship.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the news conveyed to the public by the telegrams of this morning, and which forms the basis of the present discussion, agitated me profoundly. I will not say that it was entirely unexpected, because from time to time there have been repetitions of similar tragic occurrences in Mexico, not as extensive or as horrible as that which we are told was committed yesterday, but too tragic to escape the conclusion that their repetition must sooner or later provoke some active interference by the Government of the United States.

Reference has just been made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to the fact that five years ago disturbed conditions in Mexico began to manifest themselves which led to rebellion and revolution, and which have distracted the people of that unhappy country ever since. I take it the Senator's view is that interference heretofore would have been better not only as regards Mexico but as regards the United States than the policy which has been followed by the two administrations in power since this unfortunate situation arose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator from Colorado wants to continue. I was going on to say a few things about the Philippine government bill.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit me, I will promise not to detain the Senate longer than half or three-quarters of an hour in what I may have to say.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island, having yielded the floor for the purpose of an executive session yesterday, he is at the hour of 2 o'clock entitled to the floor if he desires it.

Mr. LIPPITT. I did not hear what the Chair said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the Senator from Rhode Island, having yielded the floor last night for the purpose of an executive session, he is now entitled to the floor if he desires it. If not, the Chair will recognize the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. LIPPITT. I think, under the circumstances, Mr. President, I would like to continue. Of course, if the Senator from Colorado wishes to speak for only 5 or 10 minutes that would be rather a different matter.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, let me understand who has the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] had the floor, discussing the Philippine government bill, when the Senate went into executive session, and he yielded only for that purpose. At 2 o'clock the unfinished business, the Philippine government bill, comes up automatically, and the Senator from Rhode Island is entitled to the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not so understand the situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the ruling of the Chair, anyway.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, I understand the ruling of the Chair perfectly, but I recall no other instance since I have been here in which that rule has prevailed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut will state it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. While the unfinished business, of course, is the order of business, it can be laid aside by unanimous consent at the present time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Colorado, of course, can ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside to allow him to conclude his remarks. That can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. THOMAS. I make that request, if it is necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Do I understand that it is only for the purpose of having the Senator from Colorado conclude his remarks?

Mr. THOMAS. That is my only purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Some of the rest of us may want to say something if this matter is to be opened, and therefore I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There seems to be objection to laying aside the unfinished business. The Chair does not want to be wrong about a ruling of this kind, but the Chair is undoubtedly of opinion that when the unfinished business is laid before the Senate the Senator who was discussing it at the conclusion of the session of the Senate the day before and has not concluded his remarks is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, with much reluctance I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. LIPPITT. At the suggestion of the Senator having the Philippine government bill in charge and at his request, feeling that I can make the remarks which I want to make at some subsequent time, and as there appears to be considerable interest in the discussion of this Mexican question, I yield the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. I regret very much that the exigencies of the situation have interfered with the plans of the Senator from Rhode Island. I assume, however, that the importance of the subject matter under discussion at the time the morning hour expired——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado now care about appealing from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. THOMAS. No, sir; not now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the Senator from Colorado is recognized and will proceed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the unfinished business is still before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is still before the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is still before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not temporarily laid aside.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois will state it.

Mr. LEWIS. In view of the question of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], may I ask is it understood that the Philippines bill is now before the Senate and remarks are really ostensibly addressed to that order of business—the Philippines bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill before the Senate is the Philippine government bill. In accordance with the practice of a hundred years in the history of the American Senate, however, any Senator may address the Senate upon any subject he sees fit.

Mr. LEWIS. My query, if I may be pardoned, was solely to ascertain whether the bill before us is the bill respecting some lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That bill has gone to the calendar.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to address myself to the Mexican question upon one or the other.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield for an inquiry.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry as to the effect of a notice. I do not know that there is any rule governing notices. I only followed the practice of the Senate in giving notice that I would address the Senate on the Philippine government bill at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], who expected to proceed this morning. He has just yielded the floor, and if the notice I gave has any effect, the Philippine government bill being still before the Senate, I would be entitled to the floor. I do not desire, however, to interfere with the remarks of the Senator from Colorado; I would much prefer that he would proceed; but I do not like to lose whatever effect the notice I gave might have to entitle me to speak upon the Philippine government bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Washington that there is no rule of the Senate which entitles a Senator who has given notice to speak at a certain time upon a certain question. It is merely a custom to give notice, and it is generally acquiesced in by the Senate and the Senator is permitted to talk at that time, but if there be other business that has precedence of the Senator's speech, the business must be attended to and the speech must wait. In other words, a Senator can not farm out the floor or protect himself by simply giving notice that he proposes to speak at a certain time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have never understood that there was any rule under which notices had any effect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no rule.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But I have not observed any instance in which such notices were not given effect in practice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There have been instances in which they were not. The Chair will state to the Senator from Washington that other things being equal the Chair will recognize the Senator from Washington at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. He will make a note of it and recognize the Senator, other things being equal.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it is of course self-evident that the subject under discussion has suddenly intruded itself upon our attention. At the time of our adjournment yesterday no one could have anticipated that an event so serious in its character and so absorbing in its importance would so soon have intruded itself upon our consideration. Indeed, Mr. President, when I entered the Chamber this morning I indulged the hope that until further information had been received it would not be brought up for discussion or consideration even indirectly. But since it has arisen I have felt it my duty, both to myself and to the country, to again direct attention for a moment, in view of the fact that some action will probably be taken—indeed I think should be taken—by the administration with regard to Mexican affairs, to some of the events which accompanied, if indeed they did not create, the awful conditions which have cursed the Mexican Republic for the last five years, and which in my opinion, Mr. President, justify both President Taft and President Wilson, independently of other considerations, in taking the course and assuming the attitude they took and assumed toward this very serious and important problem.

Mr. President, the Republic of Mexico was at peace with all the world in the summer of 1910. Under the administration of the then President, to outward appearance at least, these happy conditions promised to continue indefinitely. They were rudely disturbed, however, largely, perhaps, because of the Mexican temperament, and as well by serious problems of national concern, but primarily by a commercial condition, a trade rivalry. The conflict for supremacy between two great established competitors for supremacy in the oil business of that country, the one having at the time the support and sympathy of the existing Government and the other a formidable but defensive competitor. I refer, of course, to the two great oil interests, one known as the Pearson Syndicate and the other as the Standard Oil Co., the one identified with the administration, the other confronted with the formidable fact that such identification was actual as well as political. I was in Mexico in the months of January and February, 1910, at which time it was common knowledge that a rival concern to the Standard had not only entered the field for the commercial conquest of Mexico by displacing the Standard but had identified with itself the ruling power and influences of the Republic.

Now, Mr. President, nearly all the wars of modern times, at least, have had their inception in commercial rivalry, the outgrowth of that competition which, finding itself distanced, resorts to arts and methods which provoke retaliation and which in turn necessarily breeds conflict. During the period when these two great forces were opposed to each other for the commercial domination of Mexico these conditions naturally developed, and competition had become conflict when Madero challenged the supremacy of the existing government. That became the opportunity, Mr. President, of the Standard Oil Co., that great combination which dominated and still dominates many commercial affairs in America and reaches out with its tentacles all over the world. Madero challenged the legitimacy of the Diaz government with the support of the Standard Co. The Diaz government retaliated with the support of the Pearson corporation, and the conflict was on.

Mr. President, this is not a matter of surmise—the partisan action and the aid given to one side and the other by these huge commercial organizations—a fact crystallized in a Senate report through testimony taken by a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and bearing directly upon the subject, submitted, I think, to this body before I became a Member of it.

Mr. President, you will recall on the 21st day of April, 1914, the Senate was engaged in the consideration of what was known as the Vera Cruz resolution, empowering the President to act as his judgment might dictate with regard to an insult which had been offered to the American flag by the Huerta forces. The discussion took a wide range, as it should have done. During the debate the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], theretofore the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations, called the attention of the Senate to the testimony to which I have just referred, and established the fact to my satisfaction that the unhappy conditions prevailing in Mexico were the direct outgrowth of the commercial rivalry of two great private organizations, so extensive, so formidable, so powerful that their respective support of its warring factions was itself a guaranty that their warfare would not only continue till one side or the other should prevail, but be amply and financially supported.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Sixty-third Congress, pages 6980 and 6981, will be found quotations read from the record by the Senator from Michigan with regard to the subject to which I am now addressing myself. It is not my intention, Mr. President, to do more than briefly refer to the disclosures there made. It, however appears when the Mexican revolution, headed by Francisco I. Madero against President Diaz, broke out the Eagle Oil Co., which includes the Aguila Oil Co., dealing in the refined products of oil, and the Pearson oil concessions belonging to Lord Cowdray, of England, producing crude oil, were doing their business in sharp rivalry with the Waters-Pierce Oil Co., a Missouri corporation operating in Mexico. Mr. Hopkins says they were active competitors. At that time the controlling interest and the stock of the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. was owned by the Standard Oil Co. According to the witness, Mr. Henry Clay Pierce, president of the Waters-Pierce Co., "conceived it to be 'imminently' proper that the public should understand how Lord Cowdray got these concessions and how he exercised the control which he had over the Mexican Government," and witness says that he was employed by Mr. Pierce for that purpose.

This record goes on, Mr. President, to give the details and activities of these two concerns from that time, the one in behalf of the revolution, the other in support of the existing Government. At one time $600,000 were withdrawn by Madero from the treasury and utilized for his own side of the contest. Some of the transactions were transferred to the city of New York, the great financial headquarters of America, when Mr. Limantour, previously to that time the secretary of the Mexican treasury, a member of the cabinet of President Diaz, appeared.

Mr. Hopkins—

A lawyer, I think, of the Washington bar, the general counsel for Carranza in this country, as I am informed—says that he was at the Hotel Astor when Mr. Limantour was there, but denied that Limantour had reported to President Diaz upon his arrival in New York from France that large financial interests in New York had agreed to advance the necessary money to make the Madero revolution successful, whereupon President Diaz resolved to make no further resistance, although he admitted that Francisco Madero, the father of the late President, and Dr. Francisco Vasquez Gomez conferred with Limantour in the Hotel Astor, and "I understand he had a conference with Speyer & Co." When asked whether he had any conference with Mr. Stillman or Mr. Vanderlip, Hopkins replied, "It would not surprise me at all."

Senator SMITH then proceeded with the record and directed the attention of the Senate to an incident immediately preceding the battle or surrender of Juarez:

Hopkins says that he was very familiar with the whole affair; that he was in Washington when the Battle of Juarez occurred, and that just prior to the Battle of Juarez he was in conference in New York with the father of the late President Madero, Mr. Limantour, the minister of finance of Mexico, also a director in the Mexican national railways, and Dr. Francisco Vasquez Gomez at the Hotel Astor. That the attack upon Juarez was delayed pending this conference, "where there were negotiations looking to a compromise."

That is to say, Mr. President, the forces holding and the Mexican forces attacking the city of Juarez were upon the eve of battle and suspended their operations because of the negotiations of the representatives of two oil companies in the city of New York, which were looking to a compromise. Of what? Doubtless, Mr. President, of their own commercial affairs, but upon its success or its defeat depended the fighting or the issue of the battle, the lives of the soldiers which were at stake, a conflict which might be followed by murder, rape, and destruction.

The Senator in commenting upon this remarkable incident said:

Why, Mr. President, is it conceivable that three men meeting in the Hotel Astor in New York should hold in the hollow of their hands the fate of 17,000,000 people at the south of us? Is it conceivable that all of this dire calamity, the loss of life, the murder, the outrages committed upon women and girls, the destruction of millions of dollars' worth of property, could all have been avoided if these three arch-conspirators had been able to agree upon a division of the railroad and the oil interests of Mexico? Yet that is what this man says under oath (p. 787). Hopkins admits that the Mexican Petroleum Co. finally arrived at an understanding with the Standard Oil Co., and that through this connection it is doing a very large business in Mexico, and says that the Mexican Petroleum Co. is practically owned by the Standard Oil Co., and "on one occasion Doheney & Canfield, who manage the Mexican Petroleum Co., were a little hard up for money and went to the Standard Oil office, 26 Broadway, N. Y., where they secured $400,000 in a few moments," as I was told by a man in the office of the Standard Oil Co., although I would not care to give his name; that the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. did everything they could to keep the Standard out of Mexico "and has been and is its greatest enemy in that country" (p. 791).

Hopkins says that he has "had a good deal to do with revolutions, also in maintaining constituted government." He says he knew that President Zelaya was going to be put out of the Presidency of Nicaragua some time before it happened (p. 788). That he imparted his information to certain people in Europe, notably the French banker, whom he had approached for a loan in behalf of the Mexican revolution. He said he knew exactly what was going to happen. When asked if that information came directly from our Government he said: "I should not say directly from our Government; I knew what was going to happen before our Government did, and stopped Zelaya's loan from going through."

You can not dismiss with a wave of the hand this man who can stop a loan from a European banking house to a government in Central America. You can not dismiss with a wave of the hand a man whose labors were sufficient to call for a personal appropriation out of the treasury of Mexico amounting to $50,000 in gold. This man is an acknowledged and professional revolutionary authority; has been close to the department of state, and wields a powerful influence over the affairs of Central America.

Now, Mr. President, it is fair to assume, indeed I think it is the inevitable conclusion, that two enormous private combinations in daily struggle for commercial supremacy with a nation for its pawn have continued to occupy these rival positions throughout the changing phases of this unhappy contest, each contributing as required to the success of its respective side. And this means, Mr. President, if my premises are correct, that every life offered in sacrifice upon the altars of the Mexican revolution, every outrage committed upon the women and children, the assassination of American citizens and of foreigners, the destruction of every dollar's worth of property, the awful havoc and carnage, the spread of epidemics, the sinister outgrowth of revolution and militarism, all these things, Mr. President, rest their awful responsibilities upon the shoulders of the men who supported, if they did not organize, this revolution through the financial assistance which they were able to give the rival contestants through their respective organizations.

It is not the people of Mexico exclusively, however, Mr. President, who have suffered. Doubtless they would have been exhausted long ago but for the new financial blood constantly pumped into the veins of revolution to promote commercial supremacy without regard to sanctity of human life or human freedom. We have suffered from this terrible war. The world has felt its pernicious consequences, and intervention, if it comes, will have been the unavoidable consequence of this unprecedented battle for trade supremacy. Mr. President, one of these great organizations has developed some of the most enormous fortunes in America. One of them has given freely for feeding starved and unhappy Belgians. Its use in that beneficent way stands in contrast to a long caravan of ghostly skeletons south of the Rio Grande, lining the passage of five weary years, once tenanted by living souls and clothed with flesh and blood, sacrificed to the Moloch of trade through an organization whose influence, whose strength, and whose power have been marshaled in support of war as a means to the extension of its commerce.

Mr. President, I have been conscious, as I still am, that interference in Mexico by the Government of the United States is doubtless one of the objects, if not the principle object, which one of these concerns has steadily had in view from the commencement of the revolution down to the present hour. I do not mean to say, I do not wish to be understood as saying, that it has deliberately planned a single murder; that it is directly responsible for the horrible affair which occurred yesterday, if our information is correct, or of the many which have preceded it; but there is an old legal maxim, Mr. President, that a man is presumed to have intended the consequences of his own act; and no combination in America is so great and so powerful that it can escape the application of that principle of human conduct.

I charge, therefore, Mr. President, from this floor that the Mexican revolution, with all of its horrors, are the direct and inevitable outgrowth of commercial rivalry between two great monopolies, of a design upon the part of the Standard Oil Co. on the one side and the Pierce Oil Co. on the other to dominate the oil resources and industry of that unhappy country; that to secure it they have stood behind and sustained the warring factions of Mexico. That the bloodshed, the suffering, and the desolation of that land have been the necessary consequence of their active aid. Perhaps their managers did not foresee all the results of their action; perhaps they long ago would fain have brought the struggle to an end or withdrawn from it; but it is easy, Mr. President, to begin a war; once begun, no man may bring it to a conclusion.

I want the American people, aroused and indignant as they must be all over the continent to-day, to pause a moment and consider the origin of Mexican difficulties and to place the blame for their occurrence where it belongs. Such is my purpose, and my only purpose at this time, in taking part in this discussion. Like the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], I believe, indeed I am morally certain, that this administration, face to face with this tremendous exigency, will meet it in a spirit and in a manner commensurate with its importance and in such a way as will command the approval of the American people.

Mr. President, I am painfully conscious of the fact that unless the de facto President of Mexico can maintain order in that unhappy country, unless he has the physical power behind him to enforce the laws, to protect life and property, horrors such as that which has provoked this discussion must provoke interference. We can not go on forever in our present situation. We have been more than patient. We have recognized the fact that that unhappy country has been struggling to secure its independence in its own way. We have been more than patient. We have recognized the fact that rival factions, each pretending to be animated by the same purpose, have striven against each other for supremacy. We have recognized also the fact that intrigue, doubtless proceeding from outside sources, has been busy in Mexico, and particularly along the border, to the end that provocation after provocation might force the hand of the American Government, which up to this time has not been successful. We have been extremely patient.

We have invited the cooperation of the great Republics of South America, and with their cooperation we have reached a definite conclusion with regard to the existence of a government in Mexico. By that act, Mr. President, we have done more to remove from the South and Central American people upon this hemisphere that suspicion and distrust of the United States, and particularly their fear of the Monroe doctrine, as sometimes exemplified, than by all the other acts of our past history. We have paved the way for a pan-American alliance.

I say again we have been extremely patient. The blood of our people and of our rulers has risen as outrage after outrage has been perpetrated across the border; yet I think the verdict of history will be that the patience exemplified up to this time, unprecedented in the history of politics anywhere, has been justified by these results, as it will be by those which are to come.

Mr. President, no man in the United States can be more averse to war than am I. As I boy I went through the experiences of one great war. I have seen the horrible, the seamy, the awful side of human conflict. My recollections of those terrible days are now as vivid as they were on the day of Lee's surrender. I know from bitter experience what war means. I have seen the crêpe hanging from the door of every dwelling. I have seen want, misery, and suffering abroad in the land. I have seen injustice rampant, as it always is during times of conflict. I, therefore, am always for peace. Of course, there comes, or may come, a time when peace is inconsistent with safety, with the national integrity, with the national honor. If so be it has now come, if we are about to confront it and can not longer avoid it, then, of course, the Nation, without regard to consequences, can take but one course.

I have felt, however, and I still feel, that intervention in Mexico means permanent occupation. We may declaim against the future acquisition of territory, we may with the utmost sincerity repudiate any purpose upon our part to extend our dominion, but he who understands the character of a revolutionary people like those of Mexico—and they have been in revolution, with the exception of the Diaz régime, ever since 1810—and who also considers the enormous expanse of Mexican territory, it seems to me can come to no other but the conclusion that once the American flag crosses the border, borne by an Army marching southward to the air of "America," that moment American sovereignty, ex necessitate rei, marches southward to stay, and ultimately will find its lower border in Central America. To some, Mr. President, that is not an unpleasing prospect, but to me, when I consider the resulting necessity of assimilating 17,000,000 alien people, an alien race, speaking an alien tongue, added to the tremendous social tasks and complications now resting upon us, when we further consider that conquest is inconsistent with American institutions, I shrink from any step, not absolutely necessary, which may require us to interfere in Mexico.

Mr. President, when we talk of war we always think of it in terms of the third person. It is not you or I who are to march to the front and occupy the trenches, but it is somebody else. When the time comes—which God forbid—that we must intervene, it is not the sons and the sycophants of the owners of great combinations like those which have contributed to this awful tragedy in American history who will be found baring their breasts to Mexican bayonets, but it will be your son and mine, Mr. President, the sons of the good people everywhere who pay the taxes and fight the battles of the Nation.

Mr. President, I wish to God this Government had the power to take those men who are so largely responsible for Mexican anarchy and march them in front of an American Army, if we go in there, and compel them to receive the first shock and bear the first brunt of armed conflict. But no, we have not the power. Safe in their sheltered nooks in the great city by the sea, secure in their luxurious country places, their great money machine in full operation, they will read of battles and of victories won by other men; and when the end shall come, it is they, and not the boys in blue, who will enjoy the material rewards of successful war.

Mr. President, things in this world seem to be awry sometimes and terribly unequal. Let us consider, before we take final thought, with regard to the situation confronting us, whether it be necessary to go so far as to commit ourselves to a policy of physical force. That, I am sure, the administration will do; that, I am sure, the administration is doing, and I trust in God that this, like other questions of a foreign nature affecting not only our policy but our destiny, will be considered as far as possible, as I am sure the administration will consider it, from that broad American standpoint which sinks partisanship into insignificance and makes nothing but the good, the welfare, and the interest of our country the governing influence to shape our future action. The moment of passion is not the time for action; to-morrow reason rethroned will inquire, deliberate, and determine.

Mr. LIPPITT and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The Senator from Rhode Island. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator from Rhode Island. I was not aware that the Senator from Rhode Island intended to continue his remarks at this time.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, yesterday when I closed I had been discussing the question of the promises that were supposed to have been made by various representatives of the American Government in the Philippines to the Filipino people in regard to independence. I had quoted the statements and position of Mr. Taft while he was Governor General of the islands, and the statements which had been made by Mr. Dickinson, who, as Secretary of War, had visited the islands. I want now to refer to a statement which I think reasonably and from a commonsense point of view sums up the situation as it appeared to the mind of a man who was prominent in the government of the islands, who was very long a resident of the islands, and is now a resident there, who, I think, had been a Member of the House of Representatives of the American Congress, who was a vice governor of the islands, and who, above all, was very fond of the Filipino people. I refer to former Vice Gov. Gilbert. When he was a witness before the Committee on the Philippines of the Senate he said, in reference to the various statements which have been made in regard to Filipino independence:

> A lot of these statements that they say public officials have made with reference to the future of the Filipinos have not gone to the extent of talking about independence at all. They have talked about self-government, perhaps not using that word, but using some other word. I know for myself that I never understood that the time was going to come necessarily when the Filipinos would be given independence, but I felt the time would come when they would be given self-government entirely, and that very likely when that time came they would not want independence; that they would want the protection that some close alliance which might be made with the United States could give. So I think it is unfair to construe most of these statements as statements by the Governor General or others that they should have independence. I think when you come to look at that you will see that a lot of them do not mean independence.

Mr. President, I think that fairly sums up a proper judgment of the statements that have been made in regard to giving the Filipinos independence by the various officials who have discussed it.

It represents the situation down to the time when the present Governor General of the Philippine Islands landed upon Philippine territory. When Mr. Francis Burton Harrison landed at Manila he made a statement to the Filipino people which, I think, is one of the most remarkable statements that has ever been made by any official of the American Government. I do not know how it will appeal to other people, but for myself I scarcely know how to find language strong enough to condemn it. Mr. Harrison landed there to represent and enforce the sovereignty of the United States in the Philippine Islands. Whatever opinion he or anybody else may have had as to the propriety of the United States being in the Philippines or as to the propriety of their remaining there, he himself was the one man who should, it seems to me, have acted in a way to best uphold the power of the United States and maintain respect for that power. I want to read from his inaugural address as it is printed in the appendix of the hearings before the Philippine Committee and which was delivered on the Luneta on his arrival in the Philippine Islands, as soon as he set foot in the Philippines. That address began as follows:

Citizens of the Philippine Islands:

The President of the United States has charged me to deliver to you the following message on behalf of the Government of our country:

"We regard ourselves as trustees acting not for the advantage of the United States but for the benefit of the people of the Philippine Islands.

"Every step we take will be taken with a view to the ultimate independence of the islands and as a preparation for that independence.

I am aware, Mr. President, that the Governor General, in making this statement, says that he was charged to deliver it by the President of the United States; but he says that it was delivered on behalf of the Government of the United States. Mr. Francis Burton Harrison has been a member of the Government of the United States in the capacity of a Representative in Congress, and he well knows that neither he nor the President has authority to deliver a message to the Philippine people on behalf of the Government of the United States that changes the policy of that Government unless it has been authorized by the Congress of the United States. It seems to me that the making of such a statement to those people, in the state of mind in which they were and are in regard to independence, was unwise and most improper. It is entirely different from any statement on this subject that has ever been made before by any official representative of the United States, so far as I know, and is in itself undeniably a direct promise to the people of those islands that independence for them would be the ultimate result of the American occupation. It is prefaced with a statement that implies it was authoritatively approved by a competent part of the United States Government. Inasmuch as Congress had given no such av'thority, I think the implication is incorrect and the statement, to say the least, most unfortunate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LIPPITT. Yes; I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator if there is any difference between that statement, except as to the extent of it, and the statement which Gov. Gen. Taft made when he announced the doctrine of "the Philippines for the Filipinos" as the policy of the American administration? The Senator might as well say that Mr. Taft had no right to do that; he might as well say the same thing concerning the statement made by Gov. Gen. Smith when he said that it had always been the policy of President McKinley, of President Roosevelt, of Gov. Gen. Taft, and of Gov. Gen. Wright to administer the Philippines for the Filipinos and to extend to them the doctrine of popular self-government. It may be that in degree it is different; but, so far as announcing a policy of government is concerned, was it not a natural thing for him to do, and has it not been done by every Governor General, although perhaps in a more limited form than as stated by Mr. Francis Burton Harrison?

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, the announcement that those gentlemen made was the announcement that was authorized by Congress. Congress itself has said in the organic law that the purpose of our going there was for the benefit of the Filipino people. It has never said anything about independence. Nobody denies that the plan of the American Government in the Philippines has been for the elevation of the Filipino people. That was announced by President McKinley when the islands were under a military government, and when, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, he had the responsibility of making a statement as to what the policy of this Government should be. That policy could have been changed by the Congress of the United States when they took the matter up and passed what is known as the organic law for the government of those islands. The Congress of the United States, however, ratified, approved, and enacted into law the policy and the declarations in regard to the Philippines enunciated by Mr. McKinley, and when the other Governors General announced that policy they were simply maintaining a policy that was authorized by Congress.

A new Governor General, however, goes to the islands, undertakes to change the policy, and announces that it is done on behalf of the Government of the United States. Mr. President, I think there is a material difference in those two positions, and I think that under all the circumstances the last action was most unwise. It certainly could not have had any other effect than to reduce the respect that the Philippine people entertained for the authority of the Government which Mr. Harrison was there to represent.

Mr. President, there is another phase of this subject to which I should now like to call attention, and that is in regard to the extent of the desire for independence among the Philippine people. It is represented that that desire is almost unanimous; that requests for it have been made by unanimous votes of the Philippine Legislature; and that all the official public utterances and those that are semiofficial seem to indicate a practically unanimous desire for independence; but the testimony given by various witnesses before the committee is of such a character that I think some attention should be called to it. Mr. Dean Worcester, who is perhaps as well informed as any American on the feeling of the Filipinos, discusses that subject on page 300 of the testimony before the Committee on the Philippines. In the course of the discussion I asked him:

What, exactly, do you mean by those statements you have been making? You have used some rather roundabout expressions—that these people would not express themselves if they were opposed to independence, that they would fear something. Exactly what would they fear?

Mr. WORCESTER. They fear that if independence were to come about vengeance would be taken on them.

Senator LIPPITT. When you say "vengeance" what do you mean? Would they be deprived of office or murdered or what?

Mr. WORCESTER. In the old days the adherents of such views were frequently murdered. They fear that the same thing might happen in the future.

Senator LIPPITT. Do you mean to say that that sort of feeling is so general in the Philippines that people who are really opposed to independence are afraid to express themselves openly?

Mr. WORCESTER. It is generally true that people opposed to independence are afraid to express themselves openly. If you speak Spanish and can talk directly with them, they will tell you what they think if you have their confidence.

Senator LIPPITT. What will it be that they say?

Mr. WORCESTER. They will say they think the country is not ready for independence and that it would be a calamity under existing conditions. At the same time they will ask you not to quote them.

Later on I asked him this question:

I am told that it is a very common thing in the Philippines at banquets, etc., for men to get up and speak in favor of independence and then to come privately to Americans and say they are not in favor of it, but they felt they had to speak that way in order to appear in that light in case independence should be granted. Have you yourself had any such instances as that?

Mr. WORCESTER. I have, sir. Would you like a specific case?

Senator LIPPITT. I would be very glad to have a specific case, or several of them.

Mr. WORCESTER. At the time Secretary Dickinson was in the Philippines a political banquet was held in his honor, just before his departure, at which there were a number of speeches. I sat by Dr. Tavera, who at that time expressed himself quite radically when on his feet as in favor of early independence. When he took his seat, I said to him, "Doctor, what would you do if you got it?" He said "Calle te," which means "be still"; and comes pretty near meaning "shut up." I knew him pretty well. "I would take the first boat for Hongkong."

At another point in his testimony, Mr. Worcester said:

You have been assured, I note, by reading the testimony, of a practical unanimity in the demand for independence in the Philippine Islands. I wish to assure you that there is no such unanimity; that what many of the people have in mind when they say they wish for independence is not independence at all. The truth is that from the outset the thing that the politicians have desired is the privilege of working their will on the common people, with the Navy of the United States lying in the offing to prevent interference from the outside, and that they call independence. Such a condition is, to me, unthinkable.

Mr. Worcester is only one of many witnesses who have testified along this same line. Mr. Gilbert, whose testimony I have already quoted on other points, gives very much the same testimony.

Mr. Gilbert says:

I want to take the opportunity to say, if I may, that the desire for independence is far from universal among the Filipino people—very far. I think I know something about that. I have been intimately associated with the Filipino people; I talk Spanish, not so well, but well enough to understand them, and recently there has a very curious thing arisen. Formerly all the Filipinos of property—well, not all, but a large number of them—were against independence. Recently there has been added to them another faction—a new party organized out there. They have organized a Democratic Party there in the last two or three months. They are not so sure they want this bill—

And so on.

Another citizen of the Philippines who has testified along this same line is Mr. Egan. He was asked if he knew of people who were opposed to independence, and it was stated to him that witnesses had testified before the committee to the effect that many Filipinos were afraid to say that they were opposed to independence for the islands. He was asked:

Have you met any instances of that kind?

He says:

I have; yes, sir.

He was then asked if there were many such cases. He said:

Oh, I could not say very many. You must understand that there could be no very definite expression on the negative of that proposition from any Filipino, with the United States absolutely refraining from saying what it was going to do. And so, in public, one would hear little or nothing about it.

Senator LIPPITT. Nothing about what?

Mr. EGAN. The negative of the independence question. No Filipino would take it.

Senator LIPPITT. Why would no Filipino take it?

Mr. EGAN. Well, the popular thing has been the other way. As it has always been a remote possibility, I imagine those gentlemen thought it would be a very unfortunate position to occupy.

Mr. Putnam, who has been for a long time a resident of the Philippine Islands, who went there in 1899, and who has been connected with the newspapers of the islands for a large portion of the time since, was asked whether he knew of men who were opposed to independence for the Philippines, and it was stated to him that Mr. Martin, now Vice Gov. Martin, had testified that he had never met business men in the Philippines who were opposed to independence, although I will say that Mr. Martin subsequently changed that testimony. Mr. Putnam says:

He said he had never met any business men who were opposed to Philippine independence? I have not had the same experience; that is all I can say.

Senator LIPPITT. You say nearly all the business men and a large number of the Filipinos are opposed to it?

Mr. PUTNAM. Yes; I know that to be the case; I am quite sure of it.

Mr. Taft has given testimony along this same line. He was asked why the Filipino people were afraid to say that they were opposed to independence. He replied:

Why, because at various intervals in the 14 years since we have been there they believed they were to have independence right away. Well, if so, they knew as well as I do that if they appeared to be active in resisting the coming independence not only would their property certainly be in danger, but their lives also would be in danger. That is the reason.

Mr. Dickinson, at the time of his visit to the islands, in the report which he made in regard to this question, says:

While, as stated, these are the only views publicly expressed—

That is, in favor of independence—

I became convinced from reliable evidence that many of the most substantial men, while not openly opposing the demands publicly voiced, would regard such a consummation with consternation. They realize that the government would fall into the hands of a few, who would dominate the masses; that the administration, even without outside interference, could not be successfully carried on; that there would be internal dissensions and probably civil war, and that if the United States did not interfere they would fall an easy prey to some foreign power.

Mr. Dickinson's testimony is that many of the people would regard such a consummation as independence with consternation.

Mr. President, I have gathered together in this way a few of the expressions of witnesses before the committee, not entirely because they say that there are Filipinos opposed to independence, but for the reasons they give for those expressions of opposition to independence not being made public; the fact of the fear that there is in the minds of these people that in case independence is granted they would be made to suffer for their expressions of opinion; that their property would be in danger, and even their lives. That condition reflects somewhat upon this whole question of whether or not the Filipino people have now arrived at a point of development where it would be safe to grant independence to them.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHELAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LIPPITT. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator has evidently given a good deal of thought and study to this very important question, and I want to ask him if he can tell me what amount of American capital is now invested in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. LIPPITT. The amount of it?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes.

Mr. LIPPITT. I have not it in my mind, Mr. President, but the amount of American capital is not nearly as large as it ought to be.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I understand; that is a mere matter of opinion; but is the Senator informed as to the character of the investments there held by Americans?

Mr. LIPPITT. There are Americans who are in general commercial business there. The largest individual undertaking is a sugar plantation which came about as a result of the purchase of some of the friar lands from the American Government.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Are there considerable railroad investments?

Mr. LIPPITT. There are railroad investments in the city of Manila, and railroad investments in other parts of the islands, more or less in the hands of Americans.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Have not the Americans acquired a considerable property in timberlands?

Mr. LIPPITT. I think not, though it is possible.

Mr. VARDAMAN. There is something like $100,000,000, I think, invested by Americans there, is there not?

Mr. LIPPITT. I have not the figures in mind, but it is quite possible. I should like to say to the Senator from Mississippi that the representative of the largest American investment, so far as I know, that there is in the islands is in favor of this bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That convinces me, Mr. President, that—While the lamp holds out to burn

The vilest sinner may—

Get right.

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not know exactly what the Senator has in mind by calling an American who invests his money in the Philippine Islands one of the "vilest sinners." I had rather supposed that an American who went there to help build up those islands might be regarded by his fellow countrymen in some entirely different light.

Now, Mr. President, by way of going on to present to the Senate some information from the testimony at the hearings that may be useful in considering the bill that is before it, I desire to put into the RECORD a few statements that have been made in regard to the participation of the people of the islands in the government. Testimony on that point has been given by quite a large number of witnesses. I will select only a few of them.

In the first place, I will quote what ex-President Taft has to say upon that subject. He says:

I need not dwell upon the actual condition—

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the Senator give the page from which he is reading, please?

Mr. LIPPITT. Page 402 (reading):

I need not dwell upon the actual condition of the people. I need not say in a company that knows the fact to be as well as I do that nine-tenths of the people of the Philippine Islands are to-day utterly incapable of exercising intelligently self-government and that any government which would be established to-day by the Filipinos themselves must be a government of the few, a government of the wealthy, and a government of the local caciques with which the country is infested from one end to the other.

Mr. Dickinson, on page 7 of his report, says again, in 1910:

The masses of them have no knowledge or conception of self-government, take no real interest in and have no knowledge of general administration, and are under the control of leaders whose will is practically their law. Caciquism, i. e., local "bossism," is just as potential now as ever.

That was the condition as he found it in 1910.

Vice Gov. Martin, who certainly is an impartial witness from the Democratic standpoint, in his testimony on page 126, says:

I wanted to add this to my answer to you, Senator, that you must never forget that the great body of the people in the Philippines, and the whole Orient, are peasants, who practically take no part, and whose fathers took no part, in the government, and who do not want to take an active part in public affairs. When you come to consider the number of people who are educated and who are not educated, if you have in mind America, where the organization of society is entirely different, there is a danger, I think, that you would be misled, that you would reach a wrong conclusion. That is true in China and throughout the Orient.

Senator LIPPITT. There is a large proportion of the people who do not have any interest, that want to be ruled? They want somebody else to decide government questions for them?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes.

Secretary Ferguson, on page 197 of his testimony in regard to this same question of the participation of the people in the government, says:

There is a great number of ignorant people who are not well informed as to the bill.

Senator WALSH. You mean they do not think about the matter one way or the other?

Mr. FERGUSON. That is my impression.

Mr. Dean Worcester, on a page of the record that I have not before me at this time, says of the Filipino people that a very small proportion of them are interested in public matters at all; that the great bulk of them are peasants; that a large number of them, of course, live in the mountains, both in Luzon and in Mindanao, and that the interest which they take in public matters is very little indeed. There is a very large amount of evidence to that effect in various parts of the testimony; and I simply want to draw it to the attention of the Senate so that they can realize that knowledge of public matters, that knowledge of government methods, that an ability to decide what is good for themselves on questions of this kind is not common among those people.

The total number of voters in the islands is only between 3 and 4 per cent. Only some 250,000, I think, out of the 8,000,000 of people have ever participated actively in public matters at all. They have inherited no knowledge of self-government; and under those circumstances it is quite evident that for us to consider this bill simply from the standpoint of the views and expressions of those who are intelligent and educated and able to express themselves on this subject would not be giving all the conditions due consideration.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LIPPITT. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator if that is not due to the fact that there is a qualification prescribed under the law as it is now that nobody can vote unless he owns a certain quantity of property, or unless he can read and write the Spanish or the English language? Is not that the requirement of the present law?

Mr. LIPPITT. That is part of the requirement; yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then is not that a good reason why there would be a limited number of voters there?

Mr. LIPPITT. Oh, I am not criticizing the fact that there is a limited number of voters. I was only stating as a fact that there was a limited number of voters. I am quite in sympathy with the purpose in this bill of extending the franchise to a larger number. What I was bringing up this point for was so that in deciding upon this bill we should not allow the expressions that are given by the educated people of the islands to mislead us into believing that they represent the entire body of the people there.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But, Mr. President, if we were to have in this country a qualification that the voters should be literate upon a language foreign to us, how many voters would we have here? The requirement is not that they shall speak and write their native language, but it is that they shall speak and write the English or the Spanish language; and of necessity the number of persons who are able to do that must be very limited. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the number who were registered to vote was 248,154, and of that number 235,786 voted; and I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that there is not a State in the Union where the percentage of those who vote is so large as compared to the percentage of those who, under the law, are qualified to vote. In my State 83 per cent of the men and 80 per cent of the women vote; but such a thing as 95 per cent of the men who were registered voting, as they did in the Philippine Islands, has no parallel in the history of any State in the Union.

Mr. LIPPITT. Yes; but I do not in any way differ from the Senator on that question. I think that the interest which the Filipino people who are qualified under the law to vote have taken in the affairs of their own country is very commendable. I think it gives us great encouragement for the future. It gives us a very firm foundation for a belief that if the American policy of the last 15 years is continued for a reasonable time in those islands, we may have there a people who will be qualified to manage their affairs in accordance with what we call popular government.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LIPPITT. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Can the Senator give us his opinion as to what would be a reasonable time?

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not know that I can answer that question better than by reading what the President of the United States has to say on that subject in his Constitutional Government. Of course how long it is going to take the Filipino people to become a nation as competent for self-government as the American people are is so far in the future that I do not think myself, nor do I think it has been the opinion of those who have been associated with the administration of affairs in the Philippines, that we should expect to wait until they have arrived at such a point of perfection as that before considering what is to be the final nature of their relations with this country. All that has been contemplated, as I understand, is that they should arrive at such a point of education, of knowledge of governmental institutions, of experience by participation in governmental matters, as will give us a reasonable assurance that their own country will go on under their charge to a constantly improving future.

We took charge of these people at a time when they were absolutely ignorant, as a people, of the meaning of self-government. We have gone on through a period of years, and have accomplished, it seems to me, very remarkable results in training them up; but the fact that we have made progress does not mean that we have arrived at a successful conclusion. I think there is no man living who can say at this moment how many years it will take to make the Filipino people competent to administer their own affairs. But the foundation of self-government has never been better expressed than it is by President Wilson, and his expression of it is very pertinent to the condition of the Filipinos at the present time. He says:

> Self-government is not a mere form of institutions, to be had when desired, if only proper pains be taken. It is a form of character. It follows upon the long discipline which gives a people self-possession, self-mastery, * * * and these things can not be had without long discipline. * * * We can give the Filipinos constitutional government, a government which they may count upon to be just, a government based upon some clear and equitable understanding, intended for their good and not for our aggrandizement, but we must ourselves, for the present, supply that government. * * * But we can not give them self-government. Self-government is not a thing that can be "given" to any people, because it is a form of character and not a form of constitution. No people can be "given" the self-control of maturity. Only a long apprenticeship of obedience can secure them the precious possession, a thing no more to be bought than given. * * * We, of all people in the world, should know these fundamental things, and should act upon them. * * * To ignore them would be not only to fail, and fail miserably, but to fail ridiculously. Having ourselves gained self-government by a definite process which can have no substitute, let us put the people dependent upon us in the right way to gain it also.

Mr. President, I do not believe that there are any words that can be combined in the English language that would more eloquently and adequately express the belief of the American Government than it has been expressed in the acts of this body in regard to those people, nor in regard to the course which we must pursue toward them.

In taking up this question of the present condition of these people in regard to their qualifications for self-government we have always in our dealings with them referred to education as the foundation of a knowledge of the method of self-government. We have made great progress in giving the Filipino people the implements of education. I have already spoken of the fact that we have built, or that they have built under our instruction, a very large number of schools; that a large number of American teachers have been sent to the islands to show them the methods of instruction and to prepare Filipinos themselves to be capable of instructing their people. But while we have made progress in this direction, the Filipino people are to-day a long, long ways from being in a position to be what in the common acceptation of the term would be called an educated people.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. LIPPITT. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have wanted for some time to ask some one who is familiar with this subject this question: Are the words "self-government" and "independent government" synonymous terms? What does the Senator from Rhode Island mean when he says self-government?

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not think that the words "self-government" and "independence" are synonymous, but when in relation to the Filipino people we talk about self-government we are meaning a capacity for self-government.

Mr. CUMMINS. What is self-government?

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator is asking me rather an abstruse question, which, as a matter of fact, he is probably better qualified to answer than I am. What I understand by self-government in one form is the government that exists in the United States. In another form I should think the government which exists in Canada would probably be called self-government.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is the government which exists in Japan self-government?

Mr. LIPPITT. I am not so thoroughly familiar with the government in Japan, but I should hardly suppose that is was self-government in the largest meaning of that term.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is the government which exists in Germany self-government?

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I do not think I will go through all the governments of the world.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am really seeking for information, because I have heard the word "self-government" used a hundred times during this debate. Sometimes it has seemed to me it was used as the equivalent of independence, but at other times it has seemed to me it was used in the sense of a Government like our own, and I wondered whether there has not been a good deal of confusion in the use of the word.

Mr. LIPPITT. I think there has not only been confusion but I think there has been in many cases a determined attempt to confuse. I think there has been almost an organized attempt to make the word "self-government" as it has been used in connection with the Filipino people mean independence.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to his colleague?

Mr. LIPPITT. I yield.

Mr. COLT. With regard to the meaning of the word "self-government" as applied to the Philippines, if we consider the organic act as well as the pending bill, I should like to ask my colleague if the word "self-government" does not mean the Anglo-Saxon system of self-government, or, more specifically, the American system of self-government as contained in the Federal Constitution of the United States, and if it is not that form of self-government which it is the settled policy of the United States to carry into effect?

Mr. LIPPITT. I think, Mr. President, that the language of my colleague very well expresses what is the aim of our Philippine policy. Whether we are ever going to be able to arrive at that point or not is, of course, another question. There is no doubt in my own mind that the purpose of Mr. Root, Mr. McKinley, Mr. Taft, and Mr. Roosevelt and the other men who have been intimately associated with the project was to bring these people up to a level of education and experience where their affairs might be safely left in their own hands.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I rise to make a suggestion rather than to ask a question. For my own information and guidance I hope that before long a Senator who favors the present preamble, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] or the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], will indicate to the Senate in what sense they used the word "self-government."

Mr. LIPPITT. I have no doubt that in due time, or perhaps at this minute, the Senator from Colorado will be very willing to give his understanding of the word.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have always felt that the expression is self-explanatory. Government by self means self-government, it seems to me. It may not necessarily be a republic. If the people of a country want a monarchy, that is self-government so far as their desires are concerned. It is an expression, it seems to me, as to what government the people desire. We know what local self-government means very easily, which is often referred to, and sometimes with a modification. Canada, for instance, is a self-governing colony, but the word "colony" modifies the very thing that you refer to. A popular self-government unquestionably would mean a government by the people.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, may I ask, when the Senator from Colorado uses the term he means any government established by the people of those islands——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I think so.

Mr. CUMMINS. And not imposed upon them by some exterior or superior force. I simply want to get my mind clear on the matter.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator from Rhode Island will pardon an interruption, he has just stated his understanding of the attitude of the ex-Presidents and ex-Secretaries of War, that we should lead these people along until their affairs could be left with themselves.

Mr. LIPPITT. Safely left.

Mr. CLAPP. I will put in the word "safely." What I am interested in is the word "affairs." Does the Senator mean that only such affairs as in the final end he would think it was wise to leave to them, or what affairs did those men have in mind that could be safely left to the Filipino people?

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, that is a question which those gentlemen never determined. It was a long ways in the future or a considerable way in the future at the best. The intermediate steps that must lead up to any result that was going to be finally arrived at were so many and so perfectly definite in their nature that their attention was given for the time being to those intermediate steps. This Government has never, as I understand the situation, either expressed or implied what their final relations with the Philippine Islands are going to be. They have expressed what their present relations were to be, and that was that they were going to use every effort within reason to conduct the Philippine affairs in such a way as would be for the benefit of the Philippine people. I think that is perfectly plain.

Now, Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. LIPPITT. Just a minute. When a nation starts on that program, when they set their feet in that path, it is not necessary for them to decide what the ultimate goal is going to be. They started on that path for perfectly well-understood reasons. It was the necessity that they should do something or take some definite steps. As I have before said, they might have established a commercial colony; they might have turned the people adrift to take what chances would come to them. What they did do, and what they are doing, is, I think, a very creditable thing to the American Government, a thing unparalleled in the history of the relations between great powers and smaller ones. They are doing their best to raise up these people.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, yes; but, Mr. President, without intending to be captious, and certainly not intending any criticism of the Senator's argument, it seems to me the statement the Senator made a moment ago is in line with those statements which have been made in the past, and which the distinguished senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has referred to as leading to confusion in this discussion. The Senator from Rhode Island a moment ago said——

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator will allow me, I quite agree with him that they lead to confusion. They have led to confusion in this discussion, and one of the chief points of my own remarks has been to try to clear up that confusion.

Mr. CLAPP. I am showing that it is adding to the confusion, I think. A few moments ago the Senator from Rhode Island stated as his view that the attitude of ex-Secretary Root, ex-Secretary Taft, and ex-President Roosevelt had been to lead these people along until they might finally reach a state where we could turn their affairs over to them.

I submit that the suggestion of turning the affairs of the people over to them without any qualifying clause would mean all their affairs, and that has been the trouble in all this discussion in the past. It is the trouble to-day in the discussion. I think we have about reached a point where we ought to deal plainly with this question. To say that it was the intention of these men to so leave the Filipinos that some day it would be safe—I do not care how much you emphasize the word safe—to turn their affairs over to them without any qualification as to the extent of the affairs to be turned over, would mean all their affairs of course, just as a declaration that when a boy reaches twenty-one his property shall be turned over to him, means all his property.

I am not saying this in criticism of the Senator but as showing the confusion which has come in this matter, and I submit any one reading the Senator's speech without this interruption would reach the conclusion that if he correctly reflected the views of those men it was their intention at some time, when it might be safe, they being the judges always, of course, to turn over their affairs, which would mean, of course, all their affairs.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I can scarcely think that any one would arrive at that conclusion from reading my speech; at least, I hope not.

Mr. CLAPP. I mean that expression, of course.

Mr. LIPPITT. Naturally any one must get his views from a consideration of all that I have said, and I have already quoted the opinion and statements of these men saying that when that time arrives—I am not quoting their exact language—then this Government and the Filipino people would take up together this question of their future relations and decide it according to their mutual agreement.

Mr. CLAPP. That is quite a different suggestion from saying when the time arrives we shall turn over their affairs to them.

Mr. LIPPITT. I think what confusion there is in the Senator's mind is this: What has been said was that we are going to try to qualify these people to take charge of their affairs. It does not necessarily follow that if the people are qualified to take charge of their affairs they will have the opportunity. I myself believe that in a reasonable time, if the Filipino people still want it, and I do not believe they will, but if they should want it at a time when they are qualified to take charge of their own affairs, the probabilities are that this Government would be very glad to turn the government of the islands over to them entirely and absolutely and withdraw from the islands. So far as I am personally concerned, if I felt that we could withdraw from those islands honorably and with safety to the Philippine people to-day, I should not at all be opposed to the American Government withdrawing. I can see no great benefit to the American Nation from maintaining their interest in those islands, but I do see that they have undertaken a definite task, and until that task is reasonably completed it would be a national disgrace for them to abandon it.

Mr. COLT. Will my colleague allow me?

Mr. LIPPITT. Certainly.

Mr. COLT. The question asked by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] seems to me a very pertinent one, because I have been in a good deal of doubt as to what was the meaning of the term self-government so frequently used in this discussion. But upon reflection, however, I have reached a conclusion on the subject, and I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], whether I am correct. It seems to me from the two documents which I hold in my hand, the organic act and the present bill, that it was the policy of the United States to establish in the Philippines the American system of government, and that the term self-government is used in this sense. The American system of government is the government which has prevailed in the Philippines from the passage of the organic act. That government consists in dividing the government into its three parts—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial—and in a bill of rights securing to the individual the right to life, liberty, and property, and the great body of what are known as personal rights. That, I understand, is the American scheme of government. That, I understand, is the government we are teaching the Filipinos, and the government which now prevails in those islands.

The pending bill is a complete framework of self-government. At the present time the people of those islands take a certain part in that government. This bill proposes to give them a larger share, and as time goes on it is our purpose to give them a still larger share, until we give them the whole government. When that time arrives they will have an executive, a legislative, and a judicial branch of government, together with a full bill of rights, which is the soul of Anglo-Saxon liberty. Hence it follows that they will have in the end the American system of government. It has been the policy of the United States from the beginning to teach the people of those islands that system of government, and when we find them capable of administering that system, and not till then, will they be fit for self-government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I do not see that I have much to disagree from the opinion of the junior Senator from Rhode Island. I feel that the government which we are trying to establish in the Philippine Islands is a government fashioned after our own. It would be a great disappointment to us if they should adopt a monarchy. There is no doubt that it was not the intention that they should frame a monarchy, but the question which the Senator from Iowa asked me was, What is self-government? Back of all of it is the will of the people. That is the thing to determine it and not the exact form of government. We hope that they will establish a government like unto ours, as near as possible. But it seems to me if "self-government" is to be the word applied, you must recognize that they will be entitled to adopt any form of government which the people of that country ratify and approve.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator from Rhode Island permit me to make an inquiry of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LIPPITT. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. Did I understand correctly that the qualified number of voters under the pending bill would be in the neighborhood of 250,000?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. How many?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The number of qualified voters under the law as it is now, as indicated by the registration there, is 248,000. Of that number 235,000 voted. This bill proposes to extend the franchise to those who can read and write any language, their own language, and it is estimated that between 700,000 and 950,000 will be the number who will vote under the new qualification.

Mr. SHERMAN. May I inquire further what is the total population of the islands?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Between 7,000,000 and 8,000,000—nearly 8,000,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then may the conclusion properly be drawn that self-government under the pending bill, applied to the islands, would be a government of, say, 8,000,000 by approximately 800,000 or 900,000?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Of course 800,000 or 900,000 would be those qualified under our own requirement. We are making the requirement, not they. That 700,000 to 900,000 will determine what the form of government shall be.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. LIPPITT. I will yield to the Senator from Minnesota, and then if the Senators will allow me I will go ahead for a few minutes and put in some of the facts I should like to submit. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I think the question is not so much what we understand by self-government but what is the understanding of the Filipinos—that is, the political agitators who are agitating in favor of self-government. It means that they want the United States divested of all power and authority in that country. They want the government wholly their own, with the single exception that they want us still to protect them against foreign invasion. That is what they mean by self-government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. LIPPITT. I think that is what some of them mean by independence.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to say just a word to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LIPPITT. I yield for a single word.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is a statement here, made by Commissioner QUEZON. I can not find it right now. I will call attention to it later.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, a few minutes ago I started to refer briefly to the question of education in the Philippine Islands. Of course the fundamental instrument, or the instrument which we have relied upon chiefly for the development of the Filipino, has been education. As I have said, we have made considerable progress there, but progress in its very nature implies that we have not yet arrived at the terminus of our journey, and we are certainly a long ways from having arrived at it in connection with Filipino education. I came across a sentence in the report of the Governor General for 1914, in which he says:

> The secretary of public instruction calls attention to the fact that there are approximately 1,200,000 children of school age in the Philippines, while the total enrollment for the present year will approximate 630,000. As explained by him, however, this should not be taken to indicate that half the children in the islands are being neglected.

I therefore turned to the report of the secretary of education to see just what were the facts in regard to that matter. I find it on page 281 of the report of the Philippine Commission. I will not read it, but its purport is that there are 1,200,000 children of school age in the islands; that the annual enrollment was 621,000 in the year 1914; that they hope it will be 630,000 this year. And he says:

> At first thought it would appear that fully one-half of the children of the Philippine Islands are being totally neglected. This, however, is not the case, for under present conditions a considerable proportion of boys and girls do not pursue their studies beyond the age of 10 or 11 years.

In other words, that on the subject of education the point at which we have now arrived in the Philippine Islands is that there is accommodation for something under one-half of the children who ought to be educated, and that rather more than those are being given some education, because a large part of the children of the islands leave school by the time they are 10 or 11 years old.

I simply want to put that fact in the RECORD as an indication of how much more there is yet to be accomplished in those islands. Until we went there there was practically no education for the masses. I have seen somewhere a statement that the total number of children who received any education under the old Spanish régime did not exceed 150,000. There are 8,000,000 people in the islands, and it is manifest that if 15 years ago and for years prior to that time this very small number of children were being educated and that since the American occupation, though we have gone on until 50 per cent of them are being educated, that the condition must be that the great bulk of those Filipino people are illiterate; that they must be in a condition in which they are not able to obtain from books and from magazines and newspapers the information that is necessary for the conduct of a government.

We have had some very interesting testimony in regard to one part of the people of the islands, from which I want to read just a small amount to show what the Filipino people at their worst are on the question of civilization. At the best the Filipino people are civilized—well civilized. I mean the people of the higher ranks—the merchants of Manila, the people who represent the government of the Philippines here and in other places. This small portion of them are intelligent, well-educated, experienced people, and from those there is a gradual going down from the best quality until we get to the people who are known as the wild people, the Moros, the inhabitants of the mountains in Luzon, the inhabitants of a large part of Mindanao and the southern islands of the Philippines, amounting in all to about one-eighth of the entire population. About 1,000,000, as it has been estimated, of the Philippine population are these so-called wild people and Moros, most of whom are Mohammedans.

Col. Young, an officer of the Government, who has been in the Philippines for several years, testified before the committee. He came with no political views to advance, with no theories in regard to the future of the Filipino people, with nothing to conceal, but at the request of the committee, and as a result of a great many questions, some very interesting information was put into the record as to what actually went on in certain parts of the Philippine Islands. The colonel himself, as an officer of the United States Army, had direct control of a large section of those people. I will read first from his testimony in regard to the way justice has been administered among the Moros. Col. Young was being questioned about head-hunting, and I asked him:

> Senator LIPPITT. I thought the head-hunting was confined to the hill tribes in Luzon.
> Col. YOUNG. If you had a bad man and you were looking for him, you would get a head-hunter and let him go and get him for you.
>
> Senator CRAWFORD. He will get his head for you?
> Col. YOUNG. Well, I had a bad man to get. I had to have him. I had been chasing him a long time. They sent me a couple of men whom they said could get him, but it would take a little time. After a time they came back and said that they had him. The leader came in and said he would bring him in. When he brought him in I told him to put the body in a shed that I had off my office, so as not to attract any more attention than necessary. When I came to look at it I could not find the body. The hunter said he had him in a sack. I went and got the sack and turned it upside down, and two heads rolled out. I asked him why he did that. He said it was too heavy to carry, and that was the easiest way to get him.

Senator LIPPITT. What year was this?

Col. YOUNG. Two years and a half ago.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. You said they brought in two heads. Were they a little in doubt as to who was the right man?

Col. YOUNG. Well, this man had a partner with him. They were not sure which was the right man, so they took them both. They brought in one more for good measure.

That is an example of the way justice was administered two and a half years ago among 400,000 of the Filipino people.

The way in which divorce was administered is quite interesting.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LIPPITT. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the Senator from Rhode Island think that what he has read shows much against the Moros, when they were acting under directions of an officer? Is the mere fact that the man was killed and his head severed from his body any indication of very much barbarity on the part of the actual perpetrators, except as to the cutting off of the head, when he was acting under instructions?

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to ask the Senator what he thinks of a community in which it is possible to ask for a couple of men to go out and kill another man, and they go, as a matter of course, and, for good measure, bring in two heads——

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is——

Mr. LIPPITT. Wait a moment—and no particular notice is taken of that by any other members of the community, but it is taken as a matter of course? Col. Young was in military authority; he could not have sent his own soldiers out, though he did on other occasions, as described in his own testimony, send his own soldiers out. But what I am reading this testimony for is not as a reflection on the kind of military administration Col. Young was giving there so much as an indication of the point of political education, if you will, at which that community had arrived.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Rhode Island does not desire to convey to the Senate any false or inaccurate impression, and he will readily admit that this bill does not propose to give self-government to the Moros or the non-Christian tribes, and that he is now only referring to non-Christian tribes. This bill provides that those tribes shall be represented in the Philippine Legislature by two senators and nine representatives appointed by the Governor General. They have no share at present, and they will have no share in the immediate future, in that government; they are recognized as savages, and they are to be kept under guardianship, just as the Indians were in this country. Certainly the Senator from Rhode Island does not intend to convey the impression that what he is reading is a sample of the people in the Philippine Islands to whom self-government is to be given by this bill.

Mr. LIPPITT. Not at all, Mr. President; but what I am really discussing is the question of giving independence to the Philippine Islands, as proposed in the preamble of the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The head hunters are not involved in that.

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to say that if independence is given to the Filipino people the Moro people will be very much involved in it. They are to-day under the protection of the American Government.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Rhode Island is aware that the military forces have been withdrawn from that country?

Mr. LIPPITT. I am aware that the military forces have been withdrawn, but I am also aware that the Philippine Scouts are there to maintain order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; they are there now. At the present time the laws are being absolutely administered by the Filipinos in that Moro country.

Mr. LIPPITT. Oh, Mr. President, the law is being administered by Mr. Carpenter. I do not know what his exact position is, but he is the governor of a Province and is an American. It is under his supervision. He may employ, and doubtless does employ, some Filipino assistants.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But order is being maintained by Philippine Scouts, and, according to the latest testimony from the islands, there is good order there. The testimony also is from that part of the islands that, although the military had been withdrawn and had been withdrawn for a long time, the order that is maintained there now is perfect.

Mr. LIPPITT. Certainly, the Philippine Scouts maintain order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Philippine Scouts are a great organization and have been carefully trained by the United States troops.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the point I desire to make clear now is that the instance the Senator was reading, which had occurred two and a half years ago, for which an American officer was responsible, was an incident that could not now occur. It occurred among a people to whom it is not intended by this bill to give any degree of self-government.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I understand that by this bill it is not intended to give those people any particular degree of self-government; but what I am talking about is the question of granting independence to the Philippine people. I do not object to many of the provisions of the bill; but what I was trying to do was to give some of the Senators here an idea of the different strata of society in the Philippine Islands and where the Senator says the conditions of those people is not of particular interest to us. I will read to him again——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did not wish it to be understood that that was the present condition.

Mr. LIPPITT. I will read from Mr. McKinley's utterances in regard to our own policies. He says that we are the trustees and guardians of the whole Filipino people and peculiarly of the ignorant masses, and that our trust is not discharged until those masses are given education sufficient to know their civil rights and maintain them.

I submit that the society that is illustrated by this instance has not yet arrived at the point where they know their civil rights and are able to maintain them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly not; but the point I desire to make is that it would be just as unfair to judge the Filipino people by the instance to which the Senator refers in the Moro country as it would be to judge the people of the United States by referring to the condition of society prevailing among the Apaches—just exactly.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I distinctly stated before I read the testimony of Gen. Young that I was simply putting into the RECORD a picture of the Philippine Islands at their worst. A nation, of course, consists of all its parts. There are a very small number of Apaches as compared with the population of the United States, but there are about 1,000,000 or one-eighth of the Filipino people of this character, or more or less of this character, in the islands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, I will change the illustration. I will say that it would be just as fair to judge the condition of American society in the United States by the condition of society in some of the benighted regions of the South, where——

Mr. LIPPITT. To which State does the Senator refer?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Where the negro population is still suffering from the conditions which prevailed in the days of slavery——

Mr. LIPPITT. What State?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator will permit me to finish. I say it would be just as fair to judge the condition of society in the United States by the condition of society among the negroes of the South after the Civil War, as it would be to judge conditions in the Philippine Islands by the condition of society among the Moro tribes. I think the Senator does not desire to convey any such inaccurate impression as that, and yet that is the direct conclusion from what he says.

Mr. LIPPITT. Oh, no, Mr. President; I did not intend to imply that inference at all. I have already stated that what I was trying to do was to give an idea of certain grades among the Filipino people, and I think that what I have said about it must make my intention perfectly clear.

It is also interesting to read Col. Young's statement in regard to another important function of civilization, and that is marriage. He has told us how justice was administered in the Philippines in certain cases. I read from the testimony:

Senator LIPPITT. You spoke a while ago of the fights between the Moros and Filipinos; that the Moros would carry off the women and children occasionally.

Col. YOUNG. I did not mean to say that they carried off the Filipino women and children, but a Moro, for instance, will, as they say, fall in love with a Moro girl, some dato's daughter, a beautiful girl. He has not got the necessary recommendations and qualifications for marriage. He must show what he has got. He must own some carabao or he must have killed somebody. He must do something to show that he can get this girl. If he does not do that he thinks he must get the girl anyhow, and he will run off to somebody else's barrio. There we have to go to get him. I have to bring them into my office and divorce them, send the girl back and send the man back to his place. I used to do that almost every day.

Senator CAMDEN. What is their marriage ceremony? Do they have a real ceremony?

Col. YOUNG. Not exactly; nothing special. It is an arrangement between the parents. For instance, they may be children 12 years old, a boy and a girl of parents who are well to do. The parents will decide that these two children must marry, and they will just keep them under what we would term in this country a governess, or something of that kind, until they grow up to be 15 or 16 years old. I have seen plenty of them married at 15 years.

The CHAIRMAN. Reno, Nev., as a divorce colony was not in it as compared to your office?

Col. YOUNG. Not much. There was not much formality about it.

Senator LIPPITT. You say these were people you were in the habit of divorcing every day. Were people in the habit of getting promiscuously married every day and you had to divorce them every day?

Col. YOUNG. Provided the parents objected. They did not always object. If a man came to me and said that another man had come into his place and taken his daughter and ran away with her, and that he wanted him punished for it and wanted his daughter sent home, I would send out and bring them in. Oftentimes they would not want to come.

Senator LIPPITT. Then, the grounds for divorce in the Philippine Islands is that the parents do not like it?

Col. YOUNG. That is about it. It is just purely a matter of consent.

There are several instances of that kind in Col. Young's testimony. He describes a case in which he had to go for some outlaws with a troop of American soldiers and the fight that took place. All this testimony that I have put into the RECORD I have put in merely to show the character of the lower grades of the Filipino people.

Mr. President, I have in the remarks which I made yesterday and to-day tried to show, in the first place, that Congress in dealing with this subject was not bound by any promise to give the Filipino people their independence, although that claim had been made and was being made by representatives of the Filipino people and by Americans connected with the government. I then endeavored to show something of the condition which exists among the Filipino people in regard to their opinion about independence, in regard to their participation in the government, in regard to the point at which their education has arrived, and in regard to their social condition in some parts of the islands. Owing to the fact that my remarks have been prolonged by many interruptions and that it is now nearly half past 4 o'clock, I do not wish to proceed further at this time. I intend perhaps at some future time to express some opinions, and give the reasons for them, in regard to the preamble of this bill and in regard to a few of its features, but I will now yield the floor.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the hour is so late that I will not undertake to discuss the Philippine bill this afternoon, and I would not have addressed the Chair at this time but for the discussion which was interpolated under the head of this bill on another matter earlier in the day.

Of course, it is quite difficult to speak of the episode that was described in the morning papers referring to American citizens in Mexico in terms of proper restraint. I listened to the very calm statement of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and must compliment him upon his calmness. The feature of the statement of the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee which particularly attracted my attention, however, and which, it seems to me, is deserving of some comment, was the question which he asked of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] as to what he would propose to do under the circumstances referred to. Five years ago the Senator from Missouri introduced a resolution in regard to the Mexican situation. I have enough confidence in the care and judgment of the Senator from Missouri to presume that the circumstances stated in the preamble of that resolution were true, or that the Senator from Missouri had sufficient information to believe them to be true, exercising good judgment. He stated in the preamble to that resolution, which was introduced on April 17, 1911, as follows:

> Whereas a condition of turbulence and disorder prevails throughout the Republic of Mexico; and
> Whereas as a result of such turbulence and disorder, it is reported that the lives of a large number of American citizens resident in Mexico are imperiled, and that their property is in danger of lawless appropriation by bands of irresponsible men; and
>
> Whereas in conflicts between the military forces of the Mexican Government and revolutionists near the border line between the United States and Mexico several American citizens on the American side of the boundary line have been slain as the result of Mexicans firing across the line, and other American citizens while peaceably pursuing their avocations or while in their homes have been wounded; and
> Whereas a great and important public work on the Colorado River in Lower California is being constructed by Americans, and for which work Congress has made a large appropriation, and which work is being constructed on the Mexican side by American engineers and contractors under an agreement made with the Mexican Government, is being obstructed and endangered by repeated interferences of lawless bands of Mexican revolutionists who have at different times appropriated property of the contractors engaged in the work and have so seriously delayed the work as to greatly endanger it by threatening the lives of workmen and thus disorganizing the working force; and
> Whereas numerous leading newspapers in Europe, especially in London, report that certain European Governments, many of whose subjects and citizens reside in Mexico and have large property interests there are contemplating some intervention by force in the affairs of the Mexican Republic, ostensibly for the protection of the lives and interests of their people; and
> Whereas one European power has already landed on Mexican territory an armed force of marines from one of its warships under the pretense of preventing an attack upon a Mexican town by revolutionary forces—

It struck me with a good deal of surprise to hear the same Senator who recited those circumstances as existing on April 17, 1911, and who for a considerable time past has occupied the important position in relation to our foreign affairs of chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations in this body, to imply by his question to the Senator from New Hampshire that during all of this period, with all of this responsibility, he has no idea as to what our course of conduct should be. I assume that he is in frequent conference with the President of the United States; and it seems to me if the people of the United States have their attention directed to the debate which took place here this morning, familiar, as they are, with all the occurrences which have transpired in Mexico effecting the interests of citizens of the United States and the dignity and respect due the Government of the United States since this resolution was introduced—if they have their attention directed to the fact that the Government at this time has no policy and no plan and does not know what to do, it will be a matter of considerable interest to them, and it was for the purpose of putting something in the RECORD that may aid in directing the attention of the people to this situation that I arose at this late hour.

The objection has always been made to any discussion of these questions that it might embarrass the administration. The appeal is constantly made—it was made here to-day—not to criticize the President, but to give him a free hand; do not embarrass him. Mr. President, we may restrain ourselves here, and we have restrained ourselves. I think one of the most remarkable features of the proceedings of this body during the last three years has been the absence of discussion of the Mexican situation, although I am satisfied that practically every Member of the body has deep convictions upon the great issues which are involved in those relations. We have not discussed them; we have given the President practically a free hand; we have not made a partisan issue of it; but it will be discussed by a more important body than this; it will be discussed by the people of the United States; it will be an issue in the forthcoming presidential campaign; and it seems to me that, to a small extent at least, it ought to be discussed here now.

It is altogether aside from the question, it seems to me, that those who are in positions of power and responsibility, great officers of this Government, in this crisis turn to other Senators who may raise the question and ask them what they would do. It may be difficult for a Senator who ventures to express the feelings which the impulses of the moment give rise to, to map out offhand a program for the conduct of our foreign affairs; but those who have been given charge of those foreign affairs and vested with responsibility for their conduct ought to be prepared with a program of action.

I listened with a great deal of interest, as I always do, to the remarks of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and, as has been the attitude of Senators so often in these matters, he confined himself very largely to painting a picture of the horrors of war. If we do anything, we will become involved in war; war means death and loss and destruction; nobody wants war. Does the Senator from Colorado mean to say that nothing can be done to maintain the value of American citizenship? That is what is involved; and I am very much afraid that it has been considerably depreciated not only by the conduct of this feature of our foreign relations, but by our entire foreign policy. I am inclined to think that in many quarters American citizenship is being made a byword and a reproach, rather than a protection and an honor, as it ought to be. Does the Senator from Colorado mean to say when this process is gradually going on, when further depreciation of whatever American citizenship means is brought about by the murder which is reported in this morning's papers, that we can not do anything, that there is no redress, that there is no policy which may restore us to the position which we once occupied? I do not think that is the case. I think that there are things that might be done. There have been administrations which met crises of this kind with effect, which maintained the rights of American citizens not only in Mexico but all around the world, which brought our Government out of them with increased honor and distinction, and yet left it at peace with the world.

Why, if in the past difficult crises which we have gone through the Government had taken the position that we must pursue the easy way, the "do-nothing" policy—it may be called a policy of "watchful waiting," but it is a policy of doing nothing—if that policy had been pursued in all of the difficult crises through which we have passed, the United States of America would not be what it is to-day. There would not be the value and the distinction in being a citizen of this country, which the Government now ought to be called upon to maintain and protect.

Why, Mr. President, it has not been many years ago since in the far-off country of Morocco an American citizen became involved in trouble. Some bandit, Raisuli, carried him away into captivity, into the depths of Morocco. Everybody remembers the message that was sent by the Secretary of State, under the direction of Theodore Roosevelt, the President, to the consul of the United States to deliver to Raisuli the ultimatum, "Perdicaris alive or Raisuli dead."

What was the result? I have here a prepared statement of what the result was:

In June, 1904, an American citizen, Ion H. Perdicaris, was seized by Raisuli, a Moroccan bandit, and held for ransom. After much shilly-shallying and threats by Raisuli that he would kill his prisoner unless the money were speedily paid, Hay cabled to Gummeré, American consul at Tangier, on June 22:

"We want Perdicaris alive or Raisuli dead"—

Adding that Gummeré was "not to commit us about landing marines or seizing customhouse."

In his diary Hay made the following entries:

June 23. "My telegram to Gummeré had an uncalled-for success. It is curious how a concise impropriety hits the public."

June 24. "Gummeré telegraphs that he expects Perdicaris to-night."

June 27. "Perdicaris wires his thanks."

"So speedily," comments William Roscoe Thayer in his Life of John Hay, "did even a brigand, apparently safe in the depths of Morocco, recognize the note of command in the voice from overseas."

Now, Mr. President, murder and indignity visited upon American citizens in Mexico is not such an incident as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] describes. If it were, it would present an entirely different issue. It is an indication of a condition that exists, and a condition that has existed ever since the time when this resolution described similar conditions in 1911, which the Senator himself recited in the preamble.

Of course, Mr. President, the note of command which saved the life of Perdicaris and restored him to his American citizenship could not have had the effect which it did have if it had been preceded by three years of neglect of the rights of American citizens; and I do not expect, after the course which has been pursued by this Government for three years, that we can restore it to the influence it would have had if it had been conducted in a firm and competent manner from the beginning. We can begin a different course, however; and while we can not expect, through what I am impelled to say seem to be, so far as our foreign relations are concerned, weak and incompetent hands, to accomplish, even though the policy should be reversed, what a great man in the Presidency was able to accomplish for the protection of American citizens and for peace, and peace with honor, yet we can start upon the right road, which sooner or later may restore us to the position which we ought to occupy.

Why, Mr. President, a policy of surrender is bound to be a failure. No nation, no set of men, ever arrived at success through a policy of backing out and surrendering and giving away. The President of the United States was entirely mistaken when he assumed, in a message which he delivered to Congress on the 5th of March, 1914, as he appears to have assumed from the language of that message, that by giving away and surrendering and backing down, so far as our rights in the Panama Canal were concerned, he would accomplish the object which he sought, of securing the good will and the friendship of the world. It had the opposite effect. The way to maintain the respect of the nations of the world is to maintain our self-respect. The people of those nations are people of honor and refined sensibility, and they appreciate honor and sensibility and self-respect and ability and competence in the management of the foreign affairs of a great government.

In that message the President said—this is very familiar, but I read it in order to comment briefly upon it:

We ought to reverse our action without raising the question whether we were right or wrong—

A most astonishing proposition—and so once more deserve our reputation for generosity.

Generosity in what? Not in the President's property; not in his own, in the disposition of his own interests or estate. Generosity in the great trust of the American people; generosity in dealing with the people's rights and the people's property, in foreign relations, which are about as far removed from principles of generosity as any human affairs are. And he adds in his message:

I ask this of you in support of the foreign policy of the administration.

What does that mean? It never has been explained. It can mean but one thing—that in order to carry out successfully the foreign policy which the President had mapped out for his administration, and maintain the safety of our relations with foreign countries, we must give up this great right.

In some countries, when travelers are pursued by wolves, it is said, the one who happens to stumble is abandoned to his fate, and left to be devoured, in order that the rest may escape. So it seems that one after another of the interests, rights, and privileges of American citizenship in recent years have been thrown overboard in order that we may maintain peace and safety and the respect of foreign nations, upon the assumption that peace and respect could be maintained by ignoble and unjust surrender.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHELAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I know the Senator wants to be fair; but it does seem to me that the trend of his remarks would be to impress the world with the idea that our Government is utterly supine so far as action is concerned. Now, with reference to this horrible affair of which we were first apprised only this morning, in the morning newspapers, it is hardly just to permit the impression to go out, as it would from the Senator's remarks, that no steps are being taken toward the punishment or bringing to justice of these vandals or murderers.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What! Has the administration sent another note?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have in my hand a copy of the Washington Times of to-night, and it says here plainly:

STATE DEPARTMENT TOLD AMERICANS OF MEXICAN PERIL.

The United States Government to-day served official notice on Gen. Carranza that it holds him responsible for the Chihuahua massacre, which resulted in the death of 17 persons, mostly Americans.

So it shows that it must come from some authority. Then, again, in the Evening Star it says:

Secretary Lansing to-day telegraphed Gen. Carranza, calling for the prompt punishment of the bandits who executed 15 Americans near Chihuahua Monday. Through Eliseo Arredondo, the newly appointed Mexican ambassador here, it was arranged to bring the bodies from Chihuahua to Juarez to-day on a special train.

I am sure the whole Senate and our whole country lament as much as can the Senator the unfortunate and horrible conditions that have prevailed in Mexico; but it is hardly just—it is not just; it is not fair—to endeavor to spread the imputation that the Government of the United States and those who are in power in the administration are lying supinely on their backs and allowing this thing to run on. Fifteen men, God knows, is sad enough; but 1,500 or 15,000 men would be sadder.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I decline to yield further, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not desire to trespass upon the Senator's time further; but it does seem to me that, with all his fairness, he is not just in this accusation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is no Senator whose good will and opinion I respect more than those of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, I know; I think we understand each other.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And I would not have the Senator think I was so unjust as to criticize the future conduct of the President. I have no idea what he is going to do. Furthermore, I am ready to concede that he will write a note about this matter, which the Senator has described in the article which he has quoted from the newspaper. One basis of the objection which I have, and which I venture to express as an individual, to the foreign policy of the Government has been not lack of expression, not a lack of strong words, but that there has been too much strong note writing and big talk without any action whatever.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, yes; but this country, thank God, has been saved a war.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It seems to me, Mr. President, as long as we are on the subject of notes, that if the Government has arrived at the point where it is going to write strong notes on these various international episodes it ought at least to have some definite idea at the time it writes the notes what it is going to do to live up to the language which the notes contain, and not come here in the Senate of the United States after a period of "watchful waiting" and note writing for four or five years and practically admit that it did not know what it was going to do, that it had no policy, and ask the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from New Hampshire what is to be done about the situation.

A part of the administration's perfectly supine conduct was the episode at Vera Cruz, which I have never yet heard explained by the Government or any of its advocates; and I am not discussing this matter as a party question. I do not think there is any Member of this body who is less controlled by a sense of partisanship than I am; but I am opposed to the idea that criticism of the foreign relations of the Government ought to be suppressed on the cry that "you must not make it a party matter." I think the President of the United States ought to be criticized when he is wrong, and particularly that in the Senate of the United States Senators ought to be free to express their opinion of his official conduct without being charged with making a party question of it. It is not the Democratic Party that I am talking about, because I am satisfied that the great majority of the Democratic Party agree with me on this proposition. They would not say so; they are not as free to say so as I am. I am referring to the President, the administration. If any one of its advocates can explain to me what was accomplished by the withdrawal from Vera Cruz after the killing of a large number of young Mexican midshipmen in the naval academy and the sacrifice of the lives of 17 American sailors, whose pitiful funeral was pictured in the newspapers of this country, I shall be very much obliged and very much gratified. If the wisdom of the foreign policy of this country is to be determined by that episode, it is no wonder that the common report that we are held in contempt by most of the intelligent people of the world is true.

It is proposed, among other instances of this general policy, to secure the good will and friendship of Colombia by paying her $25,000,000. That is a part of this general course of conduct. Twenty-five million dollars for building a canal which is of more benefit to Colombia, perhaps, than to us, and is of as much benefit to her as any other people in the world, and of greater benefit than anything else that ever occurred in the history of her Republic. Twenty-five million dollars for completing the construction of the canal which we bought from the French company, to whom we paid $40,000,000 for it, and in addition to that we acquired a right of way from the Republic of Panama and paid $10,000,000 for it. But it is not based upon the proposition that they have a legitimate claim against the United States for this money so much as it is based upon the plea that they will be dissatisfied and offended unless we pay it to them, and in order to maintain their good will we must take $25,000,000 coming from the taxes which are levied upon the people of this country and turn it over to Colombia.

Now, I want to cite another instance, Mr. President, as long as the question has been asked as to what could be done. This also occurred during the administration of Mr. Roosevelt. I do not mean to say that instances of this kind have not occurred in the administration of other Presidents. I remember one under the administration of Grover Cleveland, when he carried the United States through a difficult situation with Great Britain in regard to Venezuela and maintained the dignity of the country and established his own reputation for all time, without bringing us to war. But the instance to which I now refer may be of some aid to the Senator from Missouri and other Senators upon that side who are inquiring as to whether it is possible to do anything without involving the United States in war.

In 1902 one of the periodic outbreaks to which Venezuela was addicted—

And I am reading now a prepared statement, which I did not prepare, but which recites these historic facts—gave him—

That is, Mr. Hay—

an excuse for putting to the test whether or not the United States would defend the Monroe doctrine by force of arms.

The Venezuelans owed the Germans, the English, and the Italians large amounts, which they had put off paying until their creditors began to suspect that they never intended to pay at all. The Kaiser apparently counted on the resistance of the Venezuelans to furnish him a pretext for occupying one or more of their seaboard towns.

In order to disguise the fact that this was a German undertaking, he looked about for accomplices who would give to it an international semblance. It happened just at that time that Germany found herself isolated, as France and Russia had renewed their bond of friendship, England, too, always suspicious of Russia, and recently irritated by France, seemed to be looking for a friend.

By offers which can not yet be made public, Germany persuaded the Tory Government to draw closer to her. The immediate result of this adventure in international coquetry was the joint demand of Germany and England on Venezuela to pay them their due. Venezuela procrastinated.

The allies then sent warships and established what they called a "pacific blockade" on the Venezuelan ports (Dec. 8, 1901). During the following year Secretary Hay tried to persuade the blockaders of the unwisdom of their action. He persistently called their attention to the fact that a "pacific blockade" was a contradiction in terms and that its enforcement against the rights of neutral nations could not be tolerated. He also urged arbitration.

Germany deemed that her opportunity had now come, and on December 8, 1902, she and Great Britain severed diplomatic relations with Venezuela, making it plain that the next steps would be the bombardment of Venezuelan towns and the occupation of Venezuelan territory.

Here came the test of the Monroe doctrine. If the United States permitted foreign nations, under the pretense of supporting their creditors' claims, to invade a weak debtor State by naval or military expedition, and to take possession of its territory, what would become of the doctrine?

ROOSEVELT IN PERSONAL CHARGE.

At this point the direction of the American policy passed from Secretary Hay to President Roosevelt.

England and Italy were willing to come to an understanding. Germany refused. She stated that if she took possession of territory such possession would only be "temporary"; but such possessions easily become permanent; and, besides, it is difficult to trust the guaranties which may be treated as "scraps of paper."

President Roosevelt did not shirk the test. Although his action has never been officially described, there is no reason now for not describing it.

One day, when the crisis was at its height, he summoned to the White House Dr. Holleben, the German ambassador, and told him that unless Germany consented to arbitrate—

Now, I should like the Senators who are inquiring what can be done to note particularly this part, and the fact that there was not any war growing out of it; but note the result and the manner of doing it—the American squadron under Admiral Dewey would be given orders by noon 10 days later to proceed to the Venezuelan coast and prevent any taking possession of Venezuelan territory.

Dr. Holleben began to protest that his imperial master, having once refused to arbitrate, could not change his mind. The President said that he was not arguing the question, because arguments had already been gone over until no useful purpose would be served by repeating them; he was simply giving information which the ambassador might think it important to transmit to Berlin.

GERMANY NOT ALLOWED TO DODGE.

A week passed in silence. Then Dr. Holleben again called on the President, but said nothing of the Venezuelan matter. When he rose to go, the President asked him about it, and when he stated that he had received nothing from his Government, the President informed him in substance that in view of this fact Admiral Dewey would be instructed to sail a day earlier than the day he, the President, had originally mentioned.

Much perturbed, the ambassador protested; the President informed him that not a stroke of a pen had been put on paper; that if the Emperor would agree to arbitrate, he, the President, would heartily praise him for such action and would treat it as taken on German initiative; but that within 48 hours there must be an offer to arbitrate or Dewey would sail with orders indicated.

Within 36 hours Dr. Holleben returned to the White House and announced to President Roosevelt that a dispatch had just come from Berlin, saying that the Kaiser would arbitrate.

Neither Admiral Dewey (who with an American fleet was then maneuvering in the West Indies) nor anyone else knew of the step that was to be taken; the naval authorities were merely required to be in readiness, but were not told what for.

On the announcement that Germany had consented to arbitrate the President publicly complimented the Kaiser on being so staunch an advocate of arbitration.

The humor of this was probably relished more in the White House than in the palace at Berlin.

In this wise the German Kaiser learned that the Monroe doctrine was a fact.

This incident which is reported in the morning papers is nothing new, so far as its character or kind is concerned. Before I left my home to return here to attend this session of Congress I was reading in the newspapers about Mexican bandits or Mexicans of some kind not only committing outrages upon American citizens in Mexico, but coming over into the United States and taking American soldiers off of trains and shooting them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour has nearly arrived for adjournment and the Chair wishes to lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will conclude in just one moment, in view of that fact.

I wish to call attention to a statement made by the Secretary of War a short time ago, that Mr. Roosevelt is a new convert to the idea of preparedness. Of course, he has been denounced all over the country because he believes in a larger Army and Navy as wanting to plunge the country into war, although during the seven years of his administration the country was at peace and he carried her through the trying episode with Japan, sending the fleet through the Suez Canal. He brought us out with dignity and with peace, and he was awarded the Nobel peace prize for his services in negotiating peace between Russia and Japan. In view of the statement which has been made by the Secretary of War, who seems to have developed into quite an agressive debater on these various questions, particularly in regard to the Philippine question which is now before the Senate, I want to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the record of former President Roosevelt on preparedness. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COL. ROOSEVELT'S RECORD ON PREPAREDNESS—THE TRUTH OF HISTORY FOR THE INFORMATION OF SECRETARY GARRISON—AN INCESSANT AND EARNEST ADVOCATE OF PREPAREDNESS FOR MORE THAN 30 YEARS—PRESIDENT WILSON'S POLICY OUTLINED AND CONDEMNED 18 YEARS IN ADVANCE—PREPAREDNESS URGED IN EVERY MESSAGE TO CONGRESS WHILE PRESIDENT—A BIG, EFFICIENT NAVY AND AN EFFICIENT ARMY DEMANDED AS THE SUREST GUARANTY OF PEACE—THE SWISS SYSTEM OF MILITARY SERVICE HELD UP AS A MODEL TO CONGRESS IN 1906—HYPHENATED AMERICANS CONDEMNED AS UNDESIRABLE CITIZENS IN 1894—ARBITRATION TREATIES DECLARED USELESS WHEN UNBACKED BY FORCE.

In a carefully prepared statement issued recently at Washington (Dec. 21, 1915) the Secretary of War, Mr. Garrison, representing President Wilson, and speaking in the unruffled serenity of that state of bliss in which 'tis said 'tis folly to be wise, made the following engaging observations:

"Mr. Roosevelt is welcomed as a convert on the issue of preparedness, but the front pew is already filled before the conversion, and he must now rely on the strength of his voice for recognition.

"'Preparedness' was with him an acquired taste. Others brought it forward and urged it upon the attention of the people, and it was only after he found that it suited their taste that he became vocal in its behalf.'

THE PLAIN TALE OF HISTORY.

"Mark now, how plain a tale shall put you down," Mr. Secretary. Theodore Roosevelt began to advocate preparedness 33 years ago, and has advocated it unceasingly and unwaveringly from that time to the present moment. He has been during all those years at every opportunity not merely "vocal" on the subject but vociferously vocal.

While he was still a student at Harvard in 1882 he wrote in the preface to his history of the War of 1812 these passages:

CRIMINAL FOLLY OF JEFFERSON AND MADISON.

"The operations of this war on land teach nothing new; it is the old, old lesson that miserly economy in preparation may in the end involve a lavish outlay of men and money which, after all, comes too late to more than partially offset the evils produced by the original shortsighted parsimony. It was criminal folly for Jefferson and his follower, Madison, to neglect to give us a force either of Regulars or of well-trained Volunteers during the 12 years they had in which to prepare for the struggle that anyone might see was inevitable.

"The necessity for an efficient Navy is so evident that only our almost incredible shortsightedness prevents our at once preparing one."

Fifteen years later, writing a condensed history of the same war for an English publication, Col. Roosevelt reiterated his earlier views:

TWENTY SHIPS OF THE LINE WOULD HAVE PREVENTED THE WAR.

(From The War with the United States, 1812–15, written for the English History of the Royal Navy in 1897.)

"Had America possessed (in 1812) a fleet of 20 ships of the line her sailors could have plied their trade unmolested, and the three years of war with its loss in blood and money would have been avoided. From the merely monetary standpoint such a navy would have been the cheapest kind of insurance, and morally its advantages would have been incalculable, for every American worth the name would have lifted his head higher because of its existence.

JEFFERSON'S PASSION OF PEACE.

"But unfortunately the Nation lacked the wisdom to see this, and it chose and rechose for the Presidency Thomas Jefferson, who avowed that his 'passion was peace,' and whose timidity surpassed even his philanthropy."

EVIL CAUSED BY JEFFERSON AND MADISON.

"There never was a better example of the ultimate evil caused by a timid effort to secure peace and the refusal to make preparations for war than that afforded by the American people under the Presidencies of Jefferson and Madison."

These citations disclose the original inventor of President Wilson's "too-proud-to-fight" policy. Jefferson's "passion was peace." In his recent address to Congress, President Wilson said of the American people that "their passion is for peace."

Instead of being a "convert" to any phase of President Wilson's policy, 18 years before that policy was put into operation Theodore Roosevelt was outlining it with singular accuracy and denouncing it as leading to national humiliation and dishonor, as the following citations abundantly testify:

PRESIDENT WILSON'S FOREIGN POLICY DENOUNCED 18 YEARS IN ADVANCE—NO PEACE AT THE PRICE OF NATIONAL HONOR.

(Address, as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, before the Naval War College, June, 1897.)

A really great people, proud and high spirited, would face all the disasters of war rather than purchase that base prosperity which is bought at the price of national honor.

WORDS WITHOUT DEEDS CAUSE OF HUMILIATION.

Unreadiness for war is merely rendered more disastrous by readiness to bluster; to talk defiance and advocate a vigorous policy in words, while refusing to back up these words by deeds, is cause for humiliation.

No material loss can begin to compensate for the loss of national self-respect.

No nation should ever wage war wantonly, but no nation should ever avoid it at the cost of national honor.

DIPLOMACY WITHOUT FORCE USELESS.

Diplomacy is utterly useless unless there is force behind it; the diplomat is the servant, not the master, of the soldier.

SAY WHAT IS NECESSARY AND STAND BY IT.

(Speech at Chicago Apr. 2, 1903.)

This is in substance what my theory of what our foreign policy should be: Let us not boast, not insult anyone, but make up our minds coolly what is necessary to say, and then stand by it whatever the consequences may be.

A COWARD'S PEACE CONTEMPTIBLE.

(Speech at Clark University, Worcester, Mass., June 21, 1905.)

Peace of a valuable type comes not to the man who craves it because he is afraid, but to the man who demands it because it is right.

The peace granted contemptuously to the weakling and the coward is but a poor boon after it has been granted.

A GREAT NATION SHOULD NOT BLUFF.

(Address at Williams College, Williamstown, Mass., June 22, 1905.)

I demand that the Nation do its duty and accept the responsibility that must go with greatness.

I ask that the Nation dare to be great, and that in daring to be great it show that it knows how to do justice to the weak no less than to exact justice from the strong.

In order to take such a position of being a great nation the one thing that we must not do is to bluff.

The unpardonable thing is to say that we will act as a big nation and then decline to take the necessary steps to make the words good.

Keep on building and maintaining at the highest point of efficiency the United States Navy or quit trying to be a big nation. Do one or the other.

RIGHTEOUSNESS BEFORE PEACE.

(Address at Harvard University, June 28, 1905.)

Of course I am for peace. Of course every President who is fit to be President must be for peace. But I am for one thing before peace; I am for righteousness first and then peace.

(Address at Richmond, Va., Oct. 18, 1905.)

Our mission in the world should be one of peace, but not the peace of cravens, the peace granted contemptuously to those who purchase it by surrendering the right.

No! Our voice must be effective for peace because it is raised for righteousness first and for peace only as the handmaiden of righteousness.

(Annual message to Congress, Dec. 3, 1906.)

It must ever be kept in mind that war is not merely justifiable, but imperative upon honorable men, upon an honorable nation, where peace can only be obtained by the sacrifice of conscientious conviction or of national welfare.

Peace is normally a great good, and normally it coincides with righteousness; but it is righteousness and not peace which should bind the conscience of a nation, as it should bind the conscience of an individual; and neither a nation nor an individual can surrender conscience to another's keeping.

A just war is in the long run far better for a nation's soul than the most prosperous peace obtained by acquiescence in wrong or injustice.

CRIMINAL NOT TO PREPARE FOR WAR.

Moreover, though it is criminal for a nation not to prepare for war, so that it may escape the dreadful consequences of being defeated in war, yet it must always be remembered that even to be defeated in war may be far better than not to have foresight at all.

As has been well and finely said, a beaten nation is not necessarily a disgraced nation; but the nation or man is disgraced if the obligation to defend the right is shirked.

A NATION NOT AFRAID.

(Address to the graduating class of the Naval Academy, Annapolis, June 23, 1905.)

What we desire is to have it evident that this Nation seeks peace, not because it is afraid, but because it believes in the eternal laws of justice and right living.

CONSCIENCELESS WAR A CRIME AGAINST ALL HUMANITY.

(Annual message to Congress, Dec. 5, 1905.)

A wanton or useless war, or a war of mere aggression—in short, any war begun or carried on in a conscienceless spirit—is to be condemned as a peculiarly atrocious crime against all humanity.

Our aim is righteousness. Peace is normally the handmaiden of righteousness; but when peace and righteousness conflict, then a great and upright people can never for a moment hesitate to follow the path which leads toward righteousness, even though that path also leads to war.

NO CHOICE LEFT TO ROOSEVELT.

When President Wilson put into operation the precise policy thus condemned in advance, what choice had Col. Roosevelt but to denounce him? Could he, on the plea that all must "stand by the President," abandon the convictions and utterances of a lifetime and defend a policy of national dishonor?

"I would have thrown up my hat for Wilson," the colonel said recently, "if only he had given me the chance by acting in the Presidency as a sound American of rugged strength and patriotism. When he trailed the honor of the United States in the dust, I, as a good American, had no alternative but to oppose him."

So long ago as 1905, as the first quotation cited above shows, the colonel specified the kind of war that Germany is waging as a "particularly atrocious crime against all humanity," and defined the course which, in his opinion, this Nation should not for a moment hesitate to follow in regard to it.

SAMPLES OF ROOSEVELT'S METHOD.

Not in words alone but in acts does Col. Roosevelt's record show flat disagreement with the Wilson policy in international controversies. What stronger contrast could there be to President Wilson's methods in dealing with Germany than is afforded in the following incident, which is described in a recently published Life of John Hay?

GERMANY BROUGHT TO BOOK IN 1902.

(From the Life of John Hay, by William Roscoe Thayer. Vol. II, pp. 284, 285, 286.)

In 1902 one of the periodic outbreaks to which Venezuela was addicted gave him (Hay) an excuse for putting to the test whether or not the United States would defend the Monroe doctrine by force of arms. The Venezuelans owed the Germans, the English, and the Italians large amounts, which they had put off paying until their creditors began to suspect that they never intended to pay at all. The Kaiser apparently counted on the resistance of the Venezuelans to furnish him a pretext for occupying one or more of their seaboard towns.

In order to disguise the fact that this was a German undertaking, he looked about for accomplices who would give to it an international semblance. It happened just at that time that Germany found herself isolated, as France and Russia had renewed their bond of friendship, England, too, always suspicious of Russia, and recently irritated by France, seemed to be looking for a friend.

By offers which can not yet be made public, Germany persuaded the Tory government to draw closer to her. The immediate result of this adventure in international coquetry was the joint demand of Germany and England on Venezuela to pay them their due. Venezuela procrastinated.

The allies then sent warships and established what they called a "pacific blockade" on the Venezuelan ports (Dec. 8, 1901). During the following year Secretary Hay tried to persuade the blockaders of the unwisdom of their action. He persistently called their attention to the fact that a "pacific blockade" was a contradiction in terms and that its enforcement against the rights of neutral nations could not be tolerated. He also urged arbitration.

Germany deemed that her opportunity had now come, and on December 8, 1902, she and Great Britain severed diplomatic relations with Venezuela, making it plain that the next steps would be the bombardment of Venezuelan towns and the occupation of Venezuelan territory.

Here came the test of the Monroe doctrine. If the United States permitted foreign nations, under the pretense of supporting their creditors' claims, to invade a weak debtor State by naval or military expedition, and to take possession of its territory, what would become of the doctrine?

ROOSEVELT IN PERSONAL CHARGE.

At this point the direction of the American policy passed from Secretary Hay to President Roosevelt.

England and Italy were willing to come to an understanding. Germany refused. She stated that if she took possession of territory such possession would only be "temporary"; but such possessions easily become permanent; and, besides, it is difficult to trust the guaranties which may be treated as "scraps of paper."

President Roosevelt did not shirk the test. Although his action has never been officially described, there is no reason now for not describing it.

The humor of this was probably relished more in the White House than in the palace at Berlin.

In this wise the German Kaiser learned that the Monroe doctrine was a fact.

There was no note, sharp or otherwise, no bluff or bluster. Simply verbal information to Germany that the step contemplated by her would not be tolerated—that if she did not abandon it the American fleet would sail for the scene of action.

AMERICAN LIFE PROTECTED IN MOROCCO.

Two years later, on a much smaller scale, another international controversy arose. This raised the simple question of whether or not the United States Government could be depended upon to protect its citizens abroad as well as at home. This case is recorded also by Mr. Thayer.

"PERDICARIS ALIVE OR RAIZULI DEAD."

In June, 1904, an American citizen, Ion H. Perdicaris, was seized by Raizuli, a Moroccan bandit, and held for ransom. After much shilly-shallying, and threats by Raizuli that he would kill his prisoner unless the money were speedily paid, Hay cabled to Gummeré, American consul at Tangier, on June 22:

"We want Perdicaris alive or Raizuli dead," adding that Gummeré was "not to commit us about landing marines or seizing customhouse."

In his diary Hay made the following entries:

"June 23. My telegram to Gummeré had an uncalled for success. It is curious how a concise impropriety hits the public."

"June 4. Gummeré telegraphs that he expects Perdicaris to-night."

"June 27. Perdicaris wires his thanks."

"So speedily," comments William Roscoe Thayer, in his Life of John Hay, "did even a brigand, apparently safe in the depths of Morocco, recognize the note of command in the voice from overseas."

AMERICAN OPINIONS AT THE TIME.

The news of the cable message was published on June 22. The Republican national convention, which on the following day nominated Roosevelt for President, was in session at the time in Chicago. The correspondent of the New York Tribune wrote about it as follows:

"'Perdicaris alive or Raizuli dead' went through the convention like an electric thrill, and it was more talked about at night than any feature of the day's work. The prevailing impression was that if Secretary Hay had sent the telegram it was after consultation with the President, and that there must have been ample justification. Delegates from all sections of the country discussed it in all its potential plans, and in almost every instance warmly commended it.

"'It is pithy, pungent, and peremptory. I like it, and so do the people,' said Senator McComas, of Maryland.

"'It is the kind of a telegram,' said Senator Spooner, of Wisconsin, 'that would provoke rapturous applause in any political convention. It touches a popular chord. This Government is bound to protect its citizens abroad as well as at home.'

"'The American people will not back down on a message of that kind,' said Representative Grosvenor, of Ohio. 'The people admire a declaration of that kind when the justification is sufficient. It may not be couched exactly in diplomatic words, but its meaning is unmistakable. The people are quick to respond when their patriotism is appealed to. The Morocco bandit will find that there is a vigorous and united sentiment supporting the President and Secretary Hay in the stand they have taken.'

"'It was good, hot stuff, and echoed my sentiments,' said Congressman Dwight, of New York. 'The people want an administration that will stand by its citizens, even if it takes a fleet to do it.'

"It was magnificent—magnificent!" said Senator Depew. "Every right-minded American will heartily indorse Mr. Hay's strong stand."

"Do I like it?" exclaimed W. A. Elstun, of Kansas, one of the delegates. "Bet your bottom dollar I like it. Roosevelt is behind that cable message to that fine old body snatcher, Raisuli. Out in Kansas we believe in keeping the peace but in fighting against the wrong. Roosevelt and Hay know what they are doing. Our people like courage. We'll stand for anything those two men do."

Commenting on the message a few days later, after Perdicaris had been released, the Tribune said:

"It is easy to sneer at it. A dog may bay at the moon. But every rational man knows that a nation that does not protect its own citizens is unworthy of the name of Government, and that, moreover, the only way to make citizenship respected and secure is to make outrage upon it perilous."

THE TRUE AMERICAN POLICY.

The quoted comments by American statesmen reflect accurately the old-time American view of what the duty of a national administration is in cases affecting the lives of American citizens abroad. It accords with the view of that duty which Theodore Roosevelt holds and expounds to-day, as he has always held and expounded it. It is diametrically opposed to the policy pursued by the Wilson administration. In both instances the outcome was not war, but peace with honor.

TWENTY YEARS' ADVOCACY OF PREPAREDNESS.

From the moment he became Assistant Secretary of the Navy in 1897, down to the time when he retired from the Presidency in 1909, in all his public addresses, in all his annual messages to Congress, Col. Roosevelt advocated with tireless energy preparedness for war as the surest guaranty for peace. For the information of Secretary Garrison a partial collection of these utterances, beginning with those of his annual messages, is appended:

PREPAREDNESS URGED IN MESSAGES TO CONGRESS.

(First annual message to Congress Dec. 7, 1901.)

The work of upbuilding the Navy must be steadily continued. No one point of our policy, foreign or domestic, is more important than this to the honor and material welfare, and above all, to the peace of our Nation in the future.

PREPARATION LED TO VICTORY IN 1898.

It was forethought and preparation which secured us the overwhelming triumph in 1898. If we fail to show forethought and preparation now there may come a time when disaster will befall us instead of triumph.

(Second annual message to Congress, Dec. 2, 1902.)

There should be no halt in the work of building up the Navy, providing every year additional fighting craft.

A GOOD NAVY THE SUREST GUARANTY OF PEACE.

A good Navy is not a provocation of war. It is the surest guaranty of peace.

The refusal to maintain such a Navy would invite trouble, and if trouble came would insure disaster.

Fatuous self-complacency or vanity, or shortsightedness in refusing to prepare for danger, is both foolish and wicked in such a Nation as ours, and past experience has shown that such fatuity in refusing to recognize or prepare for any crisis in advance is usually succeeded by a mad panic of hysterical fear once the crisis has actually arrived.

HIGHEST POINT OF EFFICIENCY NECESSARY.

The Army has been reduced to the minimum allowed by law. It is very small for the size of the Nation, and most certainly should be kept at the highest point of efficiency.

GENERAL STAFF FOR THE ARMY URGED.

I urgently call your attention to the need of passing a bill providing for a general staff and for the reorganization of the supply department on the lines of the bill proposed by the Secretary of War last year.

TO STAND STILL MEANS TO GO BACK.

(Third annual message to Congress, Dec. 7, 1903.)

I heartily congratulate the Congress upon the steady progress in building up the American Navy. We can not afford a let-up in this great work. To stand still means to go back.

GENERAL STAFF SECURED.

The effect of the law providing a general staff for the Army and for the more effective use of the National Guard has been excellent. Great improvement has been made in the efficiency of our Army in recent years.

We should not rest satisfied with what has been done.

(Fourth annual message to Congress, Dec. 4, 1904.)

I most earnestly recommend that there be no halt in the work of upbuilding the American Navy.

POTENT FOR PEACE BECAUSE NOT AFRAID OF WAR.

Our voice is now potent for peace, and is so potent because we are not afraid of war. But our protestations upon behalf of peace would neither receive nor deserve the slightest attention if we were impotent to make them good.

It is very important that the officers of the Army should be accustomed to handle their men in masses, as it is also important that the National Guard of the several States should be accustomed to actual field maneuvering, especially in connection with the regulars.

EFFICIENCY ALWAYS EFFICIENCY.

(Fifth annual message to Congress, Dec. 5, 1905.)

We have most wisely continued for a number of years to build up our Navy, and it has now reached a fairly high standard of efficiency. This standard of efficiency must not only be maintained, but increased.

We now have a very small Army—indeed, one well-nigh infinitesimal when compared with the army of any other large nation.

I do not believe that any army in the world has a better average of enlisted men or a better type of junior officer, but the Army should be trained to act effectively in mass.

(Sixth annual message to Congress, Dec. 3, 1906.)

The United States Navy is the surest guarantee of peace which this country possesses.

I do not ask that we increase our Navy. I ask merely that it be maintained at its present strength, and this can be done only if we replace the obsolete outworn ships by new and good ones, the equals of any afloat in any navy.

SWISS SYSTEM A MODEL.

In both the Army and Navy there is urgent need that everything possible should be done to maintain the highest standard for the personnel, alike as regards the officers and the enlisted men.

The little Republic of Switzerland offers us an excellent example in all matters connected with building up an efficient citizen soldiery.

FOUR BATTLESHIPS A YEAR URGED.

(Seventh annual message to Congress, Dec. 3, 1907.)

To build one battleship of the best and most advanced type a year would hardly keep our fleet up to its present force. This is not enough. In my judgment we should this year provide for four battleships.

Again and again in the past our little Regular Army has rendered service literally vital to the country and it may at any time have to do so in the future.

Its standard of efficiency and instruction is higher now than ever in the past. But it is too small. There are not enough officers, and it is impossible to secure enough enlisted men.

EXTRA OFFICERS FOR THE ARMY NEEDED.

We should maintain in peace a fairly complete skeleton of a large army.

In particular it is essential that we should possess a number of extra officers trained in peace to perform efficiently the duties urgently required upon the breaking out of war.

From public utterances made by Col. Roosevelt at various points throughout the country during the same period, the following instructive citations are taken, the desire being to have Secretary Garrison's information thorough and complete:

TOO LATE TO PREPARE AFTER WAR BEGINS.

(Address as Assistant Secretary of the Navy before the Naval War College, June, 1897.)

We must make up our minds once for all to the fact that it is too late to make ready for war when the fight is once begun.

There must be adequate preparation for conflict, if conflict is not to mean disaster. Furthermore, this preparation must take the shape of an efficient fighting navy.

A BOLD FRONT MAKES FOR PEACE.

In public as in private life, a bold front tends to insure peace and not strife.

If we possess a formidable navy, small is the chance, indeed, that we shall ever be dragged into a war to uphold the Monroe doctrine. If we do not possess such a navy, war may be forced on us at any time.

NOT IN THE INTEREST OF WAR BUT OF PEACE.

We ask that the work of upbuilding the Navy and of putting the United States where it should be put among the maritime powers go forward without a break. We ask this not in the interest of war, but in the interest of peace.

PREPAREDNESS NEVER A MENACE TO PEACE.

In all our history there has never been a time when preparedness for war was any menace to peace.

On the contrary, again and again we have owed peace to the fact that we were prepared for war.

IF THE NAVY FAIL, DEFEAT FOLLOWS.

(Address to the graduating class, Naval Academy, Annapolis, May 2, 1902.)

We all of us earnestly hope that the occasion for war may never arise, but if it has to come, then this Nation must win; and in winning the prime factor must of necessity be the United States Navy. If the Navy fails us, then we are doomed to defeat.

ONLY THE SHOTS THAT HIT COUNT.

In battle the only shots that count are those that hit, and marksmanship is a matter of long practice and intelligent reasoning.

EFFICIENCY DEPENDS UPON PREPARATION.

A navy's efficiency in a war depends mainly upon its preparedness at the outset of that war. We are not to be excused as a nation if there is not such preparedness of our Navy.

PREPAREDNESS ALONE COMMANDS RESPECT.

We need to keep in a condition of preparedness, especially as regards our Navy, not because we want war, but because we desire to stand with those whose plea for peace is listened to with respectful attention.

PREPARATION WON AT MANILA.

(Speech at San Francisco, May 14, 1903.)

Remember that after the war has begun it is too late to improvise a navy. A naval war is two-third settled in advance, at least two-thirds, because it is mainly settled by the preparation which has gone on for years preceding its outbreak. We won at Manila because the shipbuilders of the country, under the wise provisions of Congress, had for 15 years before been preparing the Navy.

(Speech in Brooklyn, May 30, 1905.)

If our Navy is good enough, we have a long career of peace before us. The only likelihood of trouble ever coming to us as a Nation will arise if we let our Navy become too small or inefficient.

AN INEFFICIENT WARSHIP A MENACE TO THE NATIONAL HONOR.

Every warship which is not first class in efficiency becomes in battle not a help to the Nation, but a menace to the national honor.

NAVY'S PRIME USE TO AVERT WAR.

(Speech at the banquet of the National Convention for the Extension of the Foreign Commerce of the United States, Washington, Jan. 16, 1907.)

Remember, gentlemen, that the prime use of the United States Navy is to avert war. The United States Navy is the cheapest insurance Uncle Sam has. It is the surest guaranty against our ever being drawn into war; and the guaranty is effective in proportion as the Navy is efficient.

A MAKESHIFT NAVY IMPOSSIBLE.

(Speech at Cairo, Ill., Oct. 3, 1907.)

It is utterly impossible to improvise a makeshift navy under conditions of modern warfare.

NAVY MUST BE BUILT IN TIME OF PEACE.

The Navy must be built and all its training given in time of peace. When once war has broken out it is too late to do anything.

NO FINER MATERIAL FOR VOLUNTEER SOLDIERY ANYWHERE.

(Speech at Fargo, N. Dak., Apr. 7, 1903.)

I believe that no other great country has such fine natural material for volunteer soldiers as we have, and it is the obvious duty of the Nation and of the States to make such provision as will enable the volunteer soldiery to be organized with all possible rapidity and efficiency in time of war; and, furthermore, to help in every way the National Guard in time of peace.

It is quite plain from these various utterances in messages and addresses that Col. Roosevelt has been advocating for nearly 20 years the same kind of efficient army and navy as he is advocating to-day.

"What I ask for," he said recently, "is a big efficient navy, and a small efficient army of a quarter of a million men, and back of the Army a nation of freemen trained to the use of arms."

So also with the danger of militarism and other arguments of the peace-at-any-price advocates. His opinions of these to-day are the same that he has always held, as a few citations will show:

NO NATION MORE FREE OF IT THAN OURS.

(Annual message to Congress, Dec. 3, 1907.)

Not only there is not now, but there never has been, any other nation in the world so wholly free from the evils of militarism as is ours.

FOOLISH DENOUNCERS OF IT RARE.

There are, of course, foolish people who denounce any care of the Army or Navy as militarism, but I do not think that these people are numerous.

Declamation against militarism has no more serious place in an earnest and intelligent movement for righteousness in this country than declamation against the worship of Baal or Ashtaroth.

LESSONS OF THE CIVIL WAR.

(Speech before the Hamilton Club, Apr. 10, 1899.)

If in 1861 the men who loved the Union had believed that peace was the end of all things, and war and strife the worst of all things, and had acted up to their belief, we would have saved hundreds of thousands of lives; we would have saved hundreds of millions of dollars.

Moreover, besides saving all the blood and treasure we then lavished, we would have prevented the heartbreak of many women, the dissolution of many homes, and we would have spared the country those months of gloom and shame when it seemed as if our Armies marched only to defeat.

We could have avoided all this suffering simply by shrinking from strife. And if we had thus avoided it, we would have shown that we were weaklings and that we were unfit to stand among the great nations of the earth.

Thank God for the iron in the blood of our fathers, the men who upheld the wisdom of Lincoln and bore sword or rifle in the Armies of Grant! Let us, the children of the men who proved themselves equal to the mighty days—let us, the children of the men who carried the great Civil War to a triumphant conclusion, praise the God of our fathers that the ignoble counsels of peace were rejected; that the suffering and loss, the blackness of sorrow and despair, were unflinchingly faced and the years of strife endured; for in the end the slave was freed, the Union restored, and the mighty American Republic placed once more as a helmeted queen among nations.

PROFESSIONAL NONCOMBATANTS HARMFUL.

(From Life of Thomas H. Benton, written in 1887.)

A class of professional noncombatants is as hurtful to real healthy growth of a nation as a class of fire eaters; for a weakness of folly is nationally as bad as a vice or worse. No man who is not willing to bear arms and to fight for his rights can give a good reason why he should be entitled to the privilege of living in a free community.

PEACE-AT-ANY-PRICE MEN COST BLOOD AND WEALTH.

(From the "War with the United States, 1812–1815," written for the English History of the Royal Navy in 1897.)

Both Britain and America have produced men of the "peace-at-any-price" pattern, and in America, in one great crisis at least, these men cost the Nation more in blood and wealth than the political leaders most recklessly indifferent to war have ever cost it.

PEACE SECURED BY AN UPHOLDER OF JUST WAR.

(Letter to Carl Schurz, Sept. 8, 1905, published in Autobiography.)

I thank you for your congratulations [upon the conclusion of peace between Japan and Russia]. If I had been known as one of the conventional type of peace advocates, I could have done nothing whatever in bringing about peace now. I would be powerless in the future to accomplish anything, and I would not have been able to help confer the boons upon Cuba, the Philippines, Porto Rico, and Panama, brought about by our action therein.

If this country had not fought the Spanish War, if we had failed to take the action we did about Panama, all mankind would have been the loser.

FRIGHTFUL CONSEQUENCES OF AN UNJUST PEACE.

While the Turks were butchering the Armenians the European powers kept the peace, and thereby added a burden of infamy to the nineteenth century, for in keeping the peace a greater number of lives were lost than in any European war since Napoleon, and these lives were those of women and children as well as of men; while the moral degradation, the brutality inflicted and endured, the aggregate hideous wrong done surpassed that of any war of which we have record in modern times.

PARTIAL DISARMAMENT CALAMITOUS.

Unjust war is dreadful; a just war may be the highest duty. To have the best nations, the free and civilized nations, disarm and leave the despotisms and barbarisms with great military force would be a calamity compared to which the calamities caused by all the wars of the nineteenth century would be trivial.

HIGH PURPOSE WITHOUT POWER USELESS.

(In the Outlook, Sept. 9, 1911.)

Our chief usefulness to humanity rests on our combining power with high purpose; and high purpose by itself is utterly useless if the power to put it into effect is lacking.

TRUE LOVERS OF PEACE.

In the history of our country the peace advocates who treat peace as more than righteousness will never be, and never have been, of service, either to it or to mankind.

The true lovers of peace, the men who have really helped onward the movement for peace, have been those who followed, even though afar off, in the footsteps of Washington and Lincoln and stood for righteousness as the supreme end of national life.

WHAT PACIFICISM HAS DONE FOR CHINA.

(In the Outlook, Nov. 14, 1911.)

A complete absence of militarism in China and China's effort to rely purely on pacific measures in dealing with all foreign powers have not only caused it to lose various Provinces to various foreign powers within the last few decades, but have had not the smallest effect in saving it from tyranny, misgovernment, and the most far-reaching economic misery at home; and, moreover, have had the effect of depriving it of means of keeping order within its own boundaries.

Col. Roosevelt's poor opinion of the usefulness of arbitration treaties when unbacked by force is not the outgrowth of developments of the present war, but, like his opinions on the other vital questions of national policy, is a matter of long-standing conviction:

ARBITRATION TREATIES USELESS UNLESS BACKED BY FORCE.

(Address to the graduating class of the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Jan. 30, 1905.)

The adoption of those (arbitration) treaties by themselves would not bring peace. We are a good many years short of the millenium yet; and for the present and immediate future we can rest assured that the word of the man who is suspected of desiring peace because he is afraid of war will count for little.

RELIANCE ON A FIRST-CLASS FLEET SAFER.

(Address, as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, before the Naval War College, June, 1897.)

Arbitration is an excellent thing, but ultimately those who wish to see this country at peace with foreign nations will be wise if they place reliance upon a first-class fleet of first-class battleships rather than on any arbitration treaty which the wit of men can devise.

(Address at dinner of the Sons of the American Revolution, New York, Mar. 17, 1905.)

I know one excellent gentleman in Congress who said he preferred arbitration to battleships. So do I. But suppose the other man does not? I want to have the battleships as a provocative for arbitration so far as the other man is concerned.

We have now got our Navy up to a good point. We have built and are building 40 armored ships. For a year or two, or two or three years, to come what we need to do is to provide for the personnel of those ships and to secure the very highest standard of efficiency in handling them, singly and in squadrons; above all, for handling the great guns.

ARMORED STRENGTH ALONE MAKES ARBITRATION SUCCESSFUL.

(Annual message to Congress, Dec. 3, 1906.)

The chance for the settlement of disputes peacefully, by arbitration, now depends mainly upon the possession by the nations that mean to do right of sufficient armed strength to make their purpose effective.

LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS IMPOSSIBLE.

(Annual message to Congress, Dec. 3, 1907.)

It is evident (from the failure of The Hague conference to take action on the limitation of armaments) that it is folly for this Nation to have any hope of securing peace on any international agreement as to the limitation of armaments. Such being the fact, it would be most unwise for use to stop the upbuilding of our Navy.

NO SAFEGUARD AGAINST VIOLATION.

(Address before the Nobel Prize Committee, Christiania, Norway, accepting the Nobel Peace Prize, May 5, 1910.)

All really civilized communities should have effective arbitration treaties among themselves. I believe that these treaties can cover almost all questions liable to arise between such nations, if they are drawn with the explicit agreement that each contracting party will respect the other's territory and its absolute sovereignty within that territory, and the equally explicit agreement that (aside from the very rare cases where the nation's honor is vitally concerned) all other possible subjects of controversy will be submitted to arbitration. Such a treaty would insure peace unless one party deliberately violated it. Of course, as yet there is no adequate safeguard against such deliberate violation, but the establishment of a sufficient number of these treaties would go a long way toward creating a world opinion which would finally find expression in the provision of methods to forbid or punish such violation.

NO SINGLE POWER CAN LIMIT ARMAMENTS.

Something should be done as soon as possible to check the growth of armaments, especially naval armaments, by international agreement. No one power could or should act by itself; for it is eminently undesirable, from the standpoint of the peace of righteousness, that a power which really does believe in peace should place itself at the mercy of some rival which may at bottom have no such belief and no intention of acting on it.

Finally, it would be a master stroke if these great powers honestly bent on peace would form a league of peace, not only to keep the peace among themselves but to prevent, by force if necessary, its being broken by others.

NEED OF AN INTERNATIONAL POLICE POWER.

The supreme difficulty in connection with developing the peace work of The Hague arises from the lack of any executive power, of any police power, to enforce the decrees of the court.

Each nation must keep well prepared to defend itself until the establishment of some form of international police power, competent and willing to prevent violence as between nations.

As things are now, such power to command peace throughout the world could but be assured by some combination between those great nations which sincerely desire peace and have no thought themselves of committing aggressions.

WILSON'S LOST OPPORTUNITY.

The combination might at first be only to secure peace within certain definite limits and certain definite conditions, but the ruler or statesman who should bring about such a combination would have earned his place in history for all time and his title to the gratitude of all mankind.

PAPER TREATIES USELESS IF NOT BACKED BY FORCE.

(In the Outlook, Nov. 4, 1911.)

This war (between Italy and Turkey) proves the utter inefficiency of paper treaties when they are unbacked by force; the utter folly of those who believe that these paper treaties accomplish any useful purpose in the present stage of the world's development when there is no force behind them; and, finally, not merely the folly but the iniquity of making treaties which there is no real intention of putting into effect.

WICKED TO MAKE TREATIES SURE TO BE BROKEN.

It would be not merely foolish but wicked for us as a Nation to agree to arbitrate any dispute that affects our vital interest or our independence or honor, because such an agreement would amount on our part to a covenant to abandon our duty, to an agreement to surrender the rights of the American people about unknown matters at unknown times in the future.

Such an agreement would be wicked if kept, and yet to break it—as it undoubtedly would be broken if the occasion arose—would be only less shameful than keeping it.

Even on the subject of hyphenated Americans, the views which Col. Roosevelt has been expressing since the outbreak of the European war are not new. He uttered the same sentiments more than 20 years ago and has reiterated them frequently since.

HYPHENATED AMERICANS NOT DESIRABLE.

(From True Americanism, published April, 1894.)

We welcome the German or the Irishman who becomes an American. We have no use for the German or Irishman who remains such. We do not wish German-Americans and Irish-Americans who figure as such in our social and political life; we want only Americans, and, provided they are such, we do not care whether they are of native or of Irish or of German ancestry. We have no room in any healthy American community for a German-American vote or an Irish-American vote, and it is a contemptible demagogy to put planks into any party platform with the purpose of catching such a vote. We have no room for any people who do not act and vote simply as Americans and as nothing else.

ALL AMERICANS IN ROUGH RIDERS.

(Speech at New Mexico, May 5, 1903.)

There were men in my regiment (in the Spanish War) who themselves were born in England, Ireland, Germany, or Scandinavia, but there was not a man, no matter what his creed, what his birthplace, what his ancestry, who was not an American and nothing else.

GOOD CITIZENSHIP THE TEST.

(Speech at Butte, Mont., May 27, 1903.)

If we are to preserve this Republic as it was founded, as it was handed down to us by the men of sixty-one to sixty-five, and as it is and will be, we must draw the line never between section and section, never between creed and creed, thrice never between class and class; but along the line of conduct, the line that separates the good citizen wherever he may be found from the bad citizen wherever he may be found.

GOOD AMERICANISM NOT A MATTER OF BIRTH.

(Message to Congress, Dec. 6, 1904.)

Good Americanism is a matter of heart, of conscience, of lofty aspiration, of sound common sense, but not of birthplace or of creed. The medal of honor, the highest prize to be won by those who serve in the Army and the Navy of the United States, decorates men born here, and it also decorates men born in Great Britain and Ireland, in Germany, in Scandinavia, in France, and doubtless in other countries also.

ALL AMERICANS.

(Speech at dinner of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, New York, Mar. 17, 1905.)

My fellow countrymen, I have spoken to-night especially of what has been done for this Nation of ours by men of Irish blood. But, after all, in speaking to you or to any body of my fellow citizens, no matter from what Old World country they themselves or their forefathers may have come, the great thing is to remember that we are all of us Americans. Let us keep our pride in the stocks from which we have sprung, but let us show that pride, not by holding aloof from one another, least of all by preserving the Old World jealousies and bitternesses, but by joining in a spirit of generous rivalry to see which can do most for our great common country.

Finally, in regard to the Monroe doctrine and the necessity of upholding it by force in case of need, Col. Roosevelt has for years held and advocated no uncertain views.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE ONLY EFFECTIVE IF UPHELD BY FORCE.

(At Augusta, Me., Aug. 26, 1902.)

The Monroe doctrine is simply a statement of our very firm belief that on this continent the nations now existing here must be left to work out their own destinies among themselves and that the continent is not longer to be regarded as colonizing ground for any European nation.

The only power on the continent that can make that doctrine effective is, of course, ourselves, for in the world as it is, gentlemen, the nation which advances a given doctrine likely to interfere in any way with other nations must possess power to back it up if she wishes the doctrine to be respected.

BLUSTER WITHOUT FORCE WORSE THAN ABANDONMENT.

(Speech at Chicago, Apr. 2, 1903.)

I believe in the Monroe doctrine with all my heart and soul. I am convinced that the immense majority of our fellow countrymen so believe in it; but I would infinitely prefer to see us abandon it than to see us put it forward and bluster about it, and yet fail to build up the efficient fighting strength which in the last resort can alone make it respected by any strong foreign power whose interest it may ever happen to be to violate it.

"SPEAK SOFTLY AND CARRY A BIG STICK."

There is a homely old adage which runs: "Speak softly and carry a big stick; you will go far." If the American Nation will speak softly, and yet build, and keep at a pitch of the highest training, a thoroughly efficient Navy, the Monroe doctrine will go far.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES (S. DOC. NO. 242).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Secretary read the message, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the report of Brig. Gen. Frank McIntyre, Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, upon his recent trip to the Philippine Islands.

Inasmuch as the bill extending a greater measure of self-government to the Filipinos is now pending in Congress, it is recommended that this report be printed as a congressional document.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 12, 1916.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask that the report be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER. It ought to be rushed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The message and accompanying report will be printed and referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask that it be rushed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived the Senate stands adjourned until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The Senate thereupon (at 5 o'clock p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 13, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 12, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, make us wise in our conceptions, strong in our convictions, pure in our motives, with a mind open to the light of truth and a forward look; a spirit of toleration according to others what we desire for ourselves; a hatred of sin, mercy for the sinner, sympathy for the unfortunate in a helping hand; love for purity in the home and in the Nation, that we may move forward without fear and with perfect faith and confidence that right, justice, and love will adjust all wrongs and make pure all hearts in the final dispensation of Thy providence. Amen.

The journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks yesterday I omitted to place in the RECORD Mr. Lansing's last note to Great Britain on the blockade. I ask unanimous consent to print that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing in the RECORD the last note of Secretary Lansing on the matters in controversy. Is there objection?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if that is in connection with his speech of yesterday?

Mr. FESS. Yes; it was omitted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

GEORGE A. KOGLE.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House joint resolution 89. I will say this resolution is simply to correct the number of the regiment in a private pension bill which was passed at the last session of Congress, in which the number was put at the One hundred and sixtieth, whereas it should have been the One hundred and sixteenth.

The SPEAKER. Is it a joint resolution?

Mr. ADAIR. It is a House joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 89) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," approved February 25, 1915.

Whereas by a clerical error in the bill H. R. 19545 and in the act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," approved February 25, 1915, the name and service of George A. Kogle, late of Company I, One hundred and sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, was made to read "George A. Kogle, Company I, One hundred and sixtieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry": Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the paragraph in the act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," approved February 25, 1915, private act No. 193, Sixty-third Congress, granting an increase of pension to George A. Kogle, late of Company I, One hundred and sixtieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving, be corrected and amended to read as follows:

"The name of George A. Kogle, late of Company I, One hundred and sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the highest privilege——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman wait until the disposition of this little matter?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. How much time is it going to take?

The SPEAKER. About a minute and a half.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Well, I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

IMPEACHMENT OF H. SNOWDEN MARSHALL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] is recognized.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the highest privilege. By virtue of my office as a Member of the House of Representatives I impeach H. Snowden Marshall, United States district attorney for the southern district of New York, of high crimes and misdemeanors.

I charge him with having conspired with persons, firms, and corporations, their agents and servants, to grant such persons, firms, and corporations the privilege of violating various criminal, neutrality, interstate commerce, or custom laws of the United States in the southern district of New York.

I charge him with securing for persons or corporations great financial profit in consequence of the violation of the United States laws.

I charge him with corruptly and collusively participating in such conspiracies.

I charge him with corruptly neglecting and refusing to prosecute gross and notorious violations of various criminal, neutrality, custom revenue, and antitrust laws of the United States within said judicial district.

I charge him with corruptly inducing and procuring grand juries to return into the district court for the southern district of New York of indictments charging crimes without there being evidence before said grand jury which would in any degree justify the finding and filing of such indictments.

I charge him with being guilty of oppression in corruptly procuring indictments from the grand jury in said district charging reputable citizens with crime, although there was no evidence before the grand jury which would in the least warrant such charges.

I charge him with corruptly conspiring with other persons to spread broadcast throughout the United States maliciously false newspaper publications and reports, emanating as official statements and purporting to describe results of investigations conducted by said United States attorney and his assistants, with the object of destroying friendly relations between the United States and one or more foreign Governments.

I charge him with unlawfully and feloniously abusing the legal process before the grand jury in said district of New York, the Secret Service, and the Bureau of Investigation and Inquiry of the Department of Justice in furtherance of such conspiracy aforesaid.

I charge him with having knowledge of the existence of circumstances from which knowledge is imputed to him that large sums of money have been expended for or on behalf of foreign Governments and of various purveyors and manufacturers of war munitions for the purpose of influencing the actions of said United States attorney in furtherance of a conspiracy.

I charge him with having corruptly neglected or refused to prosecute men who have made the port of New York, within said judicial district, a military or naval base for foreign belligerent powers.

I charge him with corruptly neglecting and refusing to prosecute violations of Federal statutes prohibiting the loading and shipment of explosives on ships carrying passengers within said judicial district.

I charge him with corruptly neglecting and refusing to prosecute violations of the foreign-enlistment act and laws of the United States within said district.

I charge him with having corruptly used the powers of his office for the purpose of slandering and libeling peaceable and law-abiding people to their great injury.

I charge him with having abetted, approved, acquiesced, and permitted unlawful and oppressive misuse of subpœnas and other process before grand juries in said southern district of New York.

I charge him with having deprived law-abiding citizens of their legal rights, privileges, and immunities.

I charge him with aiding, abetting, and approving unlawful expenditures of public moneys in violation of the laws of the United States.

I charge him with being guilty of attempts by private solicitation of influencing the official actions and opinions of judges in the southern district of New York while in the performance of their judicial duties.

I charge him with having used the powers of his office to cause and procure a discrimination in the assignment of judges to conduct trials in said district, so as to discriminate against one or more resident judges.

I charge him with having used the powers of his office to procure or assist in the procurement of judges to be imported into the southern district of New York from other districts for the trial of cases in said district by falsely representing the condition of judicial business within said district.

I charge him with being guilty of private solicitation with intent to influence the official acts and decisions of judges imported as aforesaid.

I charge him with having attempted to corruptly control decisions and official actions of one or more of such imported judges.

I charge him with having procured the assignment of one or more imported judges for the conduct of trials in the said district for the purpose of preventing defendants in such cases from receiving a fair and impartial trial at the hands of resident judges.

I charge him with being a party to a conspiracy participated in by his assistant district attorneys and other officials connected with the administration of justice in the said southern district of New York, for the purpose of unlawfully manipulating and controlling the selection of grand and petit jurors in connection with cases in the courts of said district.

I charge him with having been guilty of acts by which the rights of the United States and that of individuals have been unlawfully prejudiced and the orderly and fair administration of justice defeated or obstructed in one or more instances.

I charge him with having employed the powers of his office for the purpose of shielding and to prevent the exposure of unlawful and improper conduct of one James W. Osborne in relation to facts involved in civil litigation which was pending in the State court in the State of New York.

I charge him with unlawfully protecting the said Osborne and others from prosecution for the violation of United States laws.

I charge him with willfully and corruptly refusing and neglecting to prosecute gross and notorious violations of the United States statutes committed by said James W. Osborne and others in the city and State of New York within said district.

I charge him with having prostituted the office of United States district attorney for the southern district of New York.

I charge him with having used the powers of his said office as United States district attorney to corruptly and willfully defame, slander, and injure the good name and professional standing of law-abiding citizens of the United States, to their great injury, for the purpose of protecting the private individual interests of James W. Osborne.

I charge him with having corruptly failed, neglected, and refused to prosecute persons who, while acting as witnesses for the United States in the trial of causes, committed the crime of perjury, subornation of perjury, and conspiracy in connection with the cases of United States against Rae Tanzer, United States against Frank D. Safford, and United States against Albert J. McCullough et al.

I charge him with having used and employed the United States grand jury in the southern district of New York for the purpose of attempting to establish records which might be used in defense of James W. Osborne, H. Snowden Marshall, Roger B. Wood, and Samuel H. Hershenstein (the last two being assistant United States district attorneys under said H. Snowden Marshall), and not for the purpose of investigation of violations of the United States laws.

I charge him with corruptly and willfully failing to remove certain of his assistant district attorneys who destroyed documentary evidence material in the trial of a pending case in the United States district court for the southern district of New York.

I charge him with corruptly and maliciously causing to be instituted criminal proceedings against Rae Tanzer and others for the purpose of protecting James W. Osborne, a special United States district attorney and a personal intimate friend of said H. Snowden Marshall.

I charge him with corruptly and willfully failing and refusing to present to the court the trial of cases material and important evidence and in concealing or assisting and acquiescing in the concealment or destruction of material and important evidence relating to pending cases in the United States district court for the southern district of New York.

I charge him with being corrupt, grossly negligent, and unfit to retain the office as United States district attorney for the southern district of New York.

I charge him with having willfully and persistenly violated the laws of the United States in connection with the performance by him of the duties of such United States district attorney for said southern district of New York.

I charge him with having corruptly and willfully withheld and failed to present before the grand jury material and important evidence in connection with alleged investigations instituted before said grand jury by said H. Snowden Marshall in relation to the cases of United States against Rae Tanzer and United States against Albert J. McCullough et al., and others.

I charge him with having corruptly and willfully refused and neglected to take cognizance of unlawful conduct of his assistant district attorneys in connection with the performance by them of official duties as such assistant district attorneys.

I charge him with corruptly participating in or acquiescing to the presentation to the court in trial of cases in the southern district of New York of alleged evidence which he knew to be untrue and manufactured, or in the manufacture of and attempt to manufacture such alleged evidence.

I charge him with producing willful injury and wrong to litigants in said district court and to citizens of the United States by his unlawful and improper conduct.

Mr. Speaker, I send up the following resolution to the desk to be read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 90.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire and report whether the action of this House is necessary concerning the alleged official misconduct of H. Snowden Marshall; whether he has conspired with persons, firms, and corporations, their agents and servants, to grant such persons, firms, and corporations the privilege of violating various criminal, neutrality, interstate-commerce, or custom laws of the United States in the southern district of New York; whether he has secured for persons or corporations great financial profit in consequence of the violation of the United States laws; whether he has corruptly and collusively participated in such conspiracies; whetner he has corruptly neglected and refused to prosecute gross and notorious violations of various criminal, neutrality, custom-revenue, and antitrust laws of the United States within said judicial district; whether he has corruptly induced and procured grand juries to return into the district court for the southern district of New York indictments charging crimes without there being evidence before said grand jury which would in any degree justify the finding and filing of such indictments; whether he has been guilty of oppression in corruptly procuring indictments from the grand jury in said district, charging reputable citizens with crime although there was no evidence before the grand jury which would in the least warrant such charges; whether he has corruptly conspired with other persons to spread broadcast throughout the United States maliciously false newspaper publications and reports emanating as official statements and purporting to describe results of investigations conducted by said United States attorney and his assistants with the object of destroying friendly relations between the United States and one or more foreign governments; whether he has unlawfully and feloniously abused the legal process before the grand jury in said district of New York, the Secret Service, and the Bureau of Investigation and Inquiry of the Department of Justice in furtherance of such conspiracy aforesaid; whether he has knowledge or whether there are in existence circumstances from which knowledge is imputed to him, that large sums of money have been expended for or on behalf of foreign governments and of various purveyors and manufacturers of war munitions for the purpose of influencing the actions of said United States attorney in furtherance of a conspiracy; whether he has corruptly neglected and refused to prosecute men who have made the port of New York within said judicial district a military and naval base for foreign belligerent powers; whether he has corruptly neglected and refused to prosecute violations of the Federal statutes prohibiting the loading and shipment of explosives on ships carrying passengers within said judicial district; whether he has corruptly neglected and refused to prosecute violations of the foreign enlistment act and laws of the United States; whether he has corruptly used the powers of his office for the purpose of slandering and libelling peaceable and law-abiding people to their great injury; whether he has abetted, approved, acquiesced in, and permitted unlawful and oppressive misuse of subpœnas and other process before the grand juries in said southern district of New York; whether he has deprived law-abiding citizens of their legal rights, privileges, and immunities; whether he has aided, abetted, and approved unlawful expenditures of public moneys in violation of the laws of the United States; whether he has been guilty of attempts by private solicitation to influence the official actions and opinions of judges in the southern district of New York while in the performance of their judicial duties; whether he has used the powers of his office to cause and procure a discrimination in the assignment of judges to conduct trials in said district so as to discriminate against one or more resident judges; whether he has used the powers of his office to procure or assist in the procurement of judges to be imported into the southern district of New York from other districts for the trial of cases in said district by falsely representing the condition of judicial business within said district; whether he has been guilty of private solicitation with intent to influence the official acts and decisions of judges imported as aforesaid; whether he has corruptly attempted to control decisions and official actions of one or more of such imported judges; whether he has procured the assignment of one or more imported judges for the conduct of trials in the said district for the purpose of preventing defendants in such cases from receiving a fair and impartial trial at the hands of resident judges; whether he has been a party to a conspiracy participated in by his assistant district attorneys and other officials connected with the administration of justice in the said southern district of New York, for the purpose of unlawfully manipulating and controlling the selection of grand and petit jurors in connection with cases in the courts of said district; whether he has been guilty of acts by which the rights of the United States and that of individuals have been unlawfully prejudiced and the orderly and fair administration of justice defeated or obstructed in one or more instances; whether he has employed the powers of his office for the purpose of shielding and to prevent the exposure of unlawful and improper conduct of one James W. Osborne in relation to facts involved in civil litigation which was pending in the State court in the State of New York; whether he unlawfully protected the said Osborne and others from prosecution for the violation of United States laws; whether he has willfully and corruptly refused and neglected to prosecute gross and notorious violations of the United States Statutes committed by said James W. Osborne and others in the city and State of New York within said district; whether he has prostituted the office of the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York; whether he has used the powers of his said office as United States district attorney to corruptly and willfully defame, slander, and injure the good name and professional standing of law-abiding citizens of the United States to their great injury for the purpose of protecting the private individual interests of James W. Osborne; whether he has corruptly failed, neglected, and refused to prosecute persons who, while acting as witnesses for the United States in the trial of causes, committed the crime of perjury, subornation of perjury, and conspiracy in connection with the cases of United States v. Rae Tanzer, United States v. Frank D. Safford, and United States v. Albert J. McCullough et al.; whether he used and employed the United States grand jury in the southern district of New York for the purpose of attempting to establish records which might be used in defense of James W. Osborne, H. Snowdon Marshall, Roger B. Wood, and Samuel H. Hershenstein (the last two being assistant United States district attorneys under said H. Snowdon Marshall), and not for the purpose of investigation of violations of the United States laws; whether he has corruptly and willfully failed to remove certain of his assistant district attorneys who destroyed documentary evidence material in the trial of a pending case in the United States district court for the southern district of New York; whether he corruptly and maliciously caused to be instituted criminal proceedings against Rae Tanzer and others for the purpose of protecting James W. Osborne, a special United States district attorney and a personal intimate friend of said H. Snowdon Marshall; whether he has corruptly and willfully failed and refused to present to the court the trial of cases material and important evidence and in concealing or assisting and acquiescing in the concealment or destruction of material and important evidence relating to pending cases in the United States district court for the southern district of New York; whether he is corrupt, grossly negligent, and unfit to retain the office as United States district attorney for the southern district of New York; whether he has willfully and persistently violated the laws of the United States in connection with the performance by him of the duties of such United States district attorney for said southern district of New York; whether he has corruptly and willfully withheld and failed to present before the grand jury material and important evidence in connection with alleged investigations instituted before said grand jury by said H. Snowdon Marshall in relation to the cases of United States v. Rae Tanzer and United States v. Albert J. McCullough et al. and others; whether he has corruptly and willfully refused and neglected to take cognizance of unlawful conduct of his assistant district attorneys in connection with the performance by them of official duties as such assistant district attorneys; whether he has corruptly participated in or acquiesced to the presentation to the court in trial of cases in the southern district of New York of alleged evidence which he knew to be untrue and manufactured, or in the manufacture of and attempt to manufacture such alleged evidence; whether he has produced willful injury and wrong to litigants in said district court and to citizens of the United States by his unlawful and improper conduct; whether he has been guilty of any misbehavior for which he should be impeached.

And in making this investigation the said committee is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, employ a clerk and stenographer, and is also authorized to appoint a subcommittee to act for and on behalf of the whole committee whenever and wherever it may be deemed advisable to take testimony for the use of said committee. The said subcommittee while so employed shall have the same powers in respect to obtaining testimony as are herein given to said Committee on the Judiciary, with a sergeant at arms, by himself or deputy, who shall serve the process of said committee or subcommittee and shall attend the sitting of the same as ordered and directed thereby. The Speaker shall have authority to sign and the Clerk to attest subpœnas for any witness or witnesses.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move the passage of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves the passage of the resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, have I not the floor?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, as I understood it, I had the floor, and no other Member——

The SPEAKER. A motion to refer is in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Speaker recognized me and I made the motion when I stated "Mr. Speaker."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, before the Speaker determines that question——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on my motion.

The SPEAKER. What was the gentleman from New York saying?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Speaker recognized me——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I had——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman——

The SPEAKER. One at a time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to be heard on my motion.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I take the position that I have the floor, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] interrupted me and prevented me from continuing to make any statement, and therefore I claim he is out of order, and I raise the point of order against the gentleman from New York. I had the floor and was interrupted by the gentleman from New York arising.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, the Chair thinks, is laboring under a misapprehension as to the situation. There is no way of cutting the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], at the proper time, out of making a motion to refer.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Is this the proper time? That is what I wanted to find out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to state my position, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] asked for the adoption of the resolution. The Speaker stated the question. I rose and addressed the Chair. I was recognized, and moved to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary. Now, I wish, under the rules of the House, to speak upon the motion which I have made. I could not have made the motion if the gentleman had held the floor. He can not stand mute and have the Speaker perform his duty, and have some one recognized, and still insist that he has the floor. And I wish, as soon as the Speaker states the motion to refer, to discuss it, as I have a right to do. Now, the motion to refer would not have been in order if the gentleman had moved the previous question. The previous question cuts the motion to refer out; but I have been recognized. I have made the motion and I am waiting to be heard upon the motion to refer.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is slightly in error. The Speaker did not state the question. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] unnecessarily moved the passage of the resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. MANN. Still retaining the floor, as the Speaker stated, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] moved the passage of the resolution. Under our practice, that motion is not required to be made.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] rose and the Speaker said, "The gentleman from New York," which would ordinarily be the case, although the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] had not yielded the floor. The gentleman from Illinois, having the floor, was entitled to retain it for an hour, or within that time to move the previous question, and if he moves the previous question, and it is ordered, the motion to refer is cut out. If it is not ordered, then the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is entitled to recognition to move the reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] if he intended to obtain the floor for the purpose of debate, or was he yielding; or what was he doing?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, my intention was to retain the floor. I did not know whether the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] was arising to ask me a question, or what he might be arising for. If he had, I could not have prevented him from addressing the Chair and the Speaker recognizing him. It was not my intention at all to yield the floor. I intended to make some remarks on this, and, if I had the privilege, to yield some time to others.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, I have no desire to interfere with the gentleman from Illinois making any statement he desires to make in connection with the resolution.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I am not attempting by unfair practice to take the floor away from him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will discuss his motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I am not attempting by unfair practices to deprive the gentleman of any rights. I do not intend to do it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] desire to discuss his resolution?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes, sir. I want to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Illinois had not yielded the floor. If he has anything to say on his resolution, the Chair will hear it. Before the gentleman from Illinois begins, the Chair will state that the gentleman from New York has a perfect right to make a motion to commit—not right now, but when the time comes.

Mr. MANN. If he is not cut off by the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Speaker must determine whether a motion to refer has been made. There is no trouble about it. I have no desire to cut anybody off. But I do want a vote of the House on the question of whether this resolution should be considered by the Committee on the Judiciary; that is all. I have no desire to interfere with the gentleman in making his statement or indulge in any sharp practice. I do not intend to do it. I supposed the gentleman had finished.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggest that a motion to recommit, or to commit, which is the same thing, could not be debated after the previous question was made on the resolution?

Mr. MANN. That it could be made.

The SPEAKER. Could be?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It could not. The motion to commit is not in order after the previous question is ordered. I arose and was recognized to submit the motion at the only time it could have been offered, and I insist I am entitled to recognition. Having been recognized and made a motion, I am now asking to be permitted to speak to my motion. I am going to yield back to the gentleman from Illinois after I have said two or three words.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] gets through the Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I intended to keep the floor. That is what I wanted. I want my privilege under the rules. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is correct, I yield to him.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, this question of when those preferential motions can be made, whether they can be made before debate is begun or afterwards, is not very clearly settled. I have in mind two cases bearing on the case in hand. A number of years ago Mr. John Wesley Gaines, of Tennessee, offered a resolution to declare vacant the seat of Mr. Lilley, of Connecticut, on account of the latter being sworn in as governor of his State. Before Mr. Gaines could begin to debate, the gentleman from New York, Mr. Payne, moved to commit the resolution, and took the floor away from Mr. Gaines. Mr. Speaker CANNON ruled that Mr. Payne was entitled to the floor for one hour.

On another occasion, when Mr. Hobson, of Alabama, fell into some altercation with Mr. HAY, of Virginia, and moved certain resolutions of investigation, I myself, before debate began, interposed a motion to commit, and I secured control of the floor for one hour. As far as I know, except in the matter of conference reports, the practice in this House has been that until debate has actually begun the floor can be transferred on any preferential motions that are debatable. When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] offers a resolution, properly it ought to be read at the desk. Then he must again seek another recognition before debate begins. Up to that time any of the preferential motions are in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], although he is arguing in my behalf. [Laughter.] The only preferential motion that will take a gentleman off the floor before debate is begun is a motion to lay on the table. If the gentleman from Illinois had addressed the Chair and proceeded to debate the resolution, no preferential motion to refer or to postpone would have taken him off the floor. Before he commences debate the motion to lay on the table would take him off the floor. But I was recognized by the Speaker when no attempt was being made by the gentleman to occupy the floor. I have made my motion, which is in order. I was recognized to do it, and I now insist that I am entitled to speak on that motion. I wish to say only a few words, and then I shall yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The SPEAKER. So far as the Chair recollects, what happened was this: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] moved that this resolution be agreed to. Of course the making of the motion was preferential under our practice. He did not start to debate it, or anything of that sort. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] rose, and the Chair recognized him. The Chair supposed that the gentleman from Illinois had nothing further to say, and under the circumstances of the case the Chair thinks that the motion of the gentleman from New York is in order. You can not keep the gentleman from Illinois or anybody else from stating it until the Chair gets tired of the debate, because the motion to refer is debatable only within certain limits, necessarily.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, who has got the privileges of the floor, then? It has been my intention to retain it. I did not know but that some gentleman would want to say something about it, and when I yielded I did not know the purpose of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] in rising and addressing the Chair, and did not have any opportunity to start and make any statement in regard to it.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] will state that he was on the floor and claiming it for purposes of debate——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I do claim that, Mr. Speaker, that I wanted to make a statement in regard to why this resolution should be passed here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will have that opportunity.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. NORTON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Dakota rise?

Mr. NORTON. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NORTON. Has not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] moved the previous question?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I do not know but that I did. If I did, I made that motion when I believed an unfair advantage was being taken of me to get me off the floor. I want to make a brief statement in regard to why this resolution should be passed here.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw the motion for the previous question?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes; for the present.

The reason, Mr. Speaker, why I desire the House to pass this resolution at this time is that I find that the past precedents of the Judiciary Committee are such that a great burden is placed upon a Member instituting impeachment proceedings. I wish to say here that it is not my purpose by any means to cast any reflection on the Committee on the Judiciary or any of its members; but the precedents are such that it makes it a great burden on the impeaching Member to undertake to get what may seem to the committee is necessary in the way of prima facie evidence and for them to ask for the power to subpœna witnesses and to secure evidence.

I have looked into the charges in New York, or rather had my attention called to them, for some time before. I have, since reading the impeachment charges against H. Snowden Marshall, looked into them further, and I am satisfied that much of this evidence that the committee should have is susceptible of proof; and no matter whether the Members of this House agree with me or not in regard to my charges, they have to admit that the charges have been made. If they are erroneous charges, then, if Members are the friends of Mr. H. Snowden Marshall, district attorney for the southern district of New York, they ought to want an early and as thorough an investigation as possibly can be done. If they agree with me that I have got justifiable information to bring the charges that I have had read here, then certainly there ought not to be any delay, or the committee ought not to be without power to subpœna witnesses or investigate this matter in the proper manner.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. I want to say to the gentleman before making the inquiry that I shall vote for the passage of this resolution if he presses it to a vote at this time. I want to ask the gentleman a question—but let me first make this further statement before asking it: As I caught from the reading of the resolution at the desk, some of the charges made are undoubtedly impeachable charges.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I should think they all are.

Mr. GARRETT. That is the question, whether or not some of the charges made by the gentleman and some of the matters which the Committee on the Judiciary may be called upon to investigate are, in fact, impeachable charges. I am sincerely desirous of having an investigation of every impeachable charge made by the gentleman from Illinois, but I am doubtful, in so far as I heard it read from the desk—and that is all we have, there being no printed copy before us—I am doubtful if all of them are impeachable charges. And yet, if the resolution be passed, it will impose on the Committee on the Judiciary the burden of investigating those matters which may not under the Constitution and under all the decisions and practices be impeachable charges.

I just merely wanted to ask the gentleman if, in that view of the case, he would not be willing——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. My view of that matter is that a sufficient inquiry into them to get enough evidence to impeach would, it seems to me, be going far enough, and then if the House approved of the report——

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I have not concluded. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. Of course, I do not know just what view the gentleman may entertain of the attitude of the committee toward the resolution. I am not a member of that committee. It had occurred to me that it might be well to have the matter referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, in order that they might determine those things in the charges that are impeachable and those things that are not, and eradicate any of those propositions with which the House would have nothing to do. I will say that I am with the gentleman on the passage of the resolution, if it be necessary. I merely suggest this for the gentleman's consideration.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I yield to my colleague from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Would not the Judiciary Committee have the discretion and the power to designate what witnesses they desire to subpœna or what witnesses would be proper to subpœna, if this resolution is passed? That would not deprive them of discretion to say whom they should subpœna and whom they should not. I think this resolution would not deprive the Judiciary Committee of any right that they have of deciding whom they should subpœna.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not want to quarrel with my friends about the matter at all. I do not think the committee would have that discretion. The resolution expressly requires the Judiciary Committee to investigate every proposition set forth in it, whether the charge contained be an impeachable matter or not.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. My recollection is——

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I feel a good deal like my friend from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] in this matter. If I remember the Constitution, it recites high crimes and misdemeanors as being impeachable offenses. I think the machinery used is a prosecuting committee. I do not know just what your rules are, but that is the custom. This House is a sovereign body, and these charges would simply be counts in the indictment, and whatever machine you select to execute them will consider them as counts in the indictment. Those that are not proven will be vitiated, and those that are proven will be absolute. I do not think there is any mystery about it at all, so far as an ordinary cornfield lawyer like myself considers such matters. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to continue?

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in regard to the question that has been raised, it is my opinion, based on my recollection of my reading of these impeachment cases, that the Judiciary Committee has not always examined into every specific charge for the purpose of impeaching a public officer.

As I remember, even when the committee have asked authority to inquire into a number of specific charges, they have not in every case inquired into all of them. Therefore, in my opinion, it is within the discretion of the Judiciary Committee whether or not they shall inquire into all the specific charges made in an impeachment resolution.

Not only that, but if these impeachment charges are referred to the committee for consideration and examination, perhaps the committee will in time recommend a resolution of impeachment, perhaps amending the charges; and, if the committee felt that they were under any obligations to inquire into all of the specific charges in this resolution, they could easily come back and ask for the elimination of such charges as they did not feel they were called upon to investigate, and they could come in with a resolution asking authority to look into and investigate those specific charges that they thought were proper to investigate.

I started to say that I am not pressing the passage of this resolution as a reflection on the committee. In fact, it seems to me an indication that I am not afraid of the committee. I want the committee to have power and authority, and certainly it should have no objection to being given power and authority to do the things that are referred to it. Aside from that——

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I do.

Mr. CULLOP. I should like to suggest to the gentleman that in moving his resolution he is only following the common practice of the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I understand that.

Mr. CULLOP. There have been two methods indulged in. One was to refer to the Judiciary Committee or some special committee and another has been the method that the gentleman is now pursuing.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. And in furtherance of the position I have taken I wish to say that I have been libeled and lied about by the newspapers which, as is well known by informed people, are the mouthpieces of the most vicious and harmful business system that was ever in existence; a part, you may say—the large daily papers of the country—of the ammunition trust and the armor-plate ring and their allies. Those lying, scurrilous sheets have made such statements against me that it is not difficult at all for me to prove that they are libelous, and when the proper time comes I perhaps will take that matter up for consideration. But at this time some of them have said that I have introduced, or have read, impeachment charges here on the floor of the House, but do not desire that the investigation be made; and while I do not pay much attention to unreliable press statements I have heard, others besides the newspapers have made such statements. Certainly, now, if this resolution is passed, it does not obligate the committee to do anything that in its judgment is not the proper thing to do in regard to this investigation; and, in my opinion, there is no room for objection to immediate action on the resolution. Now, I am willing to yield if gentlemen want to address the House; and if not, I will move the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like some time.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, have I the right to yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to disabuse the mind of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], or anyone else, of the idea that there is any desire on my part to deprive him of any right which he has in this matter. I believe this resolution should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, so that that committee can examine it carefully and ask the House to take such action upon it as may be deemed advisable after it has made the examination. It is not for the purpose of protecting or aiding in any way the district attorney for the southern district of New York. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I believe that there is a greater duty incumbent on the Judiciary Committee in this matter than ordinarily would be the case.

Last December, within a month, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. BUCHANAN, upon his responsibility as a Member of this House, impeached the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York. Shortly thereafter, in a district where that official has considerable power and influence, the grand jury returned an indictment against the gentleman from Illinois. Whatever may be the respective merits of the impeachment, or of the action of the grand jury, no one can deny the fact that a most extraordinary condition is created by the return of a true bill in that district after the gentleman from Illinois had impeached the United States district attorney in the district.

I do not believe that the Committee on the Judiciary should hold him to the same rigid rules in furnishing information or proof that ordinarily is demanded of a Member of this House when he impeaches an official for high crimes and misdemeanors, because if this action of the United States grand jury be unfounded, if there be any justification for the belief that it was instituted in retaliation, or for the purpose of deterring a Member of this House from the discharge of his public duty in one of the most important aspects that can fall upon him, then there is all the more reason why the House should be particularly careful to investigate the matter. Whatever may be the truth of these charges, I do not believe that the House can permit charges of the broad, comprehensive, grave, and serious character that have been read here against this official to slumber without investigation.

Not only the position of the gentleman from Illinois, but the proper administration of justice in the southern district of New York demands that these matters be fully probed. This official should either be impeached on the charges, or else properly exonerated, and this House is now the only place where he can now be exonerated. My purpose is not to embarrass the gentleman from Illinois. I believe that the resolution, as framed, directs the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate every single one of these charges. The committee should have the resolution, examine it carefully, and report its recommendations to the House defining the particular things which should be investigated, in the interest of justice. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will agree that that action be taken. I have no desire to stand in the way of an investigation. It has reached the point where, I believe, it is absolutely essential that it should be made. My only purpose in proposing to refer the resolution is to see that it is done in an orderly, proper, and decent manner.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to discuss the merits of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois. He is my colleague on the floor of this House. He holds the commission of his constituency. He rises in his place and makes solemn and serious charges of an impeachable character against an officer of the judicial branch of the Government. He has a right to do that, and, for one, I shall respect his rights. It makes no difference to me what the merits of the case may be against him in New York. That is a matter we ought not to stop and consider now. We should not now undertake to try that case. We are not reflecting on the Judiciary Committee when we say by our votes that this resolution should be adopted to-day.

What is the situation? Here is a Representative on the floor of this House assailed by the proceedings of a secret grand-jury session in a State of this Union. The gentleman from Illinois, in his representative capacity and on his own responsibility, strictly within his rights under the Constitution and the laws of this country, makes open and direct charges and calls for an investigation. I would feel better when consulting my conscience to say to-day that this resolution should be adopted and that these charges should be investigated by the great Judiciary Committee of this House rather than to say that the district attorney may lug into the secret session of the grand-jury room of some district in some State of this Union the case and try it there by star-chamber proceedings against a Representative on this floor. The district attorney by this method does impeach this Representative, and the Representative has the right to thus impeach the district attorney. Hence I shall vote to refer this matter to the Judiciary Committee for further investigation, and, standing upon my rights as a Representative, and respecting the rights of this Representative, who is our colleague, when he says on his responsibility as a Representative that impeachable offenses have been committed by this official, I shall vote to pass his resolution to-day, in order that this investigation may be had under the Constitution and laws of the country.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Does the gentleman think it would be any reflection on the gentleman from Illinois if the House voted to refer the matter to the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. HENRY. I do not say that it would be a reflection, but prefer to pursue the other course, as I would in the case of any other Representative with respect to his rights, and say that these charges should be investigated when he makes them in this solemn way.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. Ordinarily, would the gentleman have this thing passed upon by the House without reference, or does he make an exception on account of the peculiar circumstances in this case, the gentleman from Illinois having been indicted in New York.

Mr. HENRY. Under the peculiar circumstances of the case I prefer to pursue this course to-day.

Mr. WEBB rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Carolina rise?

Mr. WEBB. I want to make a statement to the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. How much time does the gentleman require?

Mr. WEBB. Five minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, when the original resolution impeaching H. Snowden Marshall was introduced, it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary on the 14th day of December. As chairman of that committee I notified Mr. BUCHANAN that the doors of the committee were open to him at any time to pursue the ordinary course which had been pursued in such cases for the last 13 years, and that is that the one making the impeachment charges should be asked to make his charges specific and simply make out a prima facie case by furnishing the names of witnesses that we could ask the House to be subpœnaed and telling the committee something of what each witness would swear, before we should ask the House for the high authority to make a thorough investigation.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] came before the committee on Monday last, and after remaining with the committee an hour or more, asked that the matter be continued until another day of this week, which request was granted. Yesterday he introduced his amended resolution and to-day the one which we are now considering.

I want to say to the House that it matters very little to the Committee on the Judiciary which course is pursued. By adopting this resolution "straight off the bat" it will relieve the Committee on the Judiciary of a burden in one way, for then you certainly will assume entire responsibility in ordering the investigation. I can only tell you what has been the custom for the last 13 years. I well remember in the Fifty-eighth Congress, when Mr. Lamar, of Florida, presented formal impeachment articles adopted by the State of Florida against Judge Swayne. Even then there was some discussion as to whether or not that resolution ought not to be referred first to the Committee on the Judiciary to report back to the House; but as the Legislature of Florida had impeached or preferred charges against Judge Swayne, the House at once authorized an investigation by the Judiciary Committee. A little later, when Judge Wilfley was impeached on the floor of the House by Representative Waldo, from New York, he asked that the matter be investigated immediately, and Mr. Sereno E. Payne, then Republican floor leader, suggested and asked that the whole matter be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary in order that that committee might inquire whether a prima facie case were made out and if the charges amounted to impeachment charges, and for the committee to report back to the House a suitable resolution. That course was adopted by the House. A little later Judge Hanford was formally impeached by Mr. Berger, from Wisconsin, and distinctly impeached of high crimes and misdemeanors, and he accompanied his impeachment articles with a resolution like the one we are considering now; but after discussing it for a little while Mr. Berger himself agreed that the whole matter should go before the Committee on the Judiciary, and it went there, and after some preliminary investigation the committee reported to the House a resolution asking that it be given power to investigate, to subpœna witnesses and take testimony, and so forth. A little later, when Mr. Neeley, of Kansas, impeached Judge Dayton, of West Virginia, the whole matter was sent to the Committee on the Judiciary with a request that it investigate and report to the House.

The committee sat patiently for some months trying to get some prima facie reason why we should ask the House to give us power to subpœna witnesses and make thorough investigation. That was done, and the House was later asked by the committee for power to make the investigation, and his conduct was investigated and final report made to the House. Some short time before that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARK] rose in the House, in his responsible position, and impeached Judge Wright, of the district court in this city, and the whole matter was sent to the Committee on the Judiciary to make report as to what should be done. Judge PARK presented affidavits and statements before the committee, and upon them the committee felt that they were warranted in asking the House to authorize it to make a thorough investigation. That request was made of the House and granted and Judge Wright's conduct was thoroughly investigated.

Mr. Speaker, I know of no precedent since the time of the impeachment of Judge Swayne, 13 years ago, when, as a preliminary precaution on the part of the House, a resolution of this sort has not been sent first to the Judiciary Committee to make some preliminary investigation, and let the House know at least that there is some grounds for asking such a serious matter as a thorough and expensive investigation, with power to subpœna witnesses, and involve an expenditure of probably many thousands of dollars. As I said, it makes little difference to the committee whether the House wants to instruct us now to investigate or whether you will leave it to that committee to see first whether it will recommend to the House that an investigation should be made.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Is there any trouble in the way of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], by reason of expense that it would involve, to make it difficult to pursue the course suggested of referring this first to a committee? In other words, can he discharge his duty to his country, to himself, and to the House without expense, just the same whether this resolution be referred to your committee now as he could if it were adopted now?

Mr. WEBB. I think he can. I will say to my friend from Texas that I do not know of any Member of Congress having been put to any expense in any investigation before the committee in stating the specific charge against an impeached official and also suggesting to us some source where we can find some evidence tending to sustain it.

Mr. HARDY. If, under the status it now has, this resolution is referred to the gentleman's committee, if the gentleman from Illinois should come before the committee and ask that committee to subpœna witnesses, will the committee subpœna the witnesses requested by him?

Mr. WEBB. The committee can not subpœna witnesses now. The committee can make a preliminary investigation and then report whether or not upon his statement and the suggested sources from which we can probably get proof a prima facie case may follow, and we would ask the House for authority to investigate by subpœnaing witnesses, and so forth.

Mr. HARDY. Is it necessary for him to bring witnesses before you?

Mr. WEBB. Not unless he wants to do so.

Mr. HARDY. If he does not, can you make a preliminary investigation?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; if the charges are serious enough.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. WEBB. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes additional?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has 30 minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I yield five minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. HENRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HENRY. The gentleman will recall in the Swayne case Representative Lamar, of Florida, arose and impeached Judge Swayne.

Mr. WEBB. I have just so stated.

Mr. HENRY. And the resolution gave the Judiciary Committee power to summon witnesses, and so forth, and a subcommittee was appointed by the Judiciary Committee, which went to Florida and other States of the Union to make investigation. Now, Judge Lamar's character was not involved in that impeachment case, but here we have a Representative whose character is involved, a sitting Representative. Does not the gentleman think that this case is much more persuasive than was the Swayne case, where a resolution was adopted without reference to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. WEBB. I stated that the Swayne case was acted on immediately by the House in ordering an investigation, and I think that the thing that swayed the House was the fact that the Legislature of Florida, both houses, had formally charged Judge Swayne. I say again, gentlemen, you can now direct the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate all of these charges against Mr. Marshall and we will do it, but I hope you gentlemen who are lawyers will understand that there are matters in these impeachment charges—one, the very first one, is the charge that the district attorney of New York has refused to prosecute big corporations, trusts, and monopolies. Now, where shall we begin to find out that fact with nothing before us but the charge? I submit a man who impeaches another ought to submit affidavits or state his evidence specifically from which we can find out something about the charges. Most of these charges are general. I believe the most specific one is in connection with the securing of an indictment against Ray Tanzer before the grand jury. My friend from Illinois need not worry if this resolution goes to the Committee on the Judiciary. He need not worry about its being reported back if there is anything shown to make a prima facie case to justify it. The committee never has suppressed a resolution of impeachment and never will if there is anything to support it. The question is whether or not we shall take this resolution out of the ordinary course that has been pursued for 13 years or whether or not we shall follow the method of procedure which has not been adopted since the Florida impeachment trial. It makes no difference to the committee which you do. You realize, however, that as it involves about 30 charges, and it will take I do not know how long, because we would not know at present where to start. We feel that even before starting we would have to ask our friend Mr. BUCHANAN to give us affidavits or names from which we could get a start, and that is as little as the Judiciary Committee should be asked to do. It is for the House to say whether it will take the regular course pursued in similar cases during the last 13 years.

Mr. NELSON rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement in regard to the argument of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota. The statement made by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee is that it makes no difference whether this resolution be passed by the House or be referred to the committee. I am surprised at the chairman of the Judiciary Committee making such a statement, because there is the greatest difference. In the first place, I went before this committee. I was not thoroughly familiar with what was required to be done. I thought the two things were—first, to see whether the charges were impeachable; and the other thing was to point out sources of information, different witnesses, and so forth; and I supposed that the committee would call in those witnesses to find out if exhibits might be secured, and affidavits secured, and witnesses brought before them. Now, what is the difference? I think, in the first place, it is unreasonable to say that there is no difference, because if you get voluntary witnesses they naturally come at their own convenience, but if you get the power to subpœna witnesses, you can get them at any time that you can find them. On the other hand, in this case, as in many others, it is necessary to secure documentary evidence—that is, matters of public record. Now, what chance have I got with the powers that lie behind this man in his criminal acts in office in New York to be able to get that evidence that is necessary to prove these charges? Why, gentlemen, it is ridiculous to take such a position, that there is no difference in what course it takes.

Mr. WEBB. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I will.

Mr. WEBB. I meant to say, "personally," that so far as the committee having any personal feeling is concerned it made no difference which course the House pursues.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I thought the gentleman's answer was that there was not any difference that it made to me.

Mr. WEBB. No; that it made no difference to the committee which course the House pursued.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I did not understand it that way.

Mr. WEBB. I wanted to let the House know that whichever course it pursues will not be objectionable to the committee.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understood the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina, to say that the only name mentioned in these impeachment charges was Rae Tanzer. I never read it until this morning, but if I recollect there was a man by the name of McCullough, one by the name of Safford, and one by the name of Osborne. Is that true?

Mr. WEBB. They were all in connection with the indictment in the Tanzer case, I think; mentioned in the indictment of Rae Tanzer.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I thought the gentleman said there were only three cases of a personal character mentioned in the impeachment charges. I understood there were four or five.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he will not be willing to ask unanimous consent, while he has charge of the floor, and under circumstances by which he will not lose control of the floor, to insert an amendment in his resolution providing that after the word "testimony," on the fourth line from the bottom of page 4, the following shall be added: "On all of the charges which in the opinion of the committee constitute impeachable charges." That will make the resolution of the gentleman to read so that the committee shall take testimony upon all of those.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I will be glad to add that, and ask unanimous consent. If there is no objection, I ask unanimous consent now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to insert in the resolution certain words which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to amend my resolution by inserting the following.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after the word "testimony," in the fourth line from the bottom of page 4, the following language:

"On all of the charges which in the opinion of the committee constitute impeachable charges."

So that the resolution as amended will read:

"And in making this investigation the said committee is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony on all of the charges which in the opinion of the committee constitute impeachable charges, employ a clerk and stenographer"—

And so forth.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Without objection, they are inserted in the resolution.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I want to speak further in regard to my position. I have not the resources to secure information that I honestly and sincerely believe can be obtained if this authority is given. A great deal of this information will take the power of this House to secure.

How much time does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] want?

Mr. NELSON. About three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of an impeachment of this kind is to promote the ends of justice. Having served on a special committee to look into the charges against Judge Wright, I have been impressed with the thought that we ought to be very careful, indeed, before we start the machinery of impeachment in motion. First, we ought to find out whether or not these charges are impeachable. They can be easily stated in language such as we have heard to-day, but when presented to the committee it carefully inquires of the Member what the charges are, to see whether, for instance, an officer has simply used his discretion adversely to some one's interest. If it is merely a matter of discretion, of course it would not be impeachable. We also ask gentlemen who make charges to give us some facts. They stand upon this floor and solemnly impeach a Federal official. They should be in possession of some facts, at least, that they can give to the committee, and all that the committee requires is a prima facie showing. We say to them, "You have impeached this man. What is the important charge that you bring against him?" And we say, "What facts have you now that you want us to investigate?" If we find that he has no facts and can not give us any, and simply refers to Tom, Dick, and Harry, shall we set the great machinery of impeachment going against a Federal official who may be perfectly innocent? I do not refer to this case. Surely a Member, I say, who impeaches a Federal official on the floor of this House should have some facts, prima facie facts, within his knowledge that the committee can consider. I do not know whether we should take it out of the general precedent because of the gentleman being involved in this matter. So far as the members of the committee are personally concerned, we do not care what action you take. If you wish to take the responsibility off our hands, very well and good. We will do the best we can; but we warn you that you are making a precedent that is dangerous. Any gentleman can get up here and make general charges and enlarge upon them and ask that we at once proceed to investigate. But bear in mind that the investigation involves expense; it takes up the time of the committee, it takes up the time of Congress, and it may do irreparable injury to Federal officials. The best practice is to let the committee ascertain whether the charges are impeachable or not and look into some of the facts before you set this machinery going.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the work of investigation is bound to be delayed unless the House gives authority, because, as I have stated before, they can only secure these facts of their own free will.

Now, I want to point to one of the cases, and it is not my purpose to reflect upon the Judiciary Committee. But take the Dayton case, for instance, in which impeachment charges were preferred on June 12, 1914, and on February 9, 1915, a resolution giving power to subpœna witnesses, and so forth, was passed at their request.

Now, it has not been my purpose nor it is not now my desire to in any way hamper the committee or to interfere with their discretion. I have consented at the suggestion of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] to the amendment that has been read there, and to leave it with the committee as to the charges that are impeachable. I am willing that this committee will have the discretion that it seems some would desire to infer that I want to take away from them, and which it is stated by my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] would be a dangerous precedent. This is the usual way in which to consider resolutions of this sort. It was not until recent years that it was referred to the committee. And in about every case you will find there was delay, and no matter how you feel about this, whether you think my position is correct or not, no matter which side of the question you feel in sympathy with, you certainly are not justified in wanting unnecessary delay or the committee hampered by not having the power to bring witnesses whether they see fit to come or not.

In this case, Mr. Speaker, I have reasons to believe, on the information that I have, that many of the witnesses who would come here, if subpœnaed to come, will not come voluntarily, because they fear the powers that be in New York if they are put in the position of being volunteers to come here, or come voluntarily.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Seventeen minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I yield three minutes of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise simply to ask a few questions of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, if he will be so kind as to permit me. As I understand the gentleman, who is chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, that committee has no authority to subpœna witnesses to come before it unless this resolution is passed. Am I correct?

Mr. WEBB. That is correct.

Mr. HENSLEY. Now, then, if this resolution is passed, does that in any sense curtail your discretion?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HENSLEY. Can you subpœna just as many witnesses and just as few witnesses as the committee sees fit to summon to inquire into these charges?

Mr. WEBB. We will have to investigate every charge set out unless, in our opinion, the charge is not impeachable.

Mr. HENSLEY. Unless it is impeachable in your opinion?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HENSLEY. Then you will have that discretion?

Mr. WEBB. If this amendment of Mr. GARRETT'S is adopted, we will have.

Mr. HENSLEY. The amendment has already been adopted, as I understand.

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HENSLEY. Then, if this resolution is passed it in no sense curtails the discretionary power vested in your committee? Is that true?

Mr. WEBB. Only in the sense of not investigating those charges that are not impeachable.

Mr. HENSLEY. I understood the gentleman to say a few moments ago that if you considered that some of the charges are not impeachable you need not pursue them further. Is that correct?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; under Mr. GARRETT's amendment.

Mr. HENSLEY. Then the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] is absolutely helpless unless he brings these witnesses here at his own expense. Is not that true?

Mr. WEBB. No. I will express my opinion on that in this way, that if this resolution goes to the committee on the day after to-morrow, the committee would be able to report back a resolution to investigate the impeachable charges if a prima facie case is made; but as to those charges that are not impeachable, there is nothing in connection with them that the committee could consider.

Mr. HENSLEY. The gentleman now says that if these charges are impeachable as they stand, and they are referred to the committee, and that committee summons the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] before it, and he states that he believes those charge to be true, a report will be made by the committee of this or another resolution on day after to-morrow. Why not act upon them now?

Mr. WEBB. You can act upon it now if you want to. I said if the House wants to take the responsibility for that course of action, the House can do so. If the whole matter is referred to the Judiciary Committee and Mr. BUCHANAN will come before us and give some basis for his charges and suggest witnesses from whom information may be obtained, the committee will, no doubt, act promptly and ask the House for authority to investigate such charges as prima facie seem to be true.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me five minutes?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I do not care to yield further time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I will yield to my colleague from Illinois five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, one of the very highest powers which this House has is the power of impeachment, to take away an office from a man and to destroy his reputation; a power which ought not to be exercised lightly, but which ought to be exercised when proper occasion arises.

Now, on the 14th of December my colleague [Mr. BUCHANAN] preferred impeachment charges against this man, whose name, after hearing it read many times, I do not now recall. We had a two or three weeks' holiday. There have been but few days since the original impeachment charges were preferred when there was opportunity for the committee to give consideration to the proposition. While my colleague [Mr. BUCHANAN] says honestly that he does not intend to reflect upon the committee; while the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB], the chairman of the committee, says he would not take it as a reflection on the committee, still, if the House now, while this matter is pending before the Committee on the Judiciary, takes it out of the hands of the committee, all history and time will say that the House has seriously reflected upon the honesty of the Committee on the Judiciary.

I am not in favor of casting that reflection upon a great committee of this House. In these high proceedings we ought to be most careful to preserve order. We insist upon these officials performing their functions orderly, and we ought to perform our functions orderly.

It has been suggested that because of proceedings in this district against my colleague the situation is taken out of the ordinary. Perhaps that is true. But it seems to me that if an indictment has been returned in this district against our colleague because he preferred impeachment charges here, that is the most serious proposition involved—a proposition which is not covered by the resolution under consideration. If there be any reason to suppose that because a Member of this House has preferred impeachment charges against any district attorney in the United States, that district attorney has prostituted his office for the purpose of revenge in the form of an indictment against that Member of Congress, that ought to be investigated; and if that be the case, I hope, if the Committee on the Judiciary ever makes a report upon what is now pending before it, or makes a report upon this resolution, if it be referred to the committee, that the committee will ask power to investigate that particular matter. If there be anything that we ought to preserve, it is our rights, under the Constitution, to exercise our jurisdiction on the floor of this House without being tainted by legal proceedings in criminal courts through the aid, fraudulently, of Federal officials. I hope the whole matter may be referred to the committee, as it will be if the House has confidence in its Judiciary Committee. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the argument just made by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is unworthy of him. It is a deceptive argument, and has ever been used in every body that I have ever had any connection with, that a body that creates a committee or an office, if it sees fit for any reason to take other action than what it did when it first referred a matter to the committee, there is no reflection on that committee. Committees are created for the purpose of carrying out the work of the body that creates them, and certainly the creator can ask the creature, or, if necessary, instruct, or otherwise, to do the thing now, or at any other time, without any unnecessary reflection on it. It certainly would handicap any body of men or any assembly that would take any other position in regard to the matter. The chairman of the Judiciary Committee stated before ever I offered this that the committee would have no objection—I will withdraw that remark, and will say that I got information which led me to believe that the committee would feel in no way offended if I revised or amended my charges on impeachment.

Now, if this House want the committee that they have created to do the things that the House want done, and done without delay and without being hampered in doing that work, then the House will pass favorably upon my motion. If they want delay, and to have the committee hampered by not having authority to act, why, then refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. How much time does the gentleman from Connecticut want?

Mr. TILSON. Two minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not always agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN]. Perhaps I should not be able to agree with all he has said to-day; but I agree with him and I think the House agrees with him in his main contention that the very serious charges which he has preferred here should be thoroughly investigated. I believe there is no question in regard to the feeling of this House about that. If a very small part of the charges made by the gentleman are well founded, there should be the most thorough and complete investigation. In my opinion, nothing short of such an investigation will satisfy the membership of this House.

But I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] wherein he will lose—and, in fact, whether he will not gain much for his investigation—if he allows this resolution to go to the Judiciary Committee, with the understanding clearly indicated here to-day that the committee, as in all such cases, would require only a prima facie case to be made; and that being done, it will report the resolution back here and ask for the full power which the gentleman asks? Would not the gentleman gain rather than lose by such a procedure? I am as much interested as anybody in seeing the charges thoroughly investigated. Charges like these he has brought, if made against any judicial officer, should without question be investigated, and I do not believe there is the slightest doubt that if this resolution is referred to the Judiciary Committee, after satisfying themselves, as I feel upon the information submitted the members of that committee will soon be satisfied, they will without delay ask this House for the necessary power to make the investigation. While I am with the gentleman in his main purpose, it seems to me he will lose nothing and that he will, in fact, gain strength by asking that the resolution be referred to the Judiciary Committee in the usual way. If there should appear any disposition on the part of that committee to strangle the resolution, then there will be time and the inclination, if I mistake not, for this House to exercise its undoubted powers.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I feel that I have given good and sufficient reasons for the passage of this resolution at this time. I have tried to make it clear that I do not take this action for the purpose of reflecting in any way upon the Judiciary Committee, and I am certain that there is no reflection on that committee. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to refer the resolution to the Judiciary Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I raise the point of order that that is not in order.

The SPEAKER. As there was some squabble about that some time ago, the Chair will clear it all up at once.

There are two rules about the previous question and the motion to commit, which at first blush seem to be in conflict, but the Chair thinks there is no conflict. Rule XVII, section 1, provides:

PREVIOUS QUESTION.

1. There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of Members voting, if a quorum be present, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered. The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill to its passage or rejection. It shall be in order, pending the motion for, or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee.

It has been decided that that applies to House resolutions as well as to the others.

Clause 4 of Rule XVI, which relates to joint resolutions, was the thing that misled some of us in the beginning. That is as follows:

4. When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lay on the table, for the previous question (which motions shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to amend, or postpone indefinitely, which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order; and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day at the same stage of the question. After the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of a bill or joint resolution, one motion to recommit shall be in order, and the Speaker shall give preference in recognition for such purpose to a Member who is opposed to the bill or joint resolution.

Now, that subdivision of Rule XVI applies to bills and joint resolutions, and if it applied here it would cut out this House resolution, but Rule XVII lets this motion in. The question is on the motion to refer this resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 133, noes 71.

Accordingly the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 2497. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between Anoka and Hennepin Counties, in the State of Minnesota.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had, on January 12, 1916, approved and signed bill of the following title:

H. R. 3681. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Tulsa, Okla.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 2409. An act to authorize the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at the city of Steubenville, Jefferson County, Ohio.

THE PHILIPPINES (S. DOC. NO. 242).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the report of Brig. Gen. Frank McIntyre, Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, upon his recent trip to the Philippine Islands.

Inasmuch as the bill extending a greater measure of self-government to the Filipinos is now pending in Congress, it is recommended that this report be printed as a congressional document.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 12, 1916.

COAL AND OIL LEASES.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the committees, and when the Committee on Public Lands was reached,

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 406.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma calls up the bill H. R. 406, and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. CRISP, will take the chair.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 406, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 406, to authorize the exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] made an attack on the Democratic administration. In his remarks he charged that the Democratic Party had failed in everything and had not kept its promises to the people. Of course, this was the gentleman's usual campaign speech. The country knows that the Democratic administration has not failed, and the future will determine that question in its favor.

The gentleman assails the President, the Attorney General, and the Secretary of the Treasury. He undertakes to prove his charges by quoting extracts from an interview given out by a former governor of the State of Texas. Let me say to him that the witness whom he has called has not the power to discredit a Democratic administration in the State of Texas, and that when the votes are counted next December, after Mr. Wilson has been renominated, Texas will give the Democratic nominee the usual majority of something over 200,000. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman has seized this opportunity of quoting from an alleged Democratic governor of Texas for the purpose of discrediting a national administration, and has inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an interview given out by that gentleman in order that he and the managers of the Republican Party may distribute under his frank millions of copies of this wholesale indictment of a Democratic President, Democratic Senators, and Democratic Representatives; and also the good and salutary laws we have passed. How many Democrats in this House to-day would vote to repeal the great constructive measures placed in the statutes by the Democratic Party? Not one!

Let me quote a line or two from the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He says:

I am trying to argue that the Democratic Party has been an utter and complete failure in the Nation; and if I was given time I would like to read some expressions from a Democratic governor in the State of Texas, who elucidates this subject delightfully. I am going to ask unanimous consent to put his remarks in the RECORD along with my speech.

Here he summons his witness to bring discredit upon the Democratic national administration.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. For a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Gov. Colquitt was governor of the State at the time he issued his statement that the Democratic administration was a complete failure?

Mr. HENRY. He was.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And in high favor with the people of Texas?

Mr. HENRY. I would not want to reply to that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He had stood with the Texas Rangers and worked with them all along the border line when the administration was not doing much to put down the outrages on the Mexican frontier?

Mr. HENRY. The governor stood for that and a great deal more, but the Wilson administration was doing everything that could be done and should be done by any administration.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In view of the massacre of American citizens in Mexico yesterday, was not Gov. Colquitt right in his denunciation of the Democratic administration?

Mr. HENRY. No; the administration will attend to that. Would the gentleman from Pennsylvania vote to invade Mexico to-day and intervene and plunge us into war with Mexico?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Seventeen American citizens laid down their lives in Mexico yesterday, and it would seem that Gov. Colquitt was right and that the administration was wrong in not properly protecting lives in Mexico?

Mr. HENRY. That is the report; but suppose it was true, that does not justify an invasion of Mexico. Would the gentleman from Pennsylvania vote to intervene in Mexico and bring the two countries face to face in war?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Up to the time of the close of the Republican administration we did not have to do that, and we maintained friendly relations with that country. We did not invade Mexican soil, as was done by the Wilson administration at Vera Cruz, much to the discredit of the administration.

Mr. HENRY. Would you vote to invade Mexico to-day?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On the presentation of the facts I would consider the matter very seriously. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HENRY. I thank the gentleman for his candor. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman concluded his remarkable speech in this way:

Gov. Colquitt, while governor of the State, made a declaration which ought to be of interest to all Texans as it will be to the people of the United States. It relates to the utter incompetency of the Democratic administration at Washington and its failure to live up to any of its platform pledges.

And then the gentleman proceeds to insert the interview given out by Gov. Colquitt, then governor of Texas. This interview was given out a little more than a year ago, and it is headed in this way:

GOV. COLQUITT DECLARES PRESIDENT A FAILURE—EXECUTIVE OF LONE STAR STATE DENOUNCES MEN WHO ARE AT HEAD OF THE GOVERNMENT—MEXICAN POLICY ASSAILED.

The gentleman's speech had only one effect on this side. Democrats are ashamed that a Democratic governor of any State would engage in such a wholesale indictment against his own administration in power.

Mr. Chairman, the fidelity with which Wilson has kept faith with the American people entitles him to their confidence. He has been assailed from some quarters, it is true, without just cause. But notwithstanding these assaults from standpat Republicans and standpat Democrats, he retains the confidence of the voters.

The former governor of my State, Mr. Colquitt, with a burst of standpat Republican doctrine in his holiday interview, just revived by the astute Representative, Mr. MOORE, from Pennsylvania, brought the blush of shame to all true Democrats in thus attacking the great measures enacted by a Democratic Congress and approved by President Wilson. This holiday interview so glibly read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by the able standpat Republican from Pennsylvania, Mr. J. HAMPTON MOORE, is for the purpose of having it franked out to the country and to discredit a great Democratic President by the assaults of an alleged Democratic governor of Texas. Amongst other things in that deplorable interview, Mr. Colquitt said:

The Wilson administration has been the greatest failure in the history of the Presidency.

In my judgment, it is far better than those of Taft, Roosevelt, and other Republican Presidents, and should be sustained by the country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I know how zealous the gentleman from Texas is in the cause of his constituency. His name and fame are known throughout the State of Texas, and rightly so, but he ought to permit me to say that I entirely agree with Gov. Colquitt, if he made the statement that the administrations of Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Taft were superior to that of Mr. Wilson.

Mr. HENRY. I understand that, and that is the reason I am trying to apologize for a governor making such reckless statements. It is regrettable that he is found in the reactionary stand-pat Republican ranks and has become the "yoke mate" of the stand-pat Republican from Pennsylvania. He should be in Democratic company.

Again, he said:

The administration's foreign policy has been imbecile. * * * Wilson and Bryan have stood by encouraging one gang of bandits after another, while people were being butchered all over Mexico. * * * The propertied interests of Mexico and the big exploiters of Mexican resources have got control of the situation absolutely, and these same interests have got the ear of our Government at Washington.

Why, even the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] does not believe that—that Wilson and Bryan were corrupt and that "the property interests of Mexico" were debauching those great officials. Yet here is such charge, which he reads into the RECORD, to be sent broadcast over the country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would not say corrupt, but I think Gov. Colquitt was politically accurate.

Mr. HENRY. Well, if the gentleman is indorsing Colquitt and Colquitt is indorsing him and his party all down the line, we will have to let it go at that. The ex-governor and this Republican Representative from Pennsylvania could easily run on the same platform, as they embrace the same doctrine and principles.

In simple truth, current history shows that President Wilson kept this country out of war with Mexico and has aided in bringing about order and peace there and should be praised for his course. This record warrants congratulations from his countrymen.

AN ATTACK AGAINST THE UNDERWOOD TARIFF LAW.

In his interview the ex-governor attacks the Underwood Tariff Act and contends that it should be repealed. Time will show this tariff law to be the wisest and best revenue legislation since the Walker Act. When the war in Europe is past, this tariff legislation will justify itself, and no good Democrat will urge its repeal. Mr. Colquitt is joining with the special interests, trust masters, and tariff barons, and really belongs in their rank.

ASSAILS THE CLAYTON ANTITRUST ACT.

This same ex-governor in his statement denounced the Clayton Antitrust Act and said it was a "barefaced fake" and played into the hands of the Standard Oil and other trusts. He knew better. It contains many valuable provisions, and, besides, carries in its terms the demands of organized labor and the "new freedom" for the laboring classes. It is truly one of the great Democratic measures and should remain in the statutes inviolate.

And not only would no Democrat vote to repeal it to-day, but not a Republican on that side of the House will agree to repeal the Clayton antitrust law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman say that within three months the majority on his side of the House will not be asking an opportunity to repeal a very important provision of the Underwood Tariff Act—the sugar clause?

Mr. HENRY. That is not the question. Again, he assails the Federal reserve act. This is one of the valuable and far-reaching laws enacted by the Democracy, a long step in the right direction, and when supplemented by a rural-credits act will be the masterpiece of financial legislation. It should remain intact and be completed by further legislation in behalf of the farming classes. The assault against it by iconoclastic critics should be repelled by good Democrats.

And finally the ex-governor, in a storm of wrath, said:

I am fully convinced the national election of 1916 will end the Democratic régime. The policies of the Democratic administration have wholly failed either to curb monopolies or lower the cost of living for the people, and they have materially contributed to deprive millions of wage earners of employment.

This criticism by anyone claiming to be a Democrat is unwarranted and can not be justified. These great and substantial laws written with Democratic hands have received the approval of the country and should stand as monuments to the wisdom and patriotism of the Democratic Party with Woodrow Wilson at the head. Only the rankest reactionaries and standpat Republicans pretend to share Mr. Colquitt's views.

Standing in my place to-day I defend all these great acts now on the statutes. Wilson should be triumphantly renominated and deserves to win in November. These assaults of men giving aid and comfort to stand-pat Republicans and their aides in the Democratic Party can not injure his fame and notable achievements. Wilson is a great Democrat and deserves the support of all real Democrats. The ex-governor belongs in the stand-pat Republican Party with Penrose, Root, Foraker, and others. In his tirade against Democracy he opposes everything Democratic, reviles the deeds of Democrats in the Senate and House by whose votes and acts these measures became law, and, in company with his comrade and strong ally, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], in the regular stand-pat faith, qualifies himself as a true Republican reactionary and arch enemy to the Democratic Party and its splendid record of achievement under Woodrow Wilson. The attack of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and his witness just summoned from Texas will utterly fail to injure the Democratic Party.

Let the country understand that the ex-governor in his lamentable interview does not voice the sentiments of Texas Democrats and Texas people. They spurn his inexcusable and unwarranted course against our party in power.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. HENRY. I yield for a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of course, I do not wish to interfere in a fair senatorial fight in the State of Texas, but I ask the gentleman from Texas whether in his testimonial of

Mr. McAdoo, as well as the President of the United States, he feels that they are also responsible for the rise in the price of cotton from 6½ cents a pound, at which it stood when the gentleman from Texas was so valiantly fighting the cotton battle and seeking help from the Government, which the administration did not see fit to give?

Mr. HENRY. During this last year the Secretary of the Treasury deposited $15,000,000 of the public funds in the banks of the South to be loaned at a low rate of interest to the cotton producers, and by that act of his raised the price of cotton and kept the speculators from robbing the farmers of the South. Cotton was selling at 11 and 12 cents a pound last fall, because the Secretary of the Treasury did this very thing, when the gentleman was trying to prevent it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is true that I did try to prevent the Secretary from lending Government money in the manner proposed by the gentleman from Texas. I did not think it wise or necessary. But I ask this, Was not the $15,000,000 deposited only after the Secretary of the Treasury had raked the country West and South with a fine-tooth comb to find bankers willing to take the money in order to loan it to the farmers.

Mr. HENRY. Oh, no; he did not deposit as much as he should have deposited. I suppose he did the best he could. If I could have had my way about that, I would have said that the half billion dollar loan should not be made to the allies, because it is strictly unneutral. The Federal reserve machinery should not be used to perfect that loan. That money should be used at home. A part of it should have been sent to the South last year to finance the cotton crop, in order that the farmer might hold his cotton. It could be loaned to purchase and improve homes here in America. Instead of financing the allies, let us start cotton ships and send our cotton abroad to neutral ports. Let us remain neutral. If England hinders our legitimate commerce, let Congress put an embargo on arms. If she does not vacate and abandon her orders in council making cotton contraband and unfetter our commerce, Congress should pass acts of retaliation and reprisal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair will state that he is informed that the House yesterday by unanimous consent closed general debate on this bill with six hours, three hours on a side, the gentleman from Oklahoma to control three hours and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] three hours.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, Uncle Sam has been the greatest landowner and proprietor in all history, and in disposing of his domain the Congress has passed many important laws, the most important and far-reaching of all having been the homestead law, which made it possible to establish homes on the public domain, and under which a larger area of land has passed into private ownership than has been disposed of under all the other land laws since it was enacted. We passed other land laws of very great importance, laws that have had a very profound influence upon the country and its development, but I am inclined to the opinion that, taking into consideration what may be its effect in the future, the bill now before us may be considered, next to the homestead bill, the most important piece of land legislation that the House of Representatives has ever considered. It is important, first, in the area and the value of the land which it seeks to legislate for—coal, oil, gas, and phosphate lands. There are to-day of the public lands of the United States 50,000,000 acres which have been reserved as coal lands, and of that 50,000,000 acres 19,000,000, in round figures, have been appraised and certified and classified as coal lands. Nineteen million acres is an area larger than South Carolina; it is an area about two-thirds as large as Ohio. Those areas have been classified at a total value of about $777,000,000. The lands of the public domain which have up to date been withdrawn as oil lands constitute an area of 4,774,000 acres, an area approximately the size of New Hampshire, New Jersey, or Massachusetts.

The lands which have been up to date withdrawn as oil lands constitute but a very small portion of the public land on which oil will eventually be discovered and which will eventually be brought under this legislation. Nobody knows what the value of these lands may be or the value of the oil they may produce, but the probability is that they contain oil enough to continually increase our oil output for an indefinite period. Phosphate lands are treated of in this bill and provision made for their leasing. Up to date, 2,666,000 acres, in round figures, have been withdrawn as phosphate land. That is two-thirds the area of Connecticut and about four-fifths of the area of Maryland. We have withdrawn as phosphate lands some lands that will never be found valuable for phosphate; lands which do not contain phosphate deposits of sufficient richness to warrant their being worked. The area affected is, as the figures I have quoted indicate, very great. The values affected are tremendous.

The State which I have the honor to represent on this floor has and will have, in my opinion, a greater interest in this legislation than any other State in the Union, and it is because of that great interest that I have given this question much study, and am pretty persistent, as some gentlemen think, in presenting my views with regard to this legislation.

Of a total of over 19,000,000 acres of classified coal lands in the country, 7,500,000 acres are in Wyoming; and of the total of $777,000,000 of classified value, $387,000,000, or more than half, is within the State of Wyoming. It is true that of the withdrawn oil lands we have something less than one-fourth, but the probability is—and that is an opinion held by those who I think are best informed—that eventually more land will be prospected and developed in Wyoming as oil land than in any other State in the Union. Of the 2,666,000 acres of phosphate land, 1,182,000 acres are in Wyoming, or nearly half. These vast areas within my State affected by this bill are in the aggregate nearly double the area of any of the New England States except Maine. The value placed upon them run into the hundreds of millions of dollars, so we are tremendously interested in this legislation.

But it is not altogether the area affected by the legislation or the value of the products in that area that makes this legislation important. As a matter of fact, its importance is, to a greater extent, due to the profound change it proposes and the altered conditions which it will establish rather than in the areas and values affected. We have always held that Uncle Sam was the proprietor in trust for the American people, and until we reached the mountain West all our legislation provided for a speedy transfer of title to the individual, and so we sold for about $1.25 an acre all of the tremendously rich agricultural land of Illinois, with its magnificent coal veins. We disposed of the mineral wealth of Missouri under the homestead law free, or under preemption laws, at $2.50, or under the soldiers' rights at approximately $1.25 an acre. Even when we began in 1872 to dispose of our coal lands under the coal-land law, the price placed upon those lands was purely nominal—$20 an acre within 15 miles of a railroad and $10 an acre at a greater distance from a railway. The idea has been, the thought has been, to pass these lands into private ownership, to make them taxable, to build up our Commonwealths by giving individuals the opportunity to develop and by giving the States the opportunity to tax.

I have thought at times the principal reason why the legislation proposed establishing changes in our land system has not been satisfactory to the people who are to be affected by it was due to the fact that some of those who had the most to do with it have paid little attention to the views of those who are to be the most affected by it. However you may view it, you can not get away from the fact that this is a profound and far-reaching change in our system of land legislation, and that it will have the effect of profoundly changing the character of our communities.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I do not recall just when the State of Wyoming was admitted into the Union. The gentleman, of course, knows.

Mr. MONDELL. Eighteen hundred and ninety.

Mr. MANN. Twenty-five years ago?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The State of Wyoming has not, during that time, in population at least, made a very rapid growth.

Mr. MONDELL. No; it has not in actual numbers, though the increase has been steady and the percentage of increase has been good.

Mr. MANN. Well, the old land laws were in effect in Wyoming?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; that is true.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think the passage of this bill will make the growth less rapid in Wyoming in the future, if this bill becomes a law, than it has been in the past in the development of these natural resources?

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman ask me whether in my opinion the development will be less rapid in the future than the past,

Mr. MANN. Less rapid than it would be——

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I think if this legislation was placed on the statute books just as it is now that it would be a calamity, and I think it would retard the development very seriously. But the gentleman from Illinois understands this, that so far as I am concerned I personally reconciled myself to this general class of legislation some time ago. I am not opposing the purpose but the plan. The point I am trying to make now, if the gentleman will allow me, is this, that the legislation is a very important departure from our past policies; that it will have a profound effect, not only industrially but politically; and that therefore those people who are to be affected by it should have fair consideration in the presentation of their views relative to what the character of the legislation should be. For one, I feel that the people who are to be the most affected have had very little consideration in the presentation of their views as to the character of the legislation, up to this time at least.

Now, let us consider for a moment what the effect of this kind of legislation would be.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield a moment, I will say that, so far as the presentation of views in this House is concerned, I do not think that any cause was ever more ably presented than the gentleman from Wyoming has consistently and persistently presented his side of the propositions that we have been acting upon in the last two years in relation to these matters.

Mr. MONDELL. I thank the gentleman from Illinois for those kind words.

Now, if the gentleman will do me the honor to follow the arguments that I hope to make, now and when the bill shall be under discussion, in order that I may have the opportunity of appealing to his most sound and excellent judgment as to features of this bill, then I shall be even more gratified than I have been by the very kindly expressions of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I never have failed to follow the argument of the gentleman, so far as listening is concerned. I do not always follow the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. No; that is true——

Mr. MANN. But I listen carefully.

Mr. MONDELL. From our standpoint, that is unfortunately true, and I have found it hard to understand just how it came about, because those of us who have lived amid mines and mining and oil development and on public lands and in the vicinity of public lands and have witnessed their development think we really ought to know more about the situation and the application of laws than those who have not had that privilege, or misfortune, whichever way you may view it. And, furthermore, and rather more important, I think gentlemen ought at least to give us credit for good intentions and an honest desire to do that which will be for the general public interest.

Now, no man from the West—and if the gentleman from Illinois will give me his attention to this statement—no man from the West, so far as I know, has been especially importuned by anyone or any particular interests to take this view or that view of the details of this legislation. Certainly I have not. Those people who are operating mines in my State take little or no active interest in this legislation. I can recall but one coal-mine operator in the State who ever discussed the matter with me or I with him. They are perfectly content with the present situation, and I do not know that as operators on private lands they especially object to the leasing of public lands, particularly if the provisions of such a law are drastic and trying. Their selfish interest would be to have the bill as harsh in its provisions as possible; and yet I have heard few expressions of opinion from them on the subject, one way or the other.

Now, as to the oil portion of the bill, except where parties have some claims to oil lands which they desire to have in one way or another protected by one section of this bill, the relief section, other than the expressions of opinion of such people, I have had few expressions of opinion from among my people as to the details of the oil legislation. In my early youth I helped develop coal mines. I also prospected for and drilled for oil over a very considerable territory. I never found it in paying quantities—a very common experience. So that in addition to the interest I have on behalf of the people I represent, and those who are to occupy that territory in the future, I have had some practical experience with regard to the character of the operations which will be carried on under this legislation.

Mr. EMERSON. Why do you uphold leasing?

Mr. MONDELL. For various reasons I hope to explain. I do object to many of the provisions of this bill very strongly.

Mr. EMERSON. Now, what ones in particular?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I expect to cover the details of the bill when we reach it. There are so many features and phases to a thing of this sort that it would be impossible in the space of an hour to even catalogue, much less discuss, the various features of the measure; there are an infinite variety of provisions in the bill. Our people have been opposed to leasing, just as the American people elsewhere have been opposed to it. Our people have taken the position that we should develop along the lines of the development elsewhere over the country. They have been afraid of leasing legislation. They have been fearful of the enormous bureaucracies that would be developed under it. They have been fearful that the small man, the man unable to keep an attorney in Washington, would have a hard time doing business with the agents of the Federal Government 1,800 to 3,000 miles from the seat of government. They have been fearful of the effect on their States and communities of reserving indefinitely from taxation exceedingly valuable property. They have questioned the effect of such legislation from an infinite variety of viewpoints—its effect upon their industrial development, the effect on their political development, the effect on the character of the commonwealth. And, if you think there may not be some reason for the questioning that has arisen in their minds, imagine, if you can, all of the great coal development of Pennsylvania to-day under Federal leases. And Pennsylvania is within half a day's ride of the Capital, and one can reach the seat of government and power quickly from that State. Some of these other States are four or five days away. Imagine all of Pennsylvania's enormous coal deposits under Federal leases. Imagine all of the great oil output of Texas under Federal leases. Imagine the mineral industries in any of your States, all under Federal laws, with an army of Federal officers, with the power to tax as he sees fit in the hands of a single Federal official, and you will have some idea how profoundly far-reaching this measure is.

Well, in spite of all these fears there were some of us who a number of years ago began to give very serious consideration to this question of leasing. For one thing it seemed to be inevitable, and perhaps that had more to do with our conversion than anything else. The General Land Office advanced the price of our coal lands from $10 or $20 an acre to as high as $500 an acre, and thus practically put an end to new coal operations. They began to withdraw vast areas of our oil lands, and thus made it impossible for us to develop them. Under the withdrawal act practically all of the lands known to contain phosphate of value had been withdrawn from public ownership, and it looked as though we were to have a leasing of these nonmetalliferous minerals forced on us whether we wanted it or not, as the only escape from a condition which rendered development impossible, to wit, a condition under which coal lands were appraised so high that practically no one could buy them, and under which oil lands were withdrawn as rapidly as people tried to develop them, and under which all phosphate lands were withdrawn from acquisition under the land laws.

In this state of affairs some of us began to discuss the conditions under which leasing might be made tolerable. I began the discussion of the matter before my constituents some years ago in campaigns, and calling attention to the intolerable situation existing, and expressed the hope that eventually Federal leasing might ripen into State leases, but suggesting that in the meantime it was the part of wisdom for us to begin to work out a system under which leasing legislation could be provided which would not retard development, and not do our States and our communities very great and grave injustice by depriving us of revenue.

One of the very first things to be considered in connection with a departure from the system of private ownership and the adoption of a system of Federal leasing is the effect upon the local revenues, and how we are to meet the losses of revenue by taxation that arise out of a leasing system.

When lands are sold they become taxable as to all their values, and in all of the older States all the affairs of government are carried on and conducted from the receipts of taxation. But when the Federal Government over vast areas enters upon a system of perpetual lease under royalty the community loses all opportunity and power to tax land values.

All the coal land in my State has not been classified as yet, but the classification values up to date are $387,000,000; and by the passage of this legislation property that might eventually be assesssed at that sum is lost to the State as a source of income based on the assessment of the land value.

What are we to do under those circumstances? Great areas are now untaxed. Nearly 50 per cent of the Commonwealth that I represent is still public domain. We must build roads past and over and beyond those great areas. We must educate the children that live on ranches and farms scattered here and there over that great area. We must maintain State, county, and municipal governments.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Are not leasehold interests taxable as well?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman asks whether leasehold interests are not taxable. I will discuss that matter a little later, if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SWITZER. The gentleman has said that there is a good deal of coal land and oil land already developed under the leasing system.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has misunderstood. I have not said that.

Mr. SWITZER. Is there any oil?

Mr. MONDELL. Not under the Federal system; none at all.

Mr. SWITZER. Is there none in the United States?

Mr. MONDELL. There is one coal mine in my State which, owing to a peculiar condition which arose with regard to the title, was put under Federal lease. There are a very few oil wells in the United States which, owing to conflicts with withdrawal acts, were by an act which we passed last winter put under temporary royalty, but otherwise there are no Federal leases.

Mr. SWITZER. The gentleman has given special study to this subject, and I would like to ascertain from him whether the Government, through its leasing system, has ever yet derived any rental or revenue from the leases over and above the expenses of caretakers and trench diggers, and so on?

Mr. MONDELL. It has not, because it has not leased. But if the Federal Government does lease these great areas, it will eventually secure a very large revenue from those sources. If the land is workable and leases are taken, the income will eventually be large, particularly in view of the fact that under this legislation the Secretary of the Interior can fix any royalty that he sees fit. He can make it as high as he desires.

Now, to come back to the proposition of taxation, we are always hard up in a new and public-land State. We always have been in all the States while there was a large amount of public land. I can remember as a boy in Iowa when our school district had a very hard and difficult time to afford even three months' school in the winter, because over half of the land in our school district was public land, and only half of it was taxable, and a considerable portion of that was homestead, not taxable; and in Kansas and Nebraska and all along the line it was so until the land came into private ownership and was developed. There the people had a very hard struggle to maintain the institutions of government.

Our condition is more trying in that respect in the mountain States than elsewhere, owing to the larger portion of our area that has remained for a very considerable period since settlement began in public ownership and the comparatively small area that is taxable, and from which we must support all the institutions of government.

I attempted to prepare the people I have the honor to represent for what I believe inevitable, to wit, Federal leasing legislation, and Wyoming is about the only State in the West where any considerable number of people have up to this time come to look upon the leasing of coal and oil land with anything of favor. I made my arguments along these lines, beginning several years ago, that, first, under conditions that had arisen under our land laws we probably could not escape leasing legislation—the conditions could be made so intolerable that we must accept it, whether we liked it or not; second, that there were some benefits to be hoped for and expected from retaining nonmetalliferous mineral lands in public ownership. We had seen very large and extensive and valuable areas of mineral lands worked out, without leaving in the locality anything in permanent improvement to mark the passing of that wealth. The private ownership of great mineral wealth does not always result in its taxation as it was being worked to an extent sufficient to give the people of the locality those benefits they are entitled to have during the period of the exhaustion of their mineral resources. Therefore there are some very excellent arguments in favor of leasing by the public, if that leasing is under the proper public control, which, in my opinion, would be the control of the State. There would not be few voices raised in my State to-day against the leasing of the nonmetalliferous minerals in public ownership, provided the States were to manage and control the leasing. There are many reasons why our people would approve that, because those who would have to do with the management of the leases and the making of the laws under which they were made and administered would be near enough to the people that we could modify our legislation without unreasonable delay if it needed modification, and we could reach quickly and certainly an official who attempted to do an injustice.

But the Congress is not at this time proposing to turn these lands over to the States and allow their leasing by the States. We understand Congress will not do that, and we have hoped that out of Federal leasing we might secure some of the benefits of a larger return to the community which we are sure we could get under a system of leasing by the State. Of course that would mean that the people affected must have the revenues for the support of their schools, for the building of roads, for all the numerous purposes for which the funds raised by taxation under private ownership would be used. Some of our people have come to believe that Federal leasing might not be an unmixed evil if the legislation were of a kind that was workable and fair and just and equitable, and provided we were to be the beneficiaries of the leases. When this proposition of Federal leasing was first discussed, about everybody agreed with that. Even our most extreme conservation friends said, "Of course, there is no thought or intent of taking from the State and the communities large sums of money in the way of royalties and putting them into the Federal Treasury." No one proposed that. That has not been proposed until very recently.

But we have a reclamation fund, and during the last few years the proceeds of the sale of the public lands have been going into the reclamation fund. So it was suggested that as the proceeds of the sales of public lands went into the reclamation fund it would be entirely proper to have the proceeds of the leasing of lands go into the reclamation fund, and that has appealed to some people as being entirely equitable. Well, let us see about that.

Suppose we had retained the public ownership of all the timber land in Michigan and all the iron land and had leased it out, and had then said to the people of Michigan, "Well, you are dependent very largely on transportation, and we have spent a good deal of money in improving your rivers and harbors, and we will take the money and put it into the river and harbor bill. That is giving it to you. We are not taking it away from you. We are putting it into your river and harbor bill. You get a large slice of the benefits of the river and harbor bill. You must every year be provided for in a large way in the river and harbor bill, and just as long as time lasts we will levy on your property and we will give it right back to you in the river and harbor bill." years ago we might have said to our friends in Delaware and Maryland, "We take over these old plantations in the name of the people, and we will rent them out at 10 per cent per annum, and we will take that money and put it into the river and harbor bill, because you folks have rivers and harbors that must be cared for." If we had embarked upon that sort of a policy in Michigan, in Maryland, in Delaware, and elsewhere, it would have been just as fair to the people of those States as it is to the western communities to take the royalties from their nonmetalliferous mineral lands and put them into the reclamation fund.

It is true that the reclamation fund is used in the 17 States and Territories in the far west, and we are all interested in the maintenance of that fund. But a reclamation project in the State of Texas is quite as far away and of as little interest to the people of the State of Washington as a river and harbor project in the State of Maine would be to the people of New Mexico.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman speaks of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands under this bill going into the reclamation fund. Will he explain to the House why it is so much more important to the West to have one-half of this fund now go into the State treasuries than to wait until after it has been paid back from the reclamation fund, notwithstanding that is a very beneficial use?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman refers to a provision in this bill which it is difficult to refer to in a parliamentary way, which provides that all the money shall go into the reclamation fund, but that after it has been paid back into the Treasury one-half of it shall be turned over to the State. You will remember that the reclamation fund is a revolving fund. It is paid out for the building of projects, and then settlers return a certain sum annually, until it is expected that finally it will all come back into the Treasury. The settlers have 20 years in which to pay back the cost of reclamation. There is a provision here under which the whole of the money goes into the reclamation fund in the first instance, and eventually, when it is paid back, half of it is to be turned over to the States for such distribution among the communities and for general improvements as the legislature may provide. Well, of course, everyone who has given that matter any consideration at all knows that it is utterly impossible to tag the dollars that would come from these sources as they pass into the general hopper of the reclamation fund, or to identify them as they come back. Therefore this provision would be entirely inoperative. Furthermore, if it were possible to get half the funds back in 25 years, the time is so far off that this generation would get no benefit.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CULLOP). The Chair will count.

Pending the count,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order. The gentleman from Wyoming will proceed.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Eleven minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, so far, other than by a very general discussion of the principles of the bill, I have referred only to one feature of it. That is the feature which takes from these States forever the large royalties which will come out of these leases, taking the proceeds beyond the borders of the State, leaving no part of them for the benefit or the upbuilding of the communities that furnish this wealth. If one had the time, it would be very easy to demonstrate the fact that by passing from a system of sale to a system of leasing the communities in their loss of power and opportunity of taxation will lose almost if not quite as large a sum as will be received from the leasing. And unless these States are given some part at least of the sums raised through royalties we shall be left Federal provinces, robbed of the opportunity to control our own resources and robbed of the opportunity to secure by taxation the sums necessary to educate our children and to maintain our roads.

Now, the question propounded by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] some time ago raised this query: Can not the State and communities, over and above the heavy burdens that the Federal Government may lay upon them, over and above the great royalties assessed—can not the State, over and above that, assess these properties and secure sufficient sums for the maintenance of the Government? Possibly so, but only by a system which in many cases would amount to confiscation of the value of the property. When proprietors under these leases are operating side by side with privately owned properties which are not called upon to bear this heavy burden of Federal royalties, how inequitable and discriminatory it would be to lay on the properties—on the land leased by the Federal Government, in addition to the burden of royalties they pay—a burden sufficient to compensate the community for its loss of revenues by reason of the leasing policy.

We have in many States of the West a mine-output tax, and in some States our constitutional provision is that all property shall bear the same burden of taxation. Therefore our mine-output tax is in such a case not a tax over and above the ordinary burden of taxation, but simply another method of taxation. Unquestionably we will not be able under this system to lay a tax on the land values. Quite recently a high official of the Government, in the Reclamation Service, expressed the opinion, touching the reclamation projects, that the State and communities have not the power to tax the improvements on lands held under the reclamation law. I do not agree with that opinion, but it raises a grave and serious question.

If it is contended that the improvements on the homestead which eventually must ripen into a patent in fee and private ownership can not be assessed and taxed, how much less can the improvements on a tract held under a permanent leasehold, which will never pass into private ownership, be burdened with taxation? I have discussed the one feature of the bill that is most tremendously important to us. The hope of needed revenue is the one thing that reconciles our people to this profound change in our economic system; the one thing that holds out some hope to them that, out of the difficulties and the annoyances and injustices which they fear may arise out of the Federal leasing system, they may at least obtain some benefits in better schools and better roads.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. I would like to get the gentleman's idea as to the disadvantages to the settlers.

Mr. MONDELL. It is not a matter of disadvantage to settlers, because we have provided for the utilization by settlers of these lands. They can all be acquired; a settler can now acquire a proprietary right and ownership of all except the particular mineral for which the land is reserved, or for which it is considered valuable.

Mr. EMERSON. But the gentleman's principal objection is to the taxation features?

Mr. MONDELL. There are many provisions of the bill which I think are far from perfect. There are features that would be very harmful. The one thing that affects us most immediately—the one thing that renders the bill obnoxious to practically everybody in all the vast area to which it applies—is the feature that proposes to lay for all time a burden of Federal royalty and take it out of the community, make Uncle Sam an absentee landlord in a larger way and under conditions certain to be more onerous and trying to live under than any system of landlordism established since the beginning of time.

This feature of the bill, I can not believe, will ever become a law. It is not thinkable, it is not believable, that the Congress of the United States will say to Wyoming and California, Utah and Montana any more than the Congress would have said to Iowa or Illinois, "We will lease your broad acres so long as time runs at 5, 10, 20, or 50 per cent of their productive capacity per annum, if it so pleases the Secretary of the Interior, and give you no part of it for local or State public purposes." It does not make the matter more tolerable to have it placed in the reclamation fund than it would have been to Iowa or Illinois in the situation I have suggested had the Congress said, "Why, we are going to give it all back to you; behold, is it not going into the river and harbor fund?" [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, for the present I have charge of the time for the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I yield one hour to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, on December 16, when the question of extending the emergency revenue measure was under discussion on the floor of the House, some statements were made by the gentleman from North Carolina which can not pass unchallenged.

It is not my desire to enter into an unseemly debate, nor am I seeking applause from either side of the House. I have some plain, substantial facts I wish to present, and I want to present them in so fair a manner that they can not successfully be disputed.

The gentleman from North Carolina by manipulation of figures endeavored to show that during President Taft's administration the revenue laws were inefficient and revenues inadequate, but that the Underwood law is efficient in every respect. In attempting to substantiate his contention he made the statement that on August 1st of each year from 1909 to 1913, inclusive, there were deficits which ranged anywhere from $292,000—the minimum—to $15,534,000—the maximum—but that on August 1, 1914, there was a surplus of $1,484,685.

In giving the deficit or surplus for six consecutive years as he did, the gentleman from North Carolina led his hearers to believe he referred to the annual deficit or surplus. He was questioned, and must have known that his hearers believed him to be talking about 12-month periods, ending August 1 of the various years. Those who read his speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD also will be misled. It is misleading and so misleading that it appears to be intentional. The fact is that the gentleman from North Carolina was not comparing 12-month periods at all. He was comparing that portion of the fiscal year up to and including August 1. He compared a period of one month and one day in one year, with the corresponding one month and one day in other years. In other words, he bases his argument, in his effort to show some benefits from Democratic revenue legislation, on the month of July, 1914. It would have been interesting, instructive, and altogether fair if he had told us that on July 10 the proceeds of the sale of two battleships to Greece, amounting to $12,535,275, was placed in the Treasury and included in "Miscellaneous receipts." The only reason he made the comparison he did was on account of this twelve and one-half million dollars reaching the Treasury at that particular time. If that money had not reached the Treasury during that month, he would not have made the comparison, for, from his point of view, it would not have been worth reciting. It would have shown a deficit on August 1, 1914, of over $11,000,000 instead of a surplus of $1,400,000. This statement was most misleading and unfair, and his deduction entirely incorrect.

I believe I am correct in stating that when the law authorizing this Government to dispose of these battleships to the Government of Greece was passed, that law then and there also provided for the appropriation of this money for the construction of another battleship, and, therefore, it was held only in trust in the Treasury and did not belong in the general fund in the daily balance.

It should be beneath the dignity of the leader of either side of this House to resort to concealment and trickery of this kind. If unintentional, it displays an unpardonable degree of carelessness or lack of knowledge.

Again, the gentleman in his speech showed the balance in the general fund on August 1 of each year from 1909 to 1913, and his conclusion was that the balance in 1914 was $20,000,000 greater than on August 1 of the other years given. He said that the balance on August 1, 1914, was $158,642,000. The daily statement shows $142,741,808. To arrive at the figure he gives, he added in a fund in the Treasury to redeem national-bank notes, amounting to $15,642,000. On August 1, 1913, he claims the general balance was $131,454,000, and that is what is shown in the daily Treasury statement, but he did not include the national-bank note redemption fund, which on that date amounted to $20,752,983. I do not care to discuss whether or not it is right or wrong to include this redemption fund in the general balance, but I do contend that for the purpose of making a comparison of one year with another, it is misleading and wrong to include this redemption fund one year and exclude it another year. If it was wrong to include the redemption fund on August 1, 1913, it was also wrong to include it on August 1, 1914, and if it was right to include it on August 1, 1914, it was also right to include it August 1, 1913, which he did not do. What I want to say is that the gentleman has juggled figures in such a manner that they were misleading and his deductions absolutely incorrect. If it is not his desire to mislead and misrepresent facts on this question of vital importance to this country, he will not permit the circulation of his remarks as they appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

To show the kind of trickery to which the gentleman from North Carolina resorted in order to mislead the Members of this House, I will read a few lines from his remarks. What you think he is referring to is one thing and what he is referring to is something entirely different. He did not explain what he means, but I will endeavor to do so. And he calls me "Brother FORDNEY." God bless you, my friend, if you were my brother I would be like the Irishman who was asked, "If you were not an Irishman what would you be?" And he replied, "By gorry, sir, I would be ashamed of myself." On page 355 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this is what he said:

> Just take a pencil, you gentlemen of the minority, and make a note of the truth about deficits. Let us take August 1. I do not arbitrarily fix that date. The European war fixes that date. Up to August 1, 1914, the Wilson administration and Underwood Act was unhampered by war. Now note: On August 1, 1913, the last year of the Payne Act, there was a deficit of ordinary disbursements over ordinary receipts of $9,563,000. That is one year. On August 1, 1912, there was a deficit of $292,000. That is two years. On August 1, 1911, there was a deficit of $15,524,000. That is three years. Now, here comes the first year of the Payne Act with which we can more properly compare ours: On August 1, 1910, the deficit was $10,055,000. On the 1st of August after Taft was inaugurated as President the deficit amounted to $14,000,000. But on the 1st of August, 1914, after the Underwood Tariff Act had been in force 10 months, under Woodrow Wilson as President, for the first time in five years, the deficit was turned into a surplus, and that surplus was $1,500,000. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

If the trickery of this comparison was known, I wonder if there would have been that loud applause on either side of the House. The gentleman from North Carolina attempted to make his hearers believe he was comparing 12-month periods. He said, "That is one year" and "That is two years" and "That is three years." He was not comparing 12-month periods at all. He was comparing that small portion of each fiscal year from July 1 up to and including August 1. The periods he compared were each but one month and one day in length. He said the war arbitrarily fixed the date he should use as August 1. Did the war compel him to select such short periods when he might have compared 12-month periods? I will tell what event made him arbitrarily select the month of July, 1914, on which to stake the reputation of the Underwood Act. It was because $12,535,000 from the sale of two battleships to Greece was placed in the Treasury on July 10, 1914. That event controlled him absolutely.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I have not read the speech of the leader of the majority, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], in full. Does the gentleman from Michigan mean to say that he did not call the attention of the House to the fact that we had sold two large units of our Navy to a foreign country, and that the proceeds of that sale went into our Treasury? Did he not call attention to that when he was talking about the surplus and the deficit?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; he did not. He made no mention of that fact. He referred to the money in the general balance or the general fund.

If that money had not reached the Treasury during that month there would have been a deficit of over $11,000,000 instead of a surplus of $1,500,000 as alleged. Again, some $7,000,000 of income-tax receipts did not reach the Treasury until the first few days of July. If that money had gone into the Treasury before June 30—and it is payable before June 30—and if that $12,535,000 had gone into the Treasury during some other month, and the gentleman from North Carolina had attempted to make this kind of a comparison without departing from the truth, the last sentence which I quoted from him would have been about as follows:

> But on the 1st of August, 1914, after the Underwood Tariff Act had been in force 10 months, under Woodrow Wilson as President, the deficit was increased to $18,000,000, the greatest deficit on August 1 for many years.

That is what you would have said if you had told the truth. There would have been no applause on the Democratic side. He can not deny the fact that he was comparing 1-month periods instead of 12-month periods. He can not deny that there would have been a large deficit on August 1, 1914, if it had not been for the receipts from the sale of those two battleships to Greece, which has no relation whatever to the revenue-producing qualities of the Underwood Act. He can not deny, therefore, that his statement was misleading in the extreme, and that his conclusions and deductions were wholly false.

The gentleman from North Carolina makes the statement that on October 3, 1913, the date of the passage of the Underwood Act, the balance in the general fund was but $123,000,000 and that on August 1, 1914, we had the magnificent surplus of $158,384,000. He compares August 1 of one year, just after all the income and corporation tax has been collected, with October of another year, two months later in the year. Let him compare October 3, 1913, with October 3 of 1914. And again, in order to obtain his magnificent surplus of $158,000,000, he takes the sum given in the daily statement and adds thereto the national bank note redemption fund on August 1, 1914. But to show a smaller balance on October 3, 1913, he overlooks $22,373,000 in the redemption fund that day. He employs one method of bookkeeping to get $158,000,000 and another method to arrive at the balance on October 3, 1913. The real balance on October 3, 1913, adding in the redemption fund, would be $143,799,000. The $158,000,000 moreover was bolstered up by the $12,535,000 from the sale of the battleships to Greece on July 10, and by the recently collected income tax.

It was and is my understanding that this so-called war tax was imposed to make up for a loss in customs receipts, due to the falling off of imports on account of the war in Europe. The gentleman from North Carolina evades that particular point—the loss of imports or customs receipts. His manner of argument reminds me of the cuttlefish, which, when you try to find it, will throw off an inky fluid from its body to rile the water and conceal itself from view. To muddy the water, he insists upon including the income tax receipts in all his comparisons. Not only that, he was very partial to the months of June and July, 1914, when the major portion of the year's income and corporation tax was collected. During the fiscal year of 1914 the income tax produced some $71,000,000, and during the months of June and July alone some $68,000,000 of income tax was collected. If he desired to be fair and make an honest comparison he would prorate the income tax receipts over a period of 12 months. It is misleading to credit all of it to a month or a portion of a year. If he had prorated the income tax over the entire year and if he had excluded the money received from the sale of the two battleships to Greece his comparisons would have had quite a different complexion and would not have been at all in harmony with his deductions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In connection with the sale of these two battleships and the crediting up of the proceeds to the Underwood Tariff Act, is it not a fact that that money, $12,000,000, was already appropriated?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; I have so stated.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For the purpose of constructing another battleship?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. The act that authorized the sale of the ships appropriated the proceeds of the sale for another battleship.

The sponsors of the emergency revenue measure have contended that imports are far below normal. That is not true. The increased commercial and industrial activity of this Nation, due to the demands of the warring nations for supplies of all kinds, has increased the demand in this country for many products, some of which must be imported and are imported in spite of the war. The war has shut out some imports, but it has caused a demand for others, and there was never a month of November in our history when imports were as great as in November, 1915—not by $11,000,000. Again, imports for the nine months ending November 30, 1915, exceeded imports for the corresponding nine months of 1913, when adequate revenue was being produced under an efficient Republican tariff law, by $72,716,000, and at the same time customs receipts showed a loss of $76,000,000. Let me repeat this: Comparing nine months from March to November, 1915, with the corresponding nine months, March to November, 1913, imports in 1915 showed a gain of $72,716,000, while customs receipts showed a loss of $76,000,000. [Applause on the Republican side.] Your ad valorem rate of duty on total imports is much less now than in 1913, and it is the chief cause of the deficit at the present time. Frankly, I do not know how much revenue—that is, customs receipts—the friends of the Underwood law claim that law would produce in normal times. Wool went on the free list December 1, 1913, and between that date and August 1, 1914, eight months, is the only period under that law not affected by the war in Europe. During that period there was never a month when customs receipts reached $26,000,000 and only one month when customs receipts exceeded $24,000,000, and customs receipts averaged $22,200,000. During the 16 months after August 1, 1914—that is, from August, 1914, to December 1, 1915, 16 months affected by the war—customs receipts have averaged $16,680,000. The entire loss of customs receipts since the war is an average of but $5,520,000. I do not think the loss caused by the war is that great; but even if it is, the stamp tax is more than making up for that loss by about $1,300,000.

Let me repeat, the maximum loss of customs receipts that can be attributed legitimately to the war in Europe is $5,520,000 per month, and the war tax, so called, is producing $6,800,000 per month, or about $1,300,000 per month or $15,000,000 per year more than the loss in customs receipts. Notwithstanding the fact that the war tax is more than making up for the loss of customs receipts, the balance in the general fund declined $75,603,336 from July 31, 1914, to July 31, 1915. On July 31, 1914, the balance was $143,776,800, and one year later it was down to $68,173,000. The war in Europe is the excuse and not the cause for the deficit. Without that war the Democratic Party would have been compelled to admit ere this that their tariff law is a complete failure.

All through his remarks the gentleman from North Carolina endeavored to convey the impression that those who differed with him had misused figures and facts to make an argument. The friends of a protective tariff policy are not obliged to depart from truths to substantiate their contentions. We are not forced to imitate the cuttle fish and muddy the water.

The gentleman from North Carolina made the statement that to raise $80,000,000 by a tariff law it would be necessary to impose a tax burden upon the people of $480,000,000

What the gentleman from North Carolina meant by that statement is this: That no matter what the import tax may be upon a competitive product brought into this country from abroad, the price of that product is increased by an amount exactly equal to the import duty, and that such increase of price applies to the total amount of that particular product consumed in this country. I want to call his attention to a few things, and if I only had time I could enumerate many. How about sugar? Did the duty on sugar increase the price of sugar to the consumers of this country? No. Search the records, get Willett & Gray's statistical trade journal, the most valuable trade journal in this country or in the world on sugar, and you always will find that when the time in the year arrives for the placing on the markets of our domestic sugar the price of sugar goes down, and when domestic sugar is not on the market the refining companies advance the price.

Let me explain the value of a protective tariff upon the sugar industry in this country. We produce in the United States about 25 per cent of all the sugar we consume and we import about 25 per cent from our insular possessions, and we import the other 50 per cent chiefly from Cuba and the West Indian Islands and South America. What would happen to this country's sugar supply if we were to have a war and be placed in the position on the ocean that Germany finds herself to-day? We would be compelled to rely upon our own resources entirely. Again, let me say, follow this trade journal I refer to and you will find that in Germany since the declaration of war in August, 1914, the price of sugar to the consumers has not advanced. Germany produces all the sugar her people consume, and prior to the war she produced for export from a million and a quarter to two and a half million tons annually. The major portion of that export of sugar from Germany went to England. What did England do when war was declared in 1914? She declared war one day and the next day purchased a six months' supply of sugar for her people from Cuba; and beginning with August 1, 1914, and ending December 1, 1915, the last date of statistics which I have, the advanced price of sugar to the people in England over and above the price they were paying in July, 1914, has cost the consumers of Great Britain $311,000,000 and not one cent advance in Germany. Oh, my friends, how valuable a high-protective tariff would be to the people of the United States in their sugar supply if we were to have a war with some great nation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SLOAN. That it may be explained more fully. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he said something about a Sugar Refining Trust. I call attention to the further fact that the party now in power came into power under a pledge to destroy the trusts of this country, and yet the gentleman from Michigan speaks of the existence of a Sugar Trust. Will the gentleman explain how that is? Is it possible there is a lack of fulfillment of that promise?

Mr. FORDNEY. If there was anything under the sun that the Democratic Party has thought of doing since the adoption of their platform at Baltimore that was not in their platform, they have done it, and they have complied with absolutely nothing in it of which I know. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

This argument, that in raising $1 of revenue by an import duty imposes a tax burden on the people of $6, is based on the erroneous assumption that prices in this country are increased by an amount equal exactly to the tariff rate. It is based on the further erroneous assumption that the encouragement afforded to American industries is of no value to the American laboring man; that we can buy everything abroad and prosper. It is the old-time free-trade argument pleasing only to importers of foreign products, and so objectionable to American labor and American industries. The way to secure reasonable prices and prosperity is to encourage healthy competition at home and not ruinous competition with foreign cheap labor. [Applause on Republican side.] Formerly the sugar tariff was the chief object of attacks by free traders with ideas similar to those of the gentleman from North Carolina. On March 1, 1914, a 25 per cent reduction of the duty on sugar became effective and the consumers did not receive the benefit. In this connection I have a very instructive circular letter issued by Chandler Bros. & Co., of Philadelphia and New York, commenting on the attractive outlook of the Guantanamo Sugar Co. of Cuba. They claim the company is earning approximately 42 per cent on its capital, and comment on the effect of our tariff laws on their profits. This is what they say:

> The question of tariff must not be overlooked. Under the present tariff law of the United States imports of sugar will be admitted free after May 1, 1916. There is at present a duty on Cuban raws of approximately a cent a pound. With that removed the Cuban sugar companies will receive a benefit practically the same as an addition of a cent a pound to the price of their product.

Free trade on sugar in this country would destroy the domestic sugar industry, the same as in England, and in time of war we would be dependent upon foreign countries for this important food commodity. What England has been obliged to spend for sugar since the outbreak of the war is astounding, and it is taking gold from England which she needs so badly at home. On the other hand, sugar prices in Germany have not advanced since the war began, and Germany is not sending gold abroad to purchase the same. When a man in Congress advocates the slogan "Made in America" and talks in favor of "industrial independence" and then talks and votes in favor of free trade or tariff for revenue only, it reminds me of the kind of a man who will go to church on Sunday and pray and steal and commit murder during the week. Industrial independence and free trade are antithetical. One is directly opposed to the other. We can not have both.

In connection with the operation of the Underwood tariff, the war in Europe, and the prosperity of this country, there are a few more facts I can not refrain from mentioning. First, there was a business depression of no small proportions throughout the United States for several months prior to the European war, and the outlook was dubious, indeed. The fact that the depression existed will not be denied. The President said it was psychological; some good Democratic papers said it was due to climatic conditions; and others, not Democratic, claimed it was due to tariff legislation unfavorable to American industries and American labor. Depreciation of values, idle freight cars, and men out of employment were a few of the everyday indications. Another fact I wish to mention is this: When the war started in Europe friends of free trade took pleasure in asserting that the war in Europe was a barrier to foreign products as efficient as a protective tariff, and they chided those who believed in the policy of protection by asking them why prosperity did not return. Another fact is that as soon as business became adjusted to the new conditions prosperity did return; and right now, with a novel and uncertain kind of protection against foreign cheap imports, we are enjoying a temporary return to prosperous conditions. But what will happen when the war is over? That is the mighty question. Some say there is danger of a military invasion by some foreign nation, but there is another kind of invasion that will be attempted. It is as certain to follow the war as day is to follow the night. It is an industrial invasion. When the great armies of Europe turn their attention from destroying and killing to farming and manufacturing, a most determined effort will be made by foreign manufacturers to invade this country with cheaply made products and undersell American manufacturers and capture American markets. We must prepare to meet that industrial invasion. We can hope to check such an invasion only by reviving the protective tariff policy.

The gentleman from North Carolina made the statement that "in 1910, the first year of the Payne-Aldrich Act, the surplus was only $91,990,000." He meant the balance in the general fund. He says on August 1, 1911, less canal bonds, there was $135,000,000. He says on August 1, 1912, less canal bonds, there was a surplus of $138,000,000. And again he says on August 1, 1913, there was a surplus of $131,454,000; but in computing this balance he did not include $20,750,000 in national bank-note redemption fund that day, which he does include in every other general balance he gives. So that on August 1, 1913, the balance in reality was $152,000,000. He uses this as an argument against the Payne Tariff Act, and received much applause from the other side of the House. What he really showed was that under the Payne Act the balance in the general fund was increased from $91,000,000 on August 1, 1910, to $152,000,000 on August 1, 1913. That the Underwood Act started out with a good balance in the Treasury is not an argument in favor of that law; credit belongs to the law preceding.

The real question is, What balance will you have at the end of the operation of the Underwood Act? Up to the present time some $85,000,000 has been raised by the so-called war taxes, and notwithstanding this and the fact that importations at present are breaking past records in volume the balance in the general fund is now down to about $50,000,000. When the Underwood Act is finally repealed and the reckoning is made it will show hundreds of millions raised by objectionable methods of direct taxation and an empty Treasury.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Michigan yield for a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Michigan has been rather severe in his criticism of the speech of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina, so I call his attention to this statement by the President of the United States, made in his address to Congress on December 7. After analyzing the figures of the Treasury, the President said:

> The obvious moral of the figures is that it is a plain counsel of prudence to continue all the present taxes or their equivalents and confine ourselves to the problem of providing $112,000,000 of new revenue rather than $297,000,000.

Which enormous sum was the deficit the President saw staring him in the face. Does not the gentleman from Michigan think the gentleman from North Carolina is to be given credit for making the best possible argument in a very poor case?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; but I wish I had a true copy of the speech the gentleman delivered on the floor instead of his speech as printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] There is such a difference. I heard all of his speech as he delivered it in the House, and that which is in the RECORD has no resemblance, no relation whatever. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] It has been so much modified, I am inclined to think Mrs. Kitchin wrote the one printed in the RECORD. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield.

Mr. SLOAN. Speaking of the strictures upon the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, will not the gentleman pardon the difference between his speech delivered and the speech in the RECORD on the ground that we all like variety, and if we can not have money for the Treasury we can have variety?

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me say to the gentleman from Nebraska that when I read the speech in the RECORD, after hearing the gentleman's speech on the floor, I thought of the request of an old German gentleman once who went to a portrait painter and asked him to paint a picture of his father. "All right," said the painter; "bring in your father, and I will make a sketch, and I will paint his picture for so much money." "Vell," said the German, "mein fader iss dead." "Well, bring me a picture of your father, and I will paint it as best I can from that picture." "Aber mein fader nefer had a picture getooken." "Well, how can I paint a picture of your father without seeing him or having his picture?" "Vell, I can tell you how he looked—what he looked like—und then you can paint a picture like dot." The painter said, "I will do my best. I will paint the picture as you tell me, and you can take the picture." "Oh, yes; I vill buy the picture." When the painter had finished the picture, he sent for the German to come in. He placed the picture on an easel so that a good light would shine on it, and he removed a cloth from over it, and the old German gentleman's eyes bulged out and tears stood in his eyes. "Yes," said he, "dot's fader. Dot's fader all right; but oh, mein Gott, mein friend, how he has changed." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will my colleague yield there?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. You say the balance was down to $51,000,000. Does not that include the disbursing officer's balances?

Mr. FORDNEY. No, sir. That is less the disbursing officer's balances. That is the real balance in the Treasury, not what the statement shows it to be there, because the statement shows the balance, I think, to be $106,000,000. I desire to be absolutely fair in this argument.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SLOAN. Does not the $51,000,000 you speak of as balance include about $27,000,000 of uncoined silver bullion and subsidiary coin?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir; it does. But to be fair, the Republicans always carried those same items in their make-up of money in the Treasury. It is only fair to state that.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. If I have the time.

Mr. MAPES. While the $51,000,000 which you mention as being the present balance in the general fund does not include the amount to the credit of disbursing officers, it does include, does it not, about $26,000,000 for the redemption of outstanding national-bank notes?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. I do not know the exact amount, but if my memory serves me correctly, it is about twenty-nine millions. Taking that redemption fund and those minor coins, and so on, it is all absorbed, and they have to-day no real working balance.

The Underwood Act is not altogether responsible for the revenue produced during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, for the Payne Act was in full force during 3 months and 3 days of that year.

The Payne rates on wool were in effect during 5 months of that fiscal year.

The Payne rates on woolen goods were in effect during 6 months of that year.

The Payne rates on sugar were in effect for 9 months of that year.

The income tax was in effect for 9 months.

The corporation tax was in effect during the entire year.

During the first 4 months of that fiscal year customs receipts averaged $29,000,000, while during the last 8 months of that fiscal year customs receipts averaged $22,200,000. If the last 8 months of the year is an indication of what the Underwood Act would produce for a 12-month period, it appears that the Payne Act bolstered up customs receipts for the fiscal year of 1914 by at least $30,000,000.

The gentleman from North Carolina contends that Republicans issued canal bonds for the purpose of preventing deficits during President Taft's administration. Let me say that from June 30, 1909, to June 30, 1913, four fiscal years under President Taft's administration, the Panama Canal receipts, which included all bonds sold and premiums received, amounted to only $51,291,000, while during that same period expenditures for the construction of the canal amounted to no less than $158,043,816. In other words, during President Taft's administration, when the gentleman from North Carolina would lead people to believe the balance in the general fund was wrongfully being bolstered up by the sale of canal bonds, more than $107,000,000 was taken from the general fund, over and above the total amount of canal receipts, to pay for work being done on the canal. [Applause on the Republican side.] To make it plain, if the canal work had not been going on, the balance in the general fund would have been $107,000,000 larger than it was at the end of the four years in question.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir; I will yield.

Mr. KELLEY. Has the gentleman in his speech calculated what imports should have come in under the Underwood tariff law sufficient to pay the expenses of the Government as they have been administered during the time that that law has been in force?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir; I will reach that point in just a minute.

I want to call attention to some other things just now at this point and correct the gentleman from North Carolina as to his statements about the money spent on the Panama Canal. When making his speech I asked him, when he spoke of the deficit in the Treasury during the Taft administration, if it would not be fair for him to state to the House that those deficits, if there were deficits, were largely caused by the moneys paid out for the construction of the Panama Canal. He waved me aside and said, "You sold bonds to build the Panama Canal." Mr. KITCHIN or somebody fails to print that in the RECORD. [Laughter.]

In 1909 the expenditures out of the Treasury for the Panama Canal were $31,419,442; receipts from bonds, and so forth, $30,731,008. In 1910, expenditures, $33,911,673; no receipts from Panama bonds. He called attention to those receipts, but he did not show the expenditures. In 1911 the expenditures were $37,063,515; the receipts from bonds, and so forth, $18,102,000. In 1912 the expenditures on the Panama Canal were $35,327,370.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman 15 minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. I thank you, sir.

As I have said, in 1912 $35,327,370 were expended and the receipts were $33,189,104 from the sale of bonds. In 1913 the expenditures were $41,741,258, partly under one administration and partly under another, and there was no sale of bonds.

Now, my Democratic friends, the total expenditures on the Panama Canal to October 3, 1913, the date of the enactment of the Underwood law, were $329,673,000, and receipts from the sale of bonds $138,600,000, or a total expenditure out of the general fund under the Republican tariff law of $191,073,000. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now I come to the question asked by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]. From December 1, 1914, to December 1, 1915, a 12 months' period—and these are the latest statistics I can obtain—our imports were $1,730,000,000 and the customs receipts $197,104,000. There have been collected by their so-called war tax, or stamp tax, in round numbers, $80,000,000 during this 12 months' period, and at the same time there was a deficit in the Treasury of some $30,000,000, as evidenced by a falling off of the balance in the general fund to that extent.

These two items, namely, the $80,000,000 raised by the stamp tax and $30,000,000, which is the excess of total expenditures by the Government over revenue receipts, will aggregate $110,000,000. Had there been no war and no stamp tax, this $110,000,000 is the amount of additional customs receipts the Underwood Act would have had to produce in order that Government revenues might equal the disbursements during that year. During the 12 months in question the Underwood Act produced customs receipts averaging 11 per cent ad valorem on the total importations. Friends of the Underwood Act contend that without the war imports would have been sufficient to produce required revenue without the war tax. As stated, $110,000,000 is the additional sum the Underwood Act would have had to raise. To raise that amount by a tariff law producing customs receipts of but 11 per cent ad valorem it would have been necessary to have no less than $1,000,000,000 of increased imports. [Applause on the Republican side.]

If you will, by your tariff laws, obtain sufficient money to pay the running expenses of this Government, you will destroy American industry. [Applause on the Republican side.] One thing or the other must come under your system.

The gentleman from North Carolina said that the Underwood tariff law was an absolute and complete success. If so, I ask him why, in 1914, did they adopt a war-tax measure to make up their losses? As your President and my President—I am sorry to say—[laughter on the Republican side] said from the Speaker's platform in this House in December last, it was an urgent necessity. Why were you obliged to adopt that law if your Underwood Act was a success?

Again, sir, you are called upon by your President, through your Secretary of the Treasury, to repeal, before the 1st day of May next, the free-sugar clause in that Underwood Act. Why do this, if that law is a success?

And again, sir, if that law is a success, why are you now called upon to raise by a stamp tax or some other infernal machinery [laughter on the Republican side] from $80,000,000 to $100,000,000 more? If all that you say about the Underwood Tariff Act is true, why resort to all those methods of raising additional revenues?

And again, when the Republican Party went out of power on the 4th day of March, 1913, there was a balance of cash in the United States Treasury of $149,335,000. Fifty-one million dollars there now. Oh, you know better, my friends. You know that your tariff law is a failure, but you will not admit it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Speaking further of the alleged success of the Underwood law, the gentleman has spoken of the theory of its proponents, that the tariff adds by the amount of the tariff at least so much to the cost of an article to the consumer. Now, if that be true, necessarily the converse would be true, that the reduction of the tariff would reduce to that extent the cost of articles to the consumer?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Can the gentleman mention any article under the tariff in which the cost of the article has been reduced by the amount in which the tariff has been reduced?

Mr. FORDNEY. No, sir; and we want to produce everything in this country that we consume and can produce. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The speech made by the gentleman from North Carolina on the floor of this House—the Democratic leader of the great party that he represented—was not a fitting speech to be made here. It was more becoming to a long-haired Populist politician from the tail end of a cart in a remote town down in Texas. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Amen! [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. FORDNEY. I thank you, gentlemen. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan yields back 14 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman in charge on the other side desire to use some time now? We will have but one speech more on this side, to occupy an hour.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to occupy the entire 20 minutes accorded me. I only desire to take a very few minutes, and my remarks will be confined to the bill before the House providing for the withdrawal from entry of the coal, oil, gas, phosphates, and other resources in the Western States and the putting of those resources upon a leasing and royalty basis under Federal control.

I have had occasion heretofore to address the House several times and at length upon this subject. When this same bill passed this House before, I discussed this leasing policy at some length and submitted considerable data in support of the minority report which I filed against that bill. My remarks on that occasion appear at pages 15053 to 15064 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 12, 1914, Sixty-third Congress, second session. I have also filed quite an elaborate minority report against this bill, which I ask the committee to carefully consider. I will insert as a part of my remarks some extracts from my report before I conclude.

It seems as though this so-called conservation sentiment is in the air. There are throughout the country so many people who have conservation on the brain—and know nothing about it or how it will affect the West—that I have little hope of much longer preventing this kind of legislation. Yet I sincerely hope that this measure will be less injurious than we fear it will be; but I honestly believe it will be an aggravation to the West and a disappointment to the East. The Government of the United States is changing its policy of over a hundred years and is embarking upon a policy that most of us of the West believe is unwise. We know we are as patriotic as any citizens of the Republic, and we earnestly feel that our States should be treated as sovereign States of this Union.

As I say in that minority report we have three main objections to this legislation.

First, we object to it because it withdraws from and prevents private ownership of any and all these resources in the Western States. The policy of our Government has always been to allow the resources in each State to go into private ownership and become subject to local taxation and help support and maintain the State and local government. Under that policy the lands of the older States were settled, cities were built, and private capital came in and developed the resources of each State. Under that policy those States—East, North, and South—have become rich and prosperous.

Every one of the States that you gentlemen represent here to-day would to-day be in the condition relatively of a Territory if this proposed policy had been inflicted upon you 100 years ago, or even 50 years ago. Therefore we say that you are not doing justice to the Western States or treating them fairly. Even if it be true that some portions of the West are becoming impatient and discouraged at the governmental embargo that has prohibited the development of these resources ever since this conservation propaganda swept over the country and are now advocating the adoption of these leasing measures, in hopes thereby of securing some development, that is not a natural change, but rather a surrender of their real western sentiments. Even if all of the West should be coerced into asking for this kind of legislation, that would not make me believe that it was inherently right or that it was a wise governmental policy upon which to embark.

Secondly, we object to this policy because under it our resources will be administered from Washington. We do not like "long-distance government."

It is absolutely contrary to the spirit that has built up this country heretofore to rule a large part of a State for any length of time by Federal officials. From one-third to one-half of the area of all our Western States is to be perpetually withdrawn as a Federal reservation and reigned over by agents from these bureaus in Washington. That builds up a bureaucracy which I know is not conducive to the proper development or well-being of our Western States. I will not use the forcible language of many public-spirited citizens of the West in discussing this feature of this policy, but no government of that kind can be in accordance with the spirit of our institutions. It is un-American, unfair to the West, and as wholly unnecessary as it is unwise for Congress to inflict it upon us. We people of the West do not like "carpetbag government" any more than you gentlemen from the South liked it after the Civil War; and while there is some difference, of course, yet I want to say to you, with all due respect, that when Congress clothes a lot of petty Government officials with almost supreme authority and sends them out 2,000 or 3,000 miles from Washington they usually swell up and become petty tyrants.

The common people, the ordinary citizens, who are usually poor or of very moderate means, can not reach these Government agents or get them overruled. The people are practically compelled to submit to their imperial domination. The chairman of our committee very earnestly and forcibly says, "If they do wrong, why do you not remove them or have them supplanted?" Now, that is mighty easy to say, but anybody who has ever tried to get a Federal Government civil-service employee removed on any ground knows that that is about as big a job as it is to induce Congress to impeach a Federal judge or a United States district attorney. It is just about as impossible to do it.

Third. The third objection to this leasing scheme is that, aside from preventing the development of our States, aside from holding this land for all time in perpetuity as Federal Crown lands for the enrichment of the Federal Treasury and for the providing of jobs for these bureaucratic employees, aside from all that you add insult to injury by imposing a direct and an additional Federal tax upon all the consumers in our country who use these various products that are taken from our lands.

When you tax us 2 cents or 10 cents or 25 cents a ton, or whatever you see fit to put on us, for our coal, for the coal that is mined out of the ground within the borders of our State, who pays that? Why, it is the local consumer who pays it. Have any of you people in the Eastern or Northern or Southern States ever paid a Federal royalty on any coal mined within your States? You have never paid one dollar in the whole history of this Government. Have you ever paid into the Federal Treasury any tax upon the water power generated in your States? Not a nickel in all the history of this Government. And yet, as I have often said, right here within sight of the dome of this Capitol Building is the Great Falls of the Potomac River, one of the greatest water powers in all of the United States, idly running to waste right here for a hundred and fifty years. Why, if the falls of the Potomac River were in one of the Western States, all the muck-raking papers and magazines in the United States would be shrieking in big scare headlines about the frightful monopolies and frauds that were about to be perpetrated upon the public by the consciousless gobbling of that gigantic water power, and all the self-appointed conservators of the coming generations would be yelling and tearing their hair and passing resolutions, and the Army and the Interior and Agricultural Departments would be compelled to maintain a troop of soldiers out there to guard us from taking that water power. Yet right here under the dome of the Capitol it is wholly unappropriated and has been for over a hundred years, and is still running to waste—enough power to light and heat everything in Washington. Conservation is largely a question of locality. I venture to say there is a hundred times as much water power in the navigable streams of this country as there is in our little nonnavigable streams in the West. Practically speaking, the Government owns the bed of the navigable streams and owns the water that flows in them. Why do not these conservators of the public welfare advocate the propriety of the Federal Government deriving some revenue out of those vast water powers and also preventing their monopoly? On the contrary, the Government spends hundreds of millions of dollars improving those water powers at the instance of and primarily for the benefit of those local communities. The Government could very justly charge for the use of the water power on the navigable streams which it owns and improves with funds out of the Federal Treasury, to which we all contribute. But the Government does not improve or spend a dollar upon and has no interest whatever in the waters of the small nonnavigable streams in the West. Those waters belong absolutely to our States. They are imperatively necessary for irrigation and domestic use in the development in that arid country. We appropriate and own every drop of the water there.

Generally speaking, there is not an ounce of water anywhere within the boundaries of the arid Western States that is not already rightfully appropriated under the direct and specific authority of Congress, under the laws of the United States, and under the laws of those States; yet all this furore about the possible monopoly of water power in the West. I can not resist doubting the good faith of a large part of this agitation. I think you are using a subterfuge in the water-power bill in claiming that you are only charging for the use of the public land; because you would not permit a provision in that bill that would regulate the charges and royalties in proportion to either the quantity or value of the public land used. Of course the public land belongs to the Federal Government—to all the people. But the water in those small western streams belongs to the people in those States, and Congress has no right to pass a law that will permit the Federal Government to either directly or indirectly charge those people for their use of that water; and that is exactly what the water-power bill does, because the value of the water is fully a thousand times as much as the value of the public land used.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly; I always yield to the chairman of our Public Lands Committee.

Mr. FERRIS. I will only take a moment of the gentleman's time. I am trying to get at his position. It is a little beside the question which we are now considering; but since the gentleman is discussing the water-power bill, I want to ask him a question.

The gentleman will recall that the other day when the water-power bill was concluded the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] moved a substitute on a motion to recommit. I want to ask the gentleman from Colorado if he has examined the bill proposed by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; I have not. I never read it or saw it. I only have a general idea of what it was.

Mr. FERRIS. I wanted to ask if that bill meets the gentleman's thought on the question of what should be done with water power?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I was busy and did not listen to the reading of it, but I do not think it does.

Mr. FERRIS. If it develops that section 5 of that bill contains a provision which proposes to put on sale and to sell every water power in the United States in public ownership at a minimum of $1.25 an acre and a maximum of $20 an acre, the gentleman would not be for that bill, would he?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; if that is what his bill provides for, I do not think that would be right. I am not in favor of putting up power sites at auction.

Mr. FERRIS. Section 5 of the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] contains that provision, and I wondered if that was the program that was favored by gentlemen who object to leasing. I understand that leasing is objected to.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. My thought about that matter is this: I realize that some of the Western States have possibly to some extent been derelict in their duty of properly safeguarding the interests of the citizens of those States against monopoly and extortions, and they are now and by this legislation, to a certain extent, reaping the penalty of their failure to enact proper laws and provide proper and efficient public-utility commissions to safeguard the public. They ought to have enacted laws of that kind years ago, and regulated the ownership and use of these great resources for the welfare of the public. But the main reason why they did not do so is because those new Western States have always been and are still poor. We have always been appealing to capital to come out there and develop our country.

For 50 years we have been trying to induce men of means and corporations to come out and invest their money and help us develop these resources. For that reason our legislatures have nearly always in former years been very cautious about enacting laws that would put much restriction upon them or drive capital away; and the result has been that there has been and is some monopoly and some extortion. There is considerable extortion right now in coal, which is a Government-made monopoly brought about by the regulations of the Interior Department, because the Government has withdrawn all the coal lands in the West from entry and has classified them for sale at a figure so high that, practically speaking, nobody will or can buy them. I think that has been done deliberately and for that purpose. Nobody is going to pay $100,000 or a quarter of a million dollars for the land itself and then go ahead and spend another quarter of a million trying to open up and develop a coal mine. There is no market that will justify it. They can not do it at all. The result has been that for several years past practically no coal land has been going into private ownership, notwithstanding right in the State of Colorado alone the Geological Survey reports that there is enough coal to supply the entire United States, at the present rate of consumption, for 300 years. Yet that coal is hermetically sealed up, and the big coal companies have been able to raise the price of coal from $2.50 a ton to $6.50 a ton, because the Government will not permit anybody else to own any coal land.

When I talked to a former Secretary of the Interior about it he said, "Well, how long are you people going to stand it before we force you to come to a leasing policy?" That is the dog-in-the-manger policy that has been pursued for several years, and it has forced a great many people in the West to believe that they never can get anything else than a leasing policy, and so some of them write and urge me to get the best amendments I can, and pass some law so that they can, if possible, get out from under the present monopoly. They hope the Government will not be any worse than the big corporations are. So there is some change of sentiment in some localities of the West because they want development so badly. I fear some of my colleagues are refraining from opposing this measure, not because it does not infringe on the rights of their States, but because they are so anxious to secure some development and they hope this may bring it about. As I stated before, it is the principle, the unwise and unjust policy of this legislation that I am opposed to. This bill contains many beneficial features, and I trust I may be pardoned for taking a little personal pride in claiming the individual authorship of two or three provisions that I am confident will prove of very great benefit to the West, both directly and indirectly. I refer to the provision in this bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to lease to towns and cities 160 acres each of coal land without any royalty charges. Ever since I have been in Congress I have been trying to pass a bill granting free a section of coal land to every city or town that wanted to operate a municipal coal mine; not that I expected many municipalities would avail themselves of that opportunity, but I am confident the possibility of their doing so would, and that provision in this bill will, have a salutary tendency toward preventing extortion by some coal companies. After several years' work and numerous appeals I secured the approval of the Interior Department and obtained the approval of the Public Lands Committee, and reported out my municipal-coal bill twice. But I was never able to pass it. So I earnestly hope that provision will stay in this bill. The same provision is also in the water-power bill, allowing municipalities to develop water power without any royalty charges.

Another provision of the water-power bill, which I claim the credit of and which I have all along insisted upon being retained in the bill, and I earnestly hope it will stay in the bill, and that is the provision "that nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting or intended to affect or to in any way interfere with the laws of any State or Alaska, relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water."

There is another provision which I guess I am primarily responsible for, and that is the clause wherein Congress disclaims any intent to in any way "affect the rights of the States or other local authority from exercising any rights which they may have to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of mines, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee." If the Government is going to perpetually withhold the title to the land, it certainly must not interfere with any of the State's full rights to tax everything else but its land. And I therefore hope there will be no effort to interfere with that provision. Regarding the disposition and use of the rentals and royalties, of course, it is of great benefit to the West to have all those funds go first into the reclamation fund for the completion of all those 32 reclamation projects in the West, and we hope for the construction of many other projects, and after the funds derived from these royalties are once so used they go one half into the Federal Treasury and the other half into the treasuries of the States from which they were collected. I tried long and earnestly to have the bill provide for the deposit at once in the State treasuries of one-half of the royalties when they are collected. If the States are to ultimately get one-half of these royalties, it would do them 10 times as much good to get those funds now as it would to get them 20 or 25 or, more likely, 30 years from now. Those States should have that money now for their roads and schools, and I do hope in some way this amendment will be inserted in this bill and the water-power bill before their final approval.

Mr. Chairman, I have discussed this bill at greater length than I intended to. But I feel that I would not be doing my full duty to my State or to the West if I did not voice this opposition of my State to this Federal leasing policy. Every session of our Colorado Legislature for years has memorialized Congress against these measures. Practically all the chambers of commerce and the business men's associations of my State have always been against this system. Every governor of Colorado for 10 years has come here and spoken against it. So I am expressing the sentiment of my State, and have been overwhelmingly outvoted and overruled. I assume that the only practical and sensible thing for me to do is to make the best of it and try to get the best measure I can. In other words, one that will do as little harm to the West as possible. Therefore I am going down the line trying to retain the several beneficial features in this bill. I will, of course, not vote for the bill, but if we have got to take it, I want to make it as little harmful as possible to my State. The Government may and probably will get some royalties from the oil wells of California and Wyoming, and there may be some royalties from the water powers in several of the Western States.

But, gentlemen, I predict that the United States Government will not for years to come, if ever, get enough royalty to defray the ultimate expenses of the administration of this policy. I believe the final result of this legislation will be the same as it was after Congress adopted the policy of leasing lead mines years ago. At least I fear that result. You may not know that from 1807 to 1847 Congress adopted a leasing policy of the lead and copper mines in this country, and the States of Illinois and Missouri especially were compelled to operate their lead mines under that policy. The result was that the cost to the Government of the United States for collecting the royalties and the administration of the leasing policy was actually four times as much as all the royalties received. I apprehend that some of these days Congress will see the error of its way and repeat itself and again repeal these outrageous laws. That has been the practical experience of this country. I do not mean to criticize any bureaus or any officials or anybody personally. I do not agree with the judgment of those who have for many years been so persistently boasting and clamoring for this legislation.

If you gentlemen from the East and North and South hug to your bosoms the delusive hope that the Federal Treasury is ever going to get any appreciable amount of royalties from this leasing policy in the West, you will, I believe, be mistaken. You will build up an army of Government employees. I think there will ultimately be probably 25,000 Government employees created by this legislation. They will be put under the civil service and will become a permanent charge against the Government, and our people will have to foot the bills. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will insert a portion of my minority report, as follows:

EXPLORATION FOR AND DISPOSITION OF COAL, OIL, GAS, ETC.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado and others, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted the following minority views (to accompany H. R. 406):

We, the undersigned members of the Committee on the Public Lands, find ourselves unable to agree with the majority report, No. 17, and beg leave to express herein our minority views.

We feel that we would be recreant to the general public sentiment of our State if we did not earnestly protest against the governmental policy sought to be enacted in this bill. Our objection to the bill is not as to details; it is fundamental and on principle. The people of our State have always been opposed to having the resources of the West permanently withdrawn from private ownership and put into a general Federal leasing system. We are opposed to what we believe is an un-American policy of government by distant bureaus. We do not like absentee landlordism. We have never approved of bureaucratic rule. We do not like long-distance government. We do not believe that it is for the best interest of the country or the West to have large portions of our State permanently occupied by Federal tenants, renters who pay little or no taxes and are on the "tenant at will" basis, with very little allegiance to our State.

We believe this bill is in violation of the moral, legal, equitable, and constitutional rights of the Western States, in contravention of the enabling act by which they were admitted into the Union, and to that extent unconstitutional. We look upon this bill as absolutely taking from the people of the arid West some of the most sacred property and political rights they have, not only reversing the traditions of this Government for over a hundred years but violating the very constitutional guaranties upon which those States were admitted into this Union.

If the bill is intended to prevent monopoly and extortion, that can be accomplished by granting a revocable title, subject to perpetual control by the Federal and State public-utility authorities as to the amount of land that any company can hold and the rates and service. If we have not sufficient Federal laws for that purpose, let Congress enact them; and if the States have not sufficient laws at this time to safeguard the interests of the public, the Interior Department should continue its present withdrawal and excessive classification policy until such time as the States shall adopt such measures as will effectually protect the people.

If the bill is intended by anyone as a systematic attempt to exploit the West and convert into an enormous and permanent Federal revenue-producing proposition practically all of the remaining natural resources upon the public domain in the Western States (which we know it is not by the present Secretary), then it is an outrageous discrimination against those States and an infamous perversion of the taxing power, and at the same time depriving those States of their legal right of taxation of the property within their borders.

If there is any one thing that the West is and has always been bitterly opposed to it is the prevention of settlements and permanent withdrawal and withholding of our lands and other resources from entry and sale and the capitalization of them into the production of Federal jobs and Federal revenue and bureaucratic rule 2,500 miles away. This system will be no permanent benefit to the National Government and it will very seriously retard the development and be a perpetual injury to our Western States.

Our objections to the principle and policy involved in this bill (H. R. 406) are also equally applicable to the same principle and policy which is sought to be enforced upon the West by bill H. R. 408, known as the water-power leasing bill.

More specifically stated, our objections are: First, to the policy of permanently withdrawing from entry a large per cent of both the area and resources of our States, and thereby preventing them from ever going into private ownership and being placed upon the tax rolls and aiding in the support of our State and county governments, and the maintenance of our roads and schools, and the upbuilding of our Commonwealths generally.

Secondly, because it is un-American to have large portions of each western State reserved in a similar manner to the Crown lands of the old countries and administered by Federal agents with no responsibility to the local people and whose authority comes from across the continent and beyond the control of any particular community affected.

Thirdly, because our States are not only deprived of the benefits of these resources, but are besides taxed, and the local consumers are compelled to pay an additional charge to raise a royalty for the Federal Treasury from the use and output of these resources, and instead of that royalty going directly into the State treasuries, as it should, it is put into the Government reclamation fund to be used possibly in States that produce little or no part of that fund, and to remain in that fund for from 20 to 30 years, and thereafter to go one-half to the Federal Treasury and the other half to the State treasury.

Even assuming that that provision will be faithfully carried out, and not modified by future Congresses (of which there is no assurance), none of that money can possibly reach the State treasuries within less than 20 years, whereas, this generation needs that money very greatly now for the construction of roads, for the maintenance of schools, and the upbuilding of these frontier communities. A thousand dollars now would do each of those States more good than ten thousand would 20 or 30 years from now.

The governors of the Western States have for several years held annual conferences at which they have considered matters affecting the welfare of the West, and at each of their conventions during the past four years they have passed resolutions vigorously denouncing this Federal withdrawal and leasehold policy. Their latest expressions upon this subject are as follows:

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE WESTERN STATES WATER POWER CONFERENCE AT PORTLAND, OREG., SEPTEMBER 23, 1915.

Whereas the new States admitted into the Union are of necessity upon an equal footing in all respects whatever with the original States; and

Whereas each State has full jurisdiction over all lands within its borders, including the beds of streams and other waters; and

Whereas the ownership by the Federal Government of the technical title to vacant public land within a State does not confer upon the Federal Government any greater or other governmental powers than it possesses within the original States; and

Whereas the long-established and sound policy of the United States with respect to the disposition of its unappropriated public lands is opposed to the making of a direct revenue therefrom, beyond the expense incident to the surveying, classification, and disposing of such lands, but on the contrary, that said policy is intended to encourage and promote the settlement and development thereof; and that any act of Congress, or any administrative interpretation thereof, which is not in harmony with this policy does an injustice to the new States by placing them on an unequal footing with the original States and by discouraging and preventing the settlement of such new States and the development of their resources; and

Whereas the vacant land belonging to the Federal Government constitutes two-thirds of the area of the States represented in this conference and amounts to more than twice the area of the thirteen original States; and

Whereas the vacant lands belonging to the Federal Government are under the law exempt from taxation, while the burden of maintaining local government over their entire area rests upon the States; and

Whereas the maintenance inviolate of the constitutional equality of the States of the Union is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our political fabric depend, and to the harmonious operation of the scheme upon which the Republic was organized: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we are unalterably opposed to any legislation which is in conflict with the fundamental principles above declared.

Resolved, That the States have the constitutional right and power to control and regulate the appropriation and use of the waters within their boundaries for all beneficial purposes except navigation, and also the right and power to control and regulate the rates and service of their public utilities.

Resolved, That we are opposed to any policy that looks toward imposing the system of leasing generally upon the public domain, for the reason that such system is contrary to the spirit of our free institutions and would retard the development of the resources of the States in which there is still any public land.

Resolved, That, in view of what we believe to be administrative misconstruction of existing legislation, we are in favor of a declaratory act by Congress recognizing and acknowledging that the proprietary interest of the United States in the vacant land within the States is subject to the jurisdiction and eminent domain of those States for all uses which are declared by the laws of those States to be public uses and which are so essential to the development, well-being, and prosperity of those States.

Resolved, That the purposes of encouraging the development and utilization of the natural resources of the country by private enterprise which actuated Congress in the enactment of the right-of-way acts of July 26, 1866, and March 3, 1891, and in the enactment of the acts of March 3, 1877, and June 4, 1897, making all nonnavigable waters on public lands, including forest reservations, free for appropriation for beneficial uses, should actuate Congress to-day in the enactment of any further legislation upon these subjects.

Resolved, That any legislation of Congress the purpose or effect of which is to substitute arbitrary or discretionary authority of executive officials for the fixed rules of law governing the administration, sale, or other disposition of public lands and reservations and rights of way over the same will be unwise and inconsistent with the spirit of our Constitution.

Resolved, That we are opposed to ownership or control, either direct or indirect, by the United States Government of intrastate public utilities.

WESTERN STATES WATER POWER CONFERENCE,
WILLIAM SPRY, Chairman.
C. C. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

A majority of the governors of the Western States met in Denver at their third annual conference in April, 1914, and prepared a statement upon this subject which is brief, plain, and specific. It reflects the sentiment of a majority of the western half of this Republic, and every Member of Congress should read and respect that sentiment in the enactment of legislation which primarily affects those States. The resolutions are as follows:

WHAT THE WEST WANTS.

[Resolutions adopted unanimously by the Third Annual Conference of Western Governors held in Denver, Colo., Apr. 9, 10, and 11, 1914.]

"We, the members of the western governors' conference, in convention assembled at Denver, Colo., April 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, 1914, do hereby adopt the following resolutions:

CONSERVATION.

"We believe in conservation—in sane conservation. We believe that the All-Wise Creator placed the vast resources of this Nation here for the use and benefit of all the people—generations past, present, and future—and while we believe due consideration and protection should be given to the rights of those who come hereafter, we insist that the people of this day and age should be given every reasonable opportunity to develop our wonderful resources and put them to a beneficial use.

STATE CONTROL.

"That it is the duty of each and every State to adopt such laws as will make for true conservation of our resources, prevent monopoly, and render the greatest good to the greatest number; and that as rapidly as the States prepare themselves to carry out such a policy of conservation the Federal Government should withdraw its supervision and turn the work over to the States.

SETTLEMENT OF OUR LANDS.

"Believing that those who control the soil control the Nation, and that the most blessed nations are those where the ownership of lands is in many hands, we insist that in the management and sale of our public lands both the Federal Government and the State should maintain such a policy as will make for the rapid settlement of all vacant agricultural lands.

DESERT-LAND ACT.

"Resolved, That this convention recommend to Congress amendments of the following nature to the desert-land act:

"(1) That the entryman's proof of citizenship in the State wherein he makes a desert-land filing be changed from the time of filing to the time of proving up.

"(2) That the requirements of reclamation be enlarged to embrace the alternative proof of cultivation by the actual growing of crops by dry-farm methods on double the acreage required if by irrigation.

HOMESTEAD ENTRY.

"We approve the plan now before Congress to permit homestead entries by persons over 18 years of age.

WATER POWER.

"Whereas Congress has declared 'the water of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply, upon the public lands and not navigable, shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes,' we insist the Federal Government has no lawful authority to exercise control over the water of a State through ownership of public lands.

"We maintain the waters of a State belong to the people of the State, and that the States should be left free to develop water-power possibilities and should receive fully the revenues and other benefits derived from such development.

PRECIOUS METALS.

"We reiterate our expression, contained in article 10 of the 1913 resolutions, referring to the reopening of mineral land, and in addition would urge that the revenues derived from the sale of such lands should be used for the reclamation of the arid lands of the West.

GRAZING LANDS.

"We believe grazing lands should be disposed of through an "enlarged homestead" act giving the settler sufficient ground to enable him, on a live-stock basis, to support a family.

SUMMER HOMESTEAD LAW.

"We favor the passage of a summer homestead or preemption law, permitting land not valuable for timber, minerals, or agriculture but suitable for summer homes to be acquired in not to exceed 40-acre tracts for summer homes. The entryman should not be required to be a resident of the State in which the land is situated, and suitable improvements of the value of $300 and three years' summer residence should be necessary to secure patent.

GOOD ROADS.

"We reiterate that 5 per cent of the public lands in the several States should be granted to the said States to aid in construction of permanent roads.

DELAYS—RED TAPE.

"We believe one of the greatest blessings the officials at Washington could bestow upon the West would be the elimination of all red tape and the taking of prompt action upon all matters pending before the departments and in which the Western States are interested, and we are pleased to note that efforts are already being made in that direction.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

"We are pleased at the thoughtfulness of the Secretary of the Interior in sending so many of his representatives to the irrigation conference now in session in this city. We express our appreciation of his intention to adopt a more liberal policy toward the settlement and development of the West and assure him of our hearty cooperation in this direction.

DONATION OF LANDS.

"We recommend that 10 per cent of all vacant and unappropriated public lands in each of the arid States be donated to such States and each of them as shall so request, said lands to be sold by such States as other State lands are disposed of, and the proceeds of such sales to form a reservoir fund to be used under the direction of the State for irrigation reclamation purposes.

RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

"We urgently recommend that the United States reclamation projects now under process of construction be completed at the earliest practicable moment and turned over to the settlers thereunder as soon as can be.

CAREY ACT PROJECTS.

"We urgently recommend that the United States Reclamation Service immediately investigate any and all Carey land, irrigation district, or like projects commenced or under construction in the arid States and render such projects all financial and other assistance possible, to the end that they may be immediately completed and the settlers thereunder protected and assisted, and the persons holding bonds issued against such projects be compensated as far as practicable.

"We urge the press of the Western States to investigate and actively support these principles.

RESOLUTIONS REAFFIRMED.

"We reaffirm the action taken by the governors' conference in Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1913, as follows:

"'We, the governors of public-land States, in conference assembled, believing that upon the administration of the laws governing the disposal of the public lands in a very large measure depends the future prosperity of our States, do hereby agree to the following statement of what we believe should be the policy of the National Government in the administration of the public lands:

"'1. That the newer States having been admitted in express terms on an equal footing in all respects whatever with the original States, no realization of that condition can be attained until the State jurisdiction shall extend to all their territory the taxing power of all their lands, and their political power and influence be thereby secured.

"'2. That as rapidly as the States become prepared to take over the work of conservation, the Federal Government withdraw its bureau from the field and turn the work over to the States.

"'3. That permanent withdrawal of any lands within our States from entry and sale we believe to be contrary to the spirit and letter of the ordinance of 1787, the policy of which was followed for over a century, and we urge that such lands be returned to entry and opened to sale as speedily as possible.

"'4. Dilatory action on the part of executive departments of the Government in passing title to purchasers of public lands is unfair to the States, as it permits purchasers to occupy the lands indefinitely without the States having power to tax them.

"'5. We believe that the best development of these States depends upon the disposal of the public lands to citizens as rapidly as the laws can be complied with.

"'6. Bona fide homestead entry within the forest-reserve boundaries should be permitted in the same manner as on unreserved lands, subject only to protest where lands selected are heavily timbered with trees of commercial value or known to contain valuable mineral deposits.

"'7. That the Government grant to the public-land States 5 per cent of the public land remaining in such, to be administered by the States as the school lands are now administered, for the purpose of building national public highways.

"'8. That liberal land grants be made for the purpose of establishing and maintaining forestry schools in the public-land States.

"'9. That rights of way for all lawful purposes be granted without unwarranted hindrance or delay.

"'10. That all mineral lands now withheld from entry or classified at prohibitive prices be reopened to entry at nominal prices, under strict provisions against monopolization.

"'11. That we express our appreciation of the splendid work done by the departments at Washington in cooperation with the several States in experimentation and instruction. This assistance has been more valuable in the education of our children and the development of our States, and we commend the same principle to the administration at Washington as being the most feasible plan for the present advancement of true conservation.

"'12. We believe that the National Government should provide for expert experimental work in the solution of the mining problems of the mineral States in the same manner that the Agricultural Department now assists the farmers in solving the agricultural problems.

"'13. We believe that the speedy settlement of those public lands constitutes the true and best interests of the Republic. The wealth and strength of the country are its land-owning population.

"'14. The best and most economical development of this western territory was accomplished under those methods in vogue when the States of the Middle West were occupied and settled. In our opinion, these methods have never been improved upon, and we advocate a return to those first principles of vested ownership with joint interest and with widely scattered individual responsibility.'"

We are fully aware that States which have little coal, oil, or phosphate, etc., have less personal concern as to what policy is adopted by the Government in relation to the use or disposition thereof. And States that have comparatively little water power are not so directly concerned about the governmental policy in relation thereto. But most of the Western States have large water-power possibilities, and approximately one-seventh of the States of Colorado, Wyoming, and Montana are coal lands.

We are also cognizant of the fact that there has been a growing sentiment among a good many people in the West who have become discouraged and sick and tired of the dog-in-the-manger policy that has been pursued in recent years by the Interior Department in relation to coal and water-power developments; and they are apparently willing to accept almost anything that gives even a delusive hope of opening up development. Possibly they should not be blamed, because they have evidently come to the conclusion that it is better to fly to the evils that they know not of rather than further endure those that we have.

There is a very general and widespread desire throughout the West to in some way raise the present unjust and unnecessary governmental embargo on the development of our resources located upon the public domain. The people want to in some way secure the expeditious development and maintenance and operation of our resources under suitable control and regulations in the interest of the general public. Every right-thinking person is in favor of those objects. The question is how best to secure them. The West heartily welcomes any wise regulation, as well as the thorough prevention of any monopoly or waste. But for the accomplishment of that we emphatically deny that it is at all necessary or right or fair for the Government to permanently withhold our resources from private ownership and in addition tax us for the use of them. We have been reared to believe that perpetual bureaucratic control in our States is a flagrant violation of good governmental procedure under our theory of government.

No matter how loudly and vigorously and repeatedly it may be proclaimed that these lands "belong to all the people," the fact remains that when those States were admitted to the Union the United States Government entered into a solemn compact with each of them that the lands within their borders should be expeditiously and in an orderly manner disposed of to the settlers and be allowed to go into private ownership to help maintain the State government; and Congress has no moral, legal, or constitutional right to repudiate or violate that agreement—much less to wantonly impose excise duties upon our development.

While we are earnestly desirous of having our reclamation projects finished as expeditiously as possible and new ones that are feasible undertaken, at the same time this policy means that it will necessarily be at least 20 years, and probably 25 or 30 years, before any of the Western States will ever get one dollar of this money for the general use of the State. One half of the gross receipts of all of these rentals and royalties should be at once paid into the treasury of the State from which they are derived, and the other half into the reclamation fund; and after the money has been once used in the reclamation fund it should be turned over to the treasury of the State from which the money came. It is this generation, not the next, that needs that money.

The West is new and poor, and it is absolutely wrong for Congress to force the West to help support the East—at the same time depriving the West of many of its greatest sources of revenue by permanently withdrawing them from entry and preventing them ever going into private ownership and becoming subject to taxation for State and local governments. But, harsh as it is, it is not so much the disposition of the funds that we object to as it is the permanent withdrawal from entry of these enormous resources, and the perpetual bureaucratic domination that will be exercised from Washington in their administration and control. It is the violation of what we deem are the inherent and equal rights of our Western States as sovereign States.

Aside from the purely material questions involved there are those which go to the very foundation, the very fundamentals, of our form of government.

In the past we have hailed and quoted with pride the statement of the Supreme Court of the United States that this was "an indestructible Union, composed of indestructible States," and that "this Union was and is a union of States equal in power, dignity, and authority," and that of necessity "all new States were admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States."

Such legislation as is now proposed inevitably leads to an undermining of the sovereignty of the State; to a weakening of its power to sustain itself; to a confiscation of a part of the fruits of its natural resources; to a withholding of those resources from the possibility of taxation, thus increasing the burdens upon all other property within the State.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the individual position of the State of Colorado upon this subject, nor any question as to whether or not the undersigned Representatives correctly reflect the wishes of our Commonwealth, we will insert a copy of the memorials passed by the Colorado Legislature at both of its last sessions in 1913 and 1915, the former being the nineteenth general assembly and the memorial appearing at page 655 of the session laws of Colorado for 1913, and the latter appearing at page 603 of the session laws of Colorado for 1915, the twentieth general assembly, and which, in our judgment, are not only fair statements of the rights of the West, but are among the best and most statesmanlike documents ever presented to Congress, and we earnestly urge our colleagues to carefully consider them:

[House joint memorial No. 5.]

MEMORIAL.

To Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President United States of America, and the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, respectfully represents that under the present Federal policy of control of the public domain the following conditions obtain:

1. The people of Colorado are in favor of conservation in the meaning of prevention of waste and monopoly, but are unalterably opposed to it in the definition of preserving our lands and resources in their present state for future generations.

We agree that these natural resources belong to all the people, but this ownership is not now different from what it always has been—namely, subject to the right of the citizen to acquire the same under liberal laws to the extent necessary to satisfactory settlement and the building of permanent homes.

2. It has been charged that the Western States have failed in the past to do their duty in the conservation of these resources, but those who make these charges utterly fail to consider that any unlawful acquisition or waste was committed under Federal laws and on public lands, and that the States, having no control, were powerless to prevent it. They also fail to recognize the fact that the amount of lands unlawfully acquired was a mere trifle compared with that lawfully acquired by bona fide settlers and others.

3. The older States have had, and still have, the benefits arising from private acquisition of all the public lands within their boundaries, receiving revenue therefrom through taxation and otherwise, and it is therefore a great injustice that they should now seek to impose upon the Western States obstructions and burdens with which they themselves did not have to contend.

4. We deny that it is right or advisable for the Federal Government to retain the title to and lease the public lands for any purpose, as the history of the country shows that in 1807 Congress authorized the War Department to lease the lead mines in the territory afterwards embraced in the States of Missouri, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Iowa, reserving to the United States a royalty of one-sixth of the product.

This system was vigorously opposed by the residents of the region involved from the very beginning, and after a few years' trial the Missouri Legislature and the governor of Illinois protested against it. Presidents Polk and Fillmore urged its abandonment. The Secretary of War condemned it, saying that the benefit to the Government bore "no just proportion to the injury done to the country—first, by retarding the settlement of the country; and, second, by the demoralizing influence of the system."

Year after year congressional Committees on Public Lands reported against it. One of these reports concluded as follows:

"When the United States accepted the cession of the Northwestern Territory, the acceptance was on the express condition and under a pledge to form it into distinct Republican States and to admit them as members of the Federal Union, having the same rights of freedom, sovereignty, and independence as the other States. This pledge your into States and giving them names, but it includes a pledge to sell the lands, so that they may be settled and thus form States. No other mode of disposing of them can be regarded as a compliance with that committee believes would not be redeemed by merely dividing the surface pledge."

5. For nearly 40 years this controversy was waged with increasing intensity, until 1846, when an act was passed directing the sale of these lands.

This condemned and discarded policy is now sought to be resurrected, and in pursuance thereof there have been withdrawn forest, coal, oil, phosphate, and power-site lands, aggregating in Colorado over 21,000,000 acres, equal to 33 per cent of the total area of the State, together with similar amounts in other Western States, so that, in all, the area thus withdrawn is greater than the combined area of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Pennsylvania, both Virginias, Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, and Illinois, and thus nearly 300,000,000 acres are now, and have been for several years, practically out of reach of individual enterprise or taxation for the support of State government. This obstructive policy is a departure from the policy of the past 50 years, and in violation of the rights of these States, as provided in their enabling acts admitting them into the Union, their constitutions, and the fundamental principles on which the Union of the States is predicated.

The idea that the leasing of the forests and other public lands for grazing purposes to stockmen, reserving to the settler and miner a right to enter them, will give the latter adequate protection is a fallacy, for the reason that it is obvious that such entries will necessarily interfere with the proper handling of stock. Where a stockman has 1,000 acres or more under such a lease, and a homesteader should undertake to enter 160 or 320 acres of the best of it, it is a certainty that the stockman would in every way not positively unlawful discourage the settler, unless we credit the stockman with less than ordinary sense of self-protection. And it is equally certain that he would succeed in preventing the entry, even if he had to buy the settler off.

The inevitable result of such leases will be to substantially end homesteading and mining on the public lands.

6. We assert that the States are vested with the right to control the waters within their respective borders (subject only to the right of the Federal Government to protect navigation on those streams that are navigable), to dispose of them to those who will use them for beneficial purposes, and that all returns therefrom, direct or indirect, justly belong to the States and not to the Federal Government.

7. Reclamation of arid lands when undertaken by the United States Government should in all cases recognize the rights of the States to control the waters within their borders, and should also recognize the equitable rights of its water users and other competitive projects and those of private enterprises.

These projects and enterprises should not be made by officers of the Reclamation Service an excuse for the refusal to approve of rights of way and occupancy of lands under private irrigation projects; such delays seriously obstruct private enterprises and the development and improvement of lands belonging to the States, and we ask that any such refusals be revoked.

We further ask that the Reclamation Service take immediate steps looking toward the early completion of all projects now under way within this State, in order that early settlement under these projects may take place.

8. The rapid descent and general character of mountain streams give such endless opportunities for water plants that any monopoly of the same is physically impossible. Indeed, the idea is growing rapidly that the small power plant is the coming one. When water has served its purpose for one power plant, it continues its descent. It is not consumed, nor does it vanish. Its volume is as great after as before, and therefore but a little lower down in the mountains another power plant may be constructed, and so on, while the stream shall last.

These delays have seriously obstructed not only these private projects, but have also interfered with the irrigation and improvement of several hundred thousand acres of land belonging to the State of Colorado, and granted under the laws of the United States for the purpose of improvement and sale by the State.

We ask that these unlawful refusals be promptly revoked and further delays forbidden.

9. We recognize that some good has been accomplished by the Forest Service, yet at the same time its cost has been many times greater than its benefits; it has materially hindered the settlement and development of the country, chiefly because of the hard and fast rules made at Washington by chiefs unfamiliar with actual conditions, and administered by subordinates, many of whom are equally unfamiliar with such conditions.

As to the scientific forestry promised, it is only necessary to refer to the reports of the forester to show that his management in many respects is most unscientific. His reports show that billions of feet of timber in the natural forests are overripe, decaying, and decayed, and are an actual fire menace to the remainder and ought to be cut. Yet the high prices he asks and the rules and regulations enforced are greatly restricting sales and cutting.

We urge that a committee, congressional or otherwise, be immediately appointed to visit Colorado and investigate the conditions referred to above and report on the same. It seems necessary to have the committee pursue its investigation on the ground, as few of those who suffer by the methods in force would be able to advance the expenses of a trip to Washington. Besides, an actual view of many of these things will disclose features which it would be difficult to make clear by testimony.

10. An unjust discrimination is made between grazing and other agricultural lands. The major portion of this State is composed of what is termed "grazing lands," and grass is the greatest agricultural crop known and the most indispensable. All lands at present chiefly valuable for grazing should be as freely open to entry as are farm lands, but in sufficient quantities to support families. More than three-fourths of our present cultivated area was originally located as pasture, and it was largely through this privilege that our present cultivated area was developed.

There is hardly an acre of grazing land on the plains that will not ultimately become agricultural lands with the development of storage of water and the economical use thereof.

11. Nearly all of our metalliferous lands have been included in the forest reserves, since which time not a single important mining camp has been opened. The unwarranted interference by the Forest Service is largely responsible for the falling off of millions of dollars in the annual metal output. The man who is willing to put his labor and money into the development of a mining claim is the person best fitted to classify the land and should be permitted to acquire it.

We venture the assurance that if 40 years ago the forest reserves had been established neither Leadville nor Cripple Creek nor a score of other mining camps would have been discovered or developed.

Although our lands are of great variety, they are open to entry for but few purposes and in unsuitable quantities. For instance, a piece of land can not be taken merely for a home.

12. In Territorial days Congress gave us the water of our natural streams and confirmed that right in the acceptance of our State constitution. Certain Federal bureaus are trying to take away that right by denying rights of way over the public domain.

The contention of Federal authority, as in the case of the Eagle Dam, for the first storage of water at the lower end of the stream, instead of near the source of supply, would prevent the repeated use of water for power and irrigation upstream, would uselessly deprive large areas of development, and would therefore be contrary to the principle of "the best use" as demonstrated by the experience of more than half a century.

The diversion and use of water when streams are high equalize the flow, furnish a better supply of water during the dry season, and, by lessening floods, save lives and property on the rivers below.

Special agents are permitted to protest against the validity of entries without any knowledge of facts relating thereto. They should be required to make their objections at the time of final proof, that the entryman might face his accusers.

13. The courts should be opened to land disputes, that citizens may be afforded an opportunity to enforce their rights instead of the system now in vogue of determination through star-chamber proceedings by administrative officers.

14. Under the express terms of the enabling act Colorado was admitted to the Union on an equal footing in all respects whatsoever with the original States. To be on an equal footing we must have the power to tax the land and other property within the State, for without that power we can not maintain State and local governments and institutions. The present policy of the Federal Government is to place our lands and resources on a revenue basis, paying taxes in the form of royalties into the Federal Treasury, thereby seriously interfering with the means of supporting our needy growing institutions. The effect of the present policy is to permit local taxation only upon farm and city and town lands now privately owned. This might be less objectionable in Iowa or Illinois, where practically all of the land is tillable. More than half of the area of Colorado is not tillable under any known methods, but is composed of mineral, grazing, and timbered areas which take the place of farm lands and which are just as expensive to govern, if not more so, than are the farm lands. The policy, therefore, which withdraws these from taxation is a serious handicap to the State.

While our resources are of great variety they are not naturally ready for use. On the average there has been a dollar in expense for every dollar in precious metals taken from the mountains, and the value of our lands is measured by the labor required for their irrigation and development. Without the value, the presence, and industry our people have added to them there is not a dollar's worth of value in any of our natural resources. Every dollar, therefore, charged in the form of royalty on the products of these resources is a tax on human toil.

We can not hope to secure the best settlement of our lands nor development of our resources upon a tenantry basis. The man who is permitted to lease lands cheaply for grazing will try to keep them for pasture.

15. There is but one-third of our area on the tax rolls, with extraordinary educational requirements to equip our people to meet mining, industrial, irrigation, and other agricultural development. We must, therefore, increase the taxable area to include all the lands if every portion of the State shall bear its just share of this burden.

A large part of our territory is included in the Louisiana Purchase, in the treaty ratifying which it is decreed:

"The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States and admitted, as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States."

If this provision were complied with the present bureaucratic government over large areas of our State would be impossible. Is there any reason why people who must live in and do business with the said reservations should be deprived of the same rights and privileges enjoyed by the citizens of the older States, and what reason is there to suppose that forests can not be grown and protected or monopolies prevented under the republican form of government?

The incentive of ownership is necessary to secure the best development of our mineral territory, and we can not expect the best citizenship unless people are permitted to own their own homes, no matter in what business they engage.

The private-owned land in the State is scattered promiscuously amongst the Federal-owned land, and there can be no hope of harmonious action or good feeling through the intermingled double jurisdiction over our territory.

The Government proposes as a landlord to go into almost every kind of business within the State on untaxed property in competition with private owned and taxed property. The public business does not need to pay expenses, but the owner of the private property must pay taxes to make up the loss of his Federal competitor. The Federal Government engaging in business as a proprietor must necessarily occupy a contractual relation with the citizen, under which the Government may enforce its contract against the citizen, whereas the citizen may not enforce his contract against the Government.

Under the present administration of the forest reserves the Government acknowledges the moral right of the State to tax the property by returning to the State 25 per cent of the proceeds from sales, rentals, and special privileges.

It assumes the right, however, to dictate the disposition of this rebate by decreeing that it shall go to the support of roads and schools, two popular purposes, but ignoring the necessity of the State to protect in the courts the very lives of those living upon Federal-owned property and the necessity for the maintenance of educational, charitable, and penal institutions by the State.

16. The continued withdrawal of our lands and resources from entry and placing them upon a revenue basis to pay royalties into the Federal Treasury means their control by Congress, and that Texas, which never had any public lands, would, in the House of Representatives, have four times the legislative power over our territory that we ourselves could exert; and that New York, which has no public domain, would have ten times the legislative power over our territory that we ourselves possess, and that, too, without any adequate knowledge of local conditions and necessities.

The double jurisdiction over the territory of the State has led to strong opposition to Federal officials, against whose orders and rules there is no recourse in the courts, and employees of the Federal bureaus defending their position have been constantly doing missionary work in behalf of the general principle of Federal control of our lands and resources.

The Forest Service, for instance, through its numerous employees, has been able to enlist the eastern press in praise of its work and to create a sentiment against the West.

The Federal Constitution declares: "The United States shall guarantee to each State in the Union a republican form of government"; not a republican form of government over part of the State, but over it all. Certainly no one can contend that a republican form of government exists under the bureaucratic control already in force over a large part of our territory and sought to be enforced over two-thirds of our area with, its arbitrary rules and regulations enforceable at the pleasure of the bureau with discretionary power, with its natural antagonism to State laws and State control, with a long list of special privileges to enlist support, and with all the evils, therefore, of a system of favoritism.

"Republicanism and bureaucracy are incompatible existence." (Cent. Encyclopedia.)

Our laws and customs are built upon experience, and our people are better acquainted with local conditions and necessities and are more interested in building the State aright than are the people of the East. If there is fear of monopolization, Congress, in the act of cession, could provide effective means for reversion of title to the State whenever monopoly is attempted. The administration of our public lands and resources should be under the jurisdiction of the Secretaries of the Interior and Agriculture, familiar from experience with the local situation, in order that it may be for the settlement of our lands, the development of our institutions, and the betterment of social conditions.

17. We therefore earnestly request under existing or more appropriate laws such an administration as will secure the settlement of our public lands and the development of our resources, placing them upon the tax rolls with effective provisions against monopolization and waste. We ask for no advantage or privilege not enjoyed by the older States, but feel we have a right to insist that we be placed on an equal footing in all respects whatsoever with the original States to own and use our lands and resources to build our State and support its government and institutions.

O. C. SKINNER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

THE TWENTIETH GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF COLORADO.

[Senate concurrent resolution No. 6.]

Whereas the Congress of the United States, at the last session, seriously considered bills providing for acts to lease water-power sites, coal oil, and phosphate lands, and did succeed in passing a measure leasing the coal lands of Alaska; and

Whereas a determined effort is being made by certain interests to induce the United States Government to adopt the leasing policy in relation to public lands and natural resources upon such lands; and

Whereas this policy, if applied to Colorado, would place over half the area of this State under a Federal landlord system that would forever prevent this State from levying taxes upon any of these lands or resources; and

Whereas under our State constitution and under the Constitution of the United States Colorado was admitted to the Union with all the rights and privileges of the original States, which included the right to levy taxes upon all of the property within our borders, except where title is held by the Federal Government, and the establishing of the leasing system upon these Federal lands would result in the development of these lands for the benefit of the Federal Government rather than for the benefit of the State, which is a privilege all the original States had and which has enable them to develop their territory for the benefit of the citizens and to levy taxes against all of the territory for the support of the State: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twentieth General Assembly of the State of Colorado (the House concurring), That we are unalterably opposed to the adoption of the leasing system to apply to any of the lands or resources now held in the name of the United States, and we protest that the adoption of such a system in Colorado would not only interfere with permanent development of this State but would be contrary to the rights of Colorado, guaranteed to us both by the Constitution of the State and of the United States: And be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of our Members in Congress and to the President of the United States.

Approved April 12, 1915.

If Congress and the Interior and Agriculture Departments would carry out the sentiment of the governors' resolutions and of these memorials and follow the present laws the West would grow by leaps and bounds, and the entire Nation would be benefited beyond all possibility of calculation.

The last national Democratic platform, adopted at Baltimore, contained the following provisions:

"We believe in the conservation and the development for the use of the people of the natural resources of the country. Our forests, our sources of water supply, our arable and our mineral lands, our navigable streams, and all the other material resources with which our country has been so lavishly endowed constitute the foundation of our national wealth. Such additional legislation as may be necessary to prevent their being wasted or absorbed by special or privileged interests should be enacted and the policy of their conservation should be rigidly adhered to.

"The public domain should be administered and disposed of with due regard to the general welfare. Reservations should be limited to the purposes which they purport to serve, and not extended to include land wholly unsuited therefor. The unnecessary withdrawal from sale and settlement of enormous tracts of public land upon which tree growth never existed and can not be promoted tends only to retard development, create discontent, and bring reproach upon the policy of conservation.

"The public-land laws should be administered in a spirit of the broadest liberality toward the settler exhibiting a bona fide purpose to comply therewith to the end that the invitation of this Government to the landless should be as atractive as possible, and the plain provisions of the forest-reserve act permitting homestead entries to be made within the national forest should not be nullified by administration regulations which amount to a withdrawal of great areas of the same from settlement.

"Immediate action should be taken by Congress to make available the vast and valuable coal deposits of Alaska under conditions that will be a perfect guaranty against their falling into the hands of monopolizing corporations, associations, or interests.

"We rejoice in the inheritance of mineral resources unequaled in extent, variety, or value, and in the development of a mining industry unequaled in its magnitude and importance. We honor the men, who, in their hazardous toil underground, daily risk their lives in extracting and preparing for our use the products of the mine, so essential to the industries, the commerce, and the comfort of the people of this country. And we pledge ourselves to the extension of the work of the Bureau of Mines in every way appropriate for national legislation with a view of safeguarding the lives of miners, lessening the waste of essential resources, and promoting the economic development of mining, which, along with agriculture, must in the future, even more than in the past, serve as the very foundation of our national prosperity and welfare and our international commerce."

The last Republican national platform contained the following provisions:

CONSERVATION POLICY.

"We rejoice in the success of the distinctive Republican policy of the conservation of our national resources for their use by the people without waste and without monopoly. We pledge ourselves to a continuance of such a policy.

"We favor such fair and reasonable rules and regulations as will not discourage or interfere with actual bona fide home seekers, prospectors, and miners in the acquisition of public lands under existing laws.

RECLAMATION OF LANDS.

"We favor the continuance of the policy of the Government with regard to the reclamation of arid lands; and for the encouragement of the speedy settlement and improvement of such lands we favor an amendment to the law that will reasonably extend the time within which the cost of any reclamation project may be repaid by the landowners under it."

Neither of the two great political parties has ever in the history of this Government adopted or promulgated this leasing policy. The National Progressive Party during the last campaign adopted a plank in its platform advocating the retention and control of these resources by the Federal Government. They did not advocate or say anything about the "leasing" of them for Federal revenue or otherwise, but merely declared for the "retention" of them by the Government to prevent monopoly and encourage legitimate development. But the State platform of that party in Colorado did not contain the slightest intimation of any desire or intention of the members of that party to advocate any leasing policy of any of these resources. We think we are safe in saying that no political party in any Western State has ever advocated this universal and perpetual Federal bureau leasing policy, and we predict that any party that does will fail to elect its ticket.

The Democratic State platform in Colorado, in the year 1908, upon which the entire Democratic ticket was elected, contained the following plank:

"Seventh. Public lands.—We commend forest reserves upon real forest areas, but condemn the present arbitrary and unjust administration of the same and demand that the administration of the reserves be placed by Federal law under effective State and local control.

"We demand the immediate exclusion of agricultural and unforested areas from the reserves, the dismissal of the army of useless office-holders in our midst, maintained at the public expense of the people of the West for the upbuilding of a gigantic political machine at Washington; the abolition of unjust grazing taxes; the repeal of a system of timber sales which puts the lumber market in the hands of a few and by which the price of lumber has been doubled to the consumers.

"We demand the repeal of all laws endowing the forestry department with authority to decree and establish rules and regulations concerning the administration of the forest reserves and declare all such matters to be legislative in their character, which should be covered by congressional enactment.

"We are unalterably opposed to the pronounced purpose of the Republican administration to lease the balance of the public domain, thereby withdrawing the land from settlement. The people of the West are entitled to the use of the natural resources of their localities with which to build their States. They are to be put on an equal footing with the people of the East in this regard, and will be satisfied with nothing less."

The Democratic State platform in Colorado, in the year 1910, upon which practically the entire State ticket and all three Congressmen were elected, contained the following plank:

"We reassert our position upon the public-land question as adopted at Pueblo in 1908, and declare the right of the State to control of the resources within its boundaries; we are in sympathy with the policy of considering the natural resources of the Nation and the State in a manner which will protect right of the future generations, but we are unalterably opposed to the bureaucratic, arbitrary regulations which work hardship on the homesteaders and the miners and retard the development of the State."

During the campaign of 1912 the Democratic Party in Colorado, after very careful and exhaustive consideration, adopted one of the most comprehensive platforms that party has ever had in that State. All of the four members of this House and both of the Senators from Colorado were elected upon that platform. Among the declarations of principles for which we stood were the following:

GIVE PUBLIC LANDS FOR HIGHWAYS.

"We favor the ceding by Congress to the State of public lands for highway purposes, the proceeds thereof to be used by the highway commission for the construction and maintenance of public thoroughfares exclusively.

STATE SHOULD CONTROL PUBLIC LAND.

"In conformity with the joint resolution unanimously adopted by the eighteenth general assembly, and in the language thereof, 'We most earnestly request that all public lands within the boundaries of Colorado be turned over to the State under terms just and fair to both State and Nation, and with such restrictions as will effectually prevent monopoly, to the end that all territory shall be under one jurisdiction and uniform law; that we shall have the same rights enjoyed by the older States of our Union; that all land capable of agricultural development shall be freely open to homestead entry; that lands suitable for summer homes shall be sold in small tracts, and under proper restrictions, for that purpose; that prospecting may be encouraged and greater mining development secured; that rights of way shall be under the control of the State, avoiding vexatious and often prohibitive delays in construction; that water power may be had and manufacturing encouraged; that our lands may be made revenue producing, and that such revenue from rentals, royalties, and sales may be used for the construction of public highways and the completion of reclamation projects; that greater settlement and production may make our rural communities more populous, improve social conditions, help the railways to give better service and make needed extensions; and that the blessings of local self-government, including the right to impose taxes upon all property alike and the disposal of such revenues as local needs demand, shall be guaranteed to all our people.

LAND QUESTION DECLARED ONE FOR COURTS.

"The jurisdiction of the courts should be extended to all contests and controversies arising over homestead, desert, and other land filings and entries, including protests and objections by the Government thereto, and heard and determined as now provided in adverse cases arising under the mining laws of the United States.

"We denounce the policy of the Republican administration, which, having retarded our development, now proposes to withdraw all the remaining agricultural, grazing, and mineral public lands from all forms of entry, with the expressed determination of imposing upon the West a permanent bureaucratic rule and Federal leasing system of all the Government resources within our borders, and thereby disastrously retarding the development of our State and depriving our Commonwealth of its just and constitutional rights."

While we have not the platforms available, the fact is that, practically speaking, the Republican Party in Colorado has denounced this proposed leasing policy as bitterly as the Democrats have.

There is nothing personal or political whatever in any of our objections to this bill or this leasing and royalty system.

This is not a question of individuals or of political parties. It is a question of the constitutional right, as well as the justness and advisability of a governmental policy. Ninety-five per cent of the over 800,000 population of Colorado have always been against the policy of the Government going into a general business of the perpetual withdrawal and leasing of the natural resources of our State. This protest is directed not only against this bill but also against its companion bill, providing for the permanent withholding and leasing of all the water power in the Western States, without, as we think, safeguarding or even recognizing the constitutional rights of the people of those States in their exclusive ownership of all of those waters and the fact that they are all now appropriated. This protest is also against the proposed hasty classification of all the remaining 279,544,494 acres yet unreserved public domain with the avowed object and purpose of leasing all thereof; and also against what seems to us a part of an impending program of leasing all of the gold and silver and other precious and valuable metals upon or in the public domain.

In other words, this is a protest against a general policy, not against any of the details or any particular part of this bill, except the disposition of the funds. There are many provisions in the bill under consideration that are beneficial, and if any leasing bill is adopted we hope that the beneficial features of this bill will be preserved, especially the one authorizing the leasing of 160 acres of coal land to municipalities without any royalty charge. That is an amendment carrying into effect the provisions of the bill which Representative TAYLOR has had pending in Congress for years. It is to provide cheaper fuel and is in aid of, and in the direction of, municipal ownership. If this general bill could be passed, giving all municipalities coal land free, under proper restrictions, it would effectually prevent any coal monopoly or extortion and be almost a godsend to the West. That is a true conservation measure, with no jobs or royalties attached to it. We hope and believe if that provision is retained in the bill it will bring about much cheaper coal and better service to the inhabitants of the cities and towns throughout the West.

It is largely true that many of the natural resources of the West are in a state of nonuse, and they have been in that state for millions of years. But it is not necessary for the Federal Government to go into all these different kinds of business and adopt a general leasing policy of all of those resources in order to open and develop the West. If the Government will open them, they will be developed.

It is probably true that existing laws need overhauling; if so, Congress should overhaul them; and in the meantime the West would be wonderfully benefited by a more liberal construction of the existing laws. We have had government by suspicion too long in former years, and that is one of the main reasons why the West has not developed faster.

It is not right or necessary for Congress to put the Western States upon the same basis as the Territory of Alaska in order to assist in their development or to prevent monopoly.

According to the reports of the Geological Survey, there is enough known and accessible coal in this country to last us 7,000 years; and from the day that Columbus first set foot on Watling Island down to this hour we have actually used less than 1 per cent of our available coal supply. So there is no likelihood of any famine in coal.

If there is a general demand for better laws to encourage development and prevent speculation, let us enact them. We of the West want development more than anyone else does, and we will heartily join in the enactment of any reasonable measures that will prevent speculation and monopoly and safeguard the public interests and prevent extortion and waste. But we deny that it is necessary to adopt a permanent leasing policy, thereby putting ourselves into a perpetual Federal tenantry class, to bring about these most desirable results.

At page 16 of his report for the year ending June 30, 1910, Secretary of the Interior Ballinger made a report upon the question of the proper disposition of the public coal lands, and conclusively showed the impracticability and fallacy of the Government going into the coal-leasing business, as follows:

COAL LANDS.

"Respecting the disposition of coal in the public lands, I call attention to what was said on this subject in my last annual report, to the effect that new legislation was desirable and that the most advantageous method of disposal of coal deposits will be found in a measure authorizing the lease or sale thereof subject to forfeiture for failure to exercise the rights granted, with restrictions on mining operations in order to conserve the deposit as a public utility. In my annual report as Commissioner of the General Land Office in 1907 I gave the reasons which impelled me to believe that the best interests of the Government will be subserved by a sale rather than a lease of the deposits. I also set forth in an official statement some of the difficulties which I thought would be encountered by the Government in the operation of a leasing system, as follows:

"'First. Under a sale of a deposit an owner would not need that supervision that a lessee would necessarily be under in the matter of protecting the mine as against wasteful and ruinous operation. In operation it will be found that a lessee will naturally have an incentive to produce as much coal with as little expenditure in honest development as possible, resulting in many cases of robbing the mine—that is, leaving insufficient timbering, pillars, air shafts, etc., to maintain its permanency while the coal of this or overlying seams is being removed; and the high-grade or more valuable coals will often be worked out and the low grades left in the mine, resulting in a total loss thereof to the public. Furthermore, upon the termination of a lease or other abandonment, Government maintenance will be necessary in many cases which would not occur under the sale system. Government maintenance would mean retimbering and a continuance of physical improvements to prevent decay and loss of the deposits from fire, cave-ins, flooding, etc. It is true that in case of forfeiture under the sale of the deposits similar maintenance would be necessary except upon a resale; but the cases in which forfeiture would occur under the sale system would be small compared with the abandonments or forfeitures under the leasing system.

"'Second. The collection of rentals, royalties, or tolls, as the case may be, under a leasing system will necessarily involve the maintenance of a numerous body of Government employees at a great expense to the Government and add further expense for a detailed system of accounting. This increased expense involved in the leasing of coal deposits will, of necessity, increase the price of coal to the consumer and will also be a constant menace in administration as likely to produce in many instances public scandal if not corrupt practices. These objectionable features would appear to me to be practically removed under a sale of the deposits.

"'Third. Regulations, under the leasing system, will be likely to trench upon the police power of the States as to mine inspection, supervision, and regulation, where, under the sale system, there could be little or no conflict.

"'Fourth. In the operation of a coal mine under a lease from the Federal Government the lease would necessarily have to be so worded as to protect the Government against liability for negligence on the part of the operator resulting from loss of life or destruction of property. In case the Government's agents were likewise grossly negligent in enforcing the regulations a grave question is presented, whether or not the Government is not at least morally liable.'"

"I consider it highly important that Congress take action in giving the department an effective method of disposition of coal lands and deposits, especially in Alaska. The question of whether it should be by a sale of the deposit or through a leasing method is one to be determined by Congress. In Alaska it is possible that a leasing system could be adapted to the country with great efficiency and with less complication than in the States. Under the present coal-land laws the appraisement as fixed by the department is at a price estimated on the basis of a reasonable royalty except in Alaska, where the price by law is fixed at a flat acreage rate, and in the States the administrative policy is to secure by sale what would accrue to the Government if the deposits were mined on a royalty basis."

That statement is just as true now as it was then; and everyone who knows anything about practical coal mining will, we think, realize that Secretary Ballinger's statement is not far from just what will happen when that department starts in to run the coal mines of the West. Moreover, the consumers or the Government will be burdened with the enormous expense of maintaining an army of coal-mine inspectors and arrogant and irritating agents, with no commensurate benefit whatever.

It is said that "the leasing system is not new; it is old." That is true. The leasing system is old and tried and has been found wanting, and was emphatically and indignantly thrown off by our own Government as an infamous incubus. It cost the Government more than four times as much as the entire gross receipts from royalties.

* * * * * * *

The States of Illinois and Missouri fought valiantly for 25 years to dislodge from their shoulders this leasing burden, and now some of their Representatives, ignoring that long and severe lesson, are trying to inflict that false and repudiated policy upon us, your brothers, who have gone out into that wilderness and are striving against desperate odds to build great States. Colorado is filled with Illinoisans and Missourians and we feel like saying to each of our colleagues from those States, "Et tu, Brute?"

We have received a great many protests, petitions, and resolutions against these leasing bills from the business organizations, county commissioners, and citizens generally of our State. We will not give them because our statements herein voices the substance of their objections. But we will insert merely as a sample one from the Commercial Club of Rio Blanco County, as a fair illustration of the way this theoretical conservation affects and will affect the development of the 30 counties in which those resources are located.

RESOLUTIONS.

"At a regular meeting of the Rio Blanco County Commercial Club held at Meeker, Rio Blanco County, Colo., on the 6th day of April, 1914, the following resolutions were adopted, to wit:

"Whereas there are now pending in Congress certain bills for the leasing of the public lands; and

"Whereas it appears from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that many able and fair-minded Representatives and Senators have very limited knowledge of western conditions:

"Resolved, That a plain statement of facts and conditions in this county that have a bearing on the leasing question be made, and that we make earnest protest against the leasing of any class of lands whatever and in any form, the statement of facts and conditions in this county being as follows:

"This county has an area of 2,067,000 acres, of which 312,000 acres are withdrawn in the White River National Forest, about 85,000 acres are withdrawn as oil lands, 200,000 acres of coal lands have been practically withdrawn by the action of the Interior Department in placing thereon values several times as great as patented coal lands adjoining can be bought for; about 40,000 acres of carnotite lands are now sought to be withdrawn by Congress, and subdivisions of lands that lie here and there along White River for a length of more than 100 miles intersecting or jutting into the patented lands have been withdrawn for power sites, these sites being useless for power sites or purposes other than to hold narrow parcels of land over which the ditch or pipe-line would have to be carried, presumably so that the Government could control the building of such power plants.

"The cost of maintaining our county government is great because by the shortest public roads it is 80 miles to the farthest western settlement in this county from Meeker, the county seat, and more than 100 miles from Meeker to the most easterly settlement.

"To support this county we have the following patented lands: Irrigated lands, 21,359 acres; grazing lands, 91,792 acres; natural hay lands, 2,018 acres; and coal lands, 4,149 acres. Our nearest railroad is 45 miles distant.

"The people of this county, including many members of this commercial club, were the real initiators of the conservation movement, having in 1889 petitioned the President through the medium of Thomas A. Carter, Commissioner of the General Land Office, who indorsed our petition, to set aside the forests of this county for a park or forest reserve. This was the first national forest created under the act of 1891, if we except a small addition to the Wyoming National Park. Our petition described the bounds of the forest, but the Interior Department, on the advice of men who were practically strangers to this county, saw fit to extend the boundaries to include more than 100,000 acres of good farm lands, about one-half of that increase being in this county, including one tract of 20,000 acres on which there was nothing but sagebrush and which to-day produces more revenue for this county than the 312,000 acres of forest-reserve lands. It took six years of struggle to get this tract eliminated. One agent sent here by the Interior Department in 1893 or 1894 informed us that it should be retained within the forest lands as a winter feeding ground for deer. The same argument was advanced by Forester Pinchot at a later time, when he sent an inspector from Washington, D. C., to report on the advisability of adding to the forest the lands south of White River from the forest to the Utah line, a distance of 70 miles, all of the land being nontimber lands. When the agent reported that it was not forest land Mr. Pinchot asked for a second report by a local officer.

"We would call the attention of our Congressmen and Senators to the fact that a system of espionage has for years been maintained by the Forest Service, acting under instructions from Washington, we are informed; this espionage is kept more especially over the actions of those who have filed on land which has been eliminated from the reserve and which land is no longer under the jurisdiction of the Forest Service. One duty of the rangers in winter has been to count the horses and cattle that are pastured and fed on homesteads, even on patented land. Most homesteaders are poor men, but a poor man has little chance to secure a homestead within the reserve. Applications are usually held up for about one year before an applicant can file. He is given a permit to use the land until such time as the department acts upon his application. Even if he settles at once under the permit he gets no credit for residence that year, the Land Office requiring three years' residence from date of filing on the land before the United States land office at Glenwood Springs, Colo. The best of the forest lands are being rapidly leased to the wealthy cattlemen, and the better class of homeseekers will not try to get land inside an inclosure, even if permitted by law to do so. Ordinary farmers can not afford to fence pastures for their small herds, so in time all the reserve or all the best portion will be controlled by the big cattle outfits.

"Leasing of coal, radium, and grazing lands are more to be avoided than leases on the forest reserves, yet we call attention to wrongs suffered through having these lands controlled from Washington, where the best informed know but little of the actual situation.

"All leases help the rich men and keep the poor man down.

"We well remember when a convention was called to outline a lease law. All the parties invited to attend this convention from the West were members of an association of cattle barons, who formed that association for the purpose of getting the Government to lease the public range. The shibboleth of each member of the convention was, 'Let the poor man have first choice.' It was Hobson's choice, though. They gave him a chance to take 160 acres adjoining his home, the land along the foothills being usually worthless for grazing; but the highlands that produce luxuriant grass were left for the big cattlemen. The withdrawal of oil gives a monopoly to the oil kings of to-day. Withdraw the coal and you add millions to the pockets of many big corporations. Lumber in this town has been increased in price $8 per 1,000 feet. This increase is not measured by the higher charge of the Government per 1,000 feet. For example, a milliman here was instructed by the forest ranger in charge to pile all brush in a certain spot. After the brush was piled, then came a higher man from the outside and ordered all the brush to be removed to another place before burning. The people of Rio Blanco County pay for these extras.

"Our greatest values lie in our coal deposits, which are immense. Without these assets we have a sorry future before us.

"All forms of leasing keep out immigration to the West. The course of the Government in taking from the people their coal, their so-called grazing lands, their radium, and their oil, and in taking from the people of Colorado the water that falls on their lands, to be given to Mexicans, is making the United States a land of aristocrats and peasants.

"The amount of income received by this county from 312,000 acres of forest land is not one-half so large as it receives from certain individual taxpayers owning only a small acreage. Leasers never build up a country.

"One serious trouble in getting justice is that conservationists are theorists and not practicable.

"All the oil lands and the radium lands of this country were discovered by prospectors. United States geologists are poor prospectors. We spent thousands of dollars in proving the oil lands of this county, but as soon as proved to be an oil territory they asked the President to withdraw the lands. Our asphaltum lands were discovered and developed by home people, and United States geologists are only familiar with the size of such veins of coal as have been opened and patented by home people. If the radium deposits are left open to prospectors, this county will make that element a 'drug on the market.'

"Our people still remember the fact that multimillionaire lumbermen were charter members of the conservation league, and that they made millions by the timberland withdrawals. Our citizens were in favor of such withdrawal, but never expected this Government to help build up a monopoly. We thought prices of lumber would be kept to the lowest limit.

"Outside the forest every half section of land (the so-called grazing lands) remaining open to settlement contains tillable tracts aggregating 40 to 60 acres, and if not withdrawn will soon all be taken by home seekers who, by cultivation of these tracts, will raise more feed and consequently more cattle on 320 acres than will ever be raised by leasers on 2,000 acres of the same lands. Moreover, owners of such lands will make permanent improvements.

"We are especially opposed to lease moneys being handled by the Reclamation Service, believing them to be more wasteful than any other branch of the Government. We are well aware that department officials do not like criticism of their rulings and that in some cases precedent and pride prevents many of them from righting a wrong. Our former protests have always been mild and formal so as not to offend. The present danger to this community is too great to do less than lay bare the facts no matter whom it hurts. The people of Rio Blanco County are a unit against the withdrawal of coal, oil, and radium lands. We are nearly so as to grazing lands, the only exceptions being a few big cattlemen and a few others who already have pastures fenced.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR and Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH, at Washington, D. C.

"RIO BLANCO COUNTY COMMERCIAL CLUB,
"By W. S. MONTGOMERY, President.
"W. D. SIMMS, Secretary."

If this general leasing policy is inflicted upon the West, we predict that Colorado and other Western States will be compelled to impose an excise tax upon the output of our coal mines and other Government-leased resources as a partial substitute for the loss of taxes on those properties.

The general counsel of the Reclamation Service, Mr. King, has recently rendered an official opinion, which appears in the December number of the Reclamation Record, holding very positively that neither the State nor counties have any right to tax improvements upon public land before final proof is offered; and he says he believes that no such right exists before United States patent is issued by the Government to the entryman. If that be the law, then the State would never have any authority to tax even improvements put upon these leased lands. While we can not believe that that opinion is sound or reasonable, at the same time, as eminent an attorney as the chief counsel is, having rendered that decision pertaining to all public lands under all the Government reclamation projects, it raises a very serious question indeed, which is of vital concern to the entire West. In fact, this bill will affect the welfare of the entire population of the western half of this Republic now and for generations to come. It is one of a series of so-called conservation measures that are now before this House, and a part of which are, we understand, to be put through with only a few hours' debate.

The question is not only as it affects coal and oil and gas, etc., but the question is whether or not the welfare of this Republic, and the West in particular, will be benefited by this general program of putting all of our natural resources on a Federal leasehold-royalty basis and thereby permanently withdraw for all time and withhold them from private ownership and prevent them from going onto the tax rolls, no matter what the object or pretext may be or how laudable the alleged purpose may be. Will the West be benefited by putting a direct and permanent perpetual tax upon our consumers and burden the development of our States for the purpose of building more reclamation projects or for any other purpose? We must not look at this merely for the present but for the future and the ultimate welfare of the people of those States in particular and our country in general. Is it wise to put a perpetual and increasing Federal tax upon our development and upon every fireside and citizen of our State, upon every horsepower that is hereafter generated and used by the farmers or anyone else, and upon every ton of coal hereafter mined in our State and used by any of our citizens for even the laudable purpose of getting some more money with which to build further reclamation projects? Is it a sensible or fair business policy to tax the general consuming public approximately $100 for the sake of giving back some locality $1? Moreover, is it an equitable or sensible business policy for the Government to withhold all of this enormous wealth forever from private ownership and deprive the States from hundreds of millions of dollars of taxes which they would derive from it and give them back in lieu thereof a few thousand dollars in reclamation projects?

There is no question but what this policy is and for some time will be very popular in the South and North and East. Those sections are not affected by it, and Representatives from those sections honestly think they see an opportunity of ultimately getting some money into the Federal Treasury by this program. They will be most awfully disappointed; but they really believe that now. They have the power and the Members in Congress to force this policy upon us of the West, and they may do so. But because they have the vote to do it does not make it right or fair, and because they have the power to force this imperialistic-crown-land-bureaucratic policy upon us can not make us welcome it or advocate it when we feel it is not right and when we look upon it as a high-handed outrage upon us. Do the Members of this House feel that it is fair to authorize the present Secretary of the Interior or any other Secretary or bureau chief or clerk to grant 50-year leases on our resources? Who can tell what the conditions of our country will be 20 or even 10 years from now? Why this unseemly haste to reverse the entire public domain's history of our country and inflict this burden upon the next generation and jam it through this Congress with only a few hours' debate, when neither of the great political parties has ever indorsed it? It does seem that as far-reaching and vital a proposition as this ought to be considered by the national parties and the people generally before it is rushed through Congress and put upon us. In our judgment it is contrary to the principle upon which this Republic was founded for the Government to embark in a great many different kinds of business in competition with its citizens. This dual form of government in the West, which the enactment of these bills will necessarily bring about, is a bad policy, and we prophesy that it will prove one of the most gigantic failures that the Government has ever undertaken. It will be a tremendous success in producing Federal jobs, but no net receipts from these royalties will ever get into the Federal or State treasuries. History will repeat itself, and our States will never receive a dollar from these sources; but the people will have to bear an enormous burden for the salaries and expenses.

The people who purchase lumber from the 184,505,602 acres within the forest reserves and the ranchmen who graze their stock on them pay into the Government Treasury some two and a half million dollars a year; and notwithstanding that enormous sum annually taken from the consumers, Congress has to appropriate all of that money out and something like three and a half million dollars more from the United States Treasury every year to maintain the Forest Service. It is true that one-fourth of those cash receipts is paid back to the counties from which it is collected. But it is also true that nearly one-half of that substantially $6,000,000 goes into salaries and the remainder for "overhead administration costs," and both the salaries and expenses are increasing all the time. We say this not by way of criticism, but merely as an illustration of the growth and expansion of all of these bureaus all the time. And yet at the time of the creation of those forest reserves it was loudly proclaimed that the Forest Service would not only be self-supporting, but would soon produce a large revenue to the Government.

This leasing policy, if carried out, will ultimately bring about the creation of 25,000 new Federal positions, and all the receipts and much more will be dissipated in salaries and administration.

It is the most gigantic scheme for the increase of Federal employees and enormously augmenting the power and influence of these bureaus in Washington that this Nation has ever witnessed.

The boldness of it is astounding, and the complacency with which it is received is an evil omen for our country.

CONSERVATION.

Conservation is like economy; everyone is heartily in favor of practicing it on somebody else.

It is not necessary for conservation to have our domestic affairs conducted from Washington.

We are not in favor of conservation for Federal jobs or Federal revenue. It is not the policy of this Government to engage in business to make money or to provide offices. We are in favor of the conservation of a square deal. We do not believe in confiscation under the guise of conservation.

Conservation ought to include something more worthy than constantly enhancing the power of these bureaus in Washington. It should embrace something more worthy than creating more positions, imposing upon the people additional burdens and additional expenses upon the Federal Treasury.

BILL UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Every State in this Union has an inherent right to develop the resources within its borders and receive the benefits of that development. That is not only a natural and necessary but a sovereign and constitutional right; and the Federal Government has no constitutional authority to deny or interfere with that right.

These bills, if passed, ought to be declared unconstitutional, because they are in bold and defiant violation and denial of the sovereignty of the Western States. While the United States has full authority to protect its proprietary interest in the public lands, it has no right to exercise local "municipal sovereignty" over those lands, or interfere with their development, or deprive the States of the proceeds of their own natural resources.

The Western States were admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with, and they were guaranteed authority equal in all respects to, that of the original States. Section 3 of Article IV of our Constitution declares that:

"The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needed rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States."

But the section does not stop there. It declares in the same sentence—

"and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular State."

We can not believe that a system of laws like these leasing bills, which deny the Western States their sovereign authority and deprives them of their control of their own development, and places beyond the reach of the authority and jurisdiction of the body politic of those States their principal resources, the vital and necessary agent of their own social and industrial progress, can be construed otherwise than as prejudicial to the claims of those particular States.

The constitutional right of the Federal Government to make rules and regulations concerning the public lands defines its proprietary right to make rules and regulations for the protection of its proprietary interest in such lands, and its right to ultimately dispose thereof, but conveys and implies no sovereign powers or power to interfere with the development of the resources of the State or to impose unequal or unusual excise charges in any such State, or assume therein any police power or regulation, or authority over any of the inhabitants thereof or the industries therein that it might not exercise under its constitutional grant of powers independently of any public lands.

The decision of the Supreme Court of the State of California, filed January 20, 1914, In re Deseret Water, Oil & Irrigation Co. v. The State of California, so clearly and forcibly states the legal and constitutional rights of the Western States in relation to the public domain that I will quote from the decision, as follows:

"But on the general argument we think that the true interests of the State are quite the opposite of those declared in the brief of the attorney general. One familiar with the constitutional history of the United States need not be reminded of the jealousy with which, before the adoption of the present Constitution and during the sessions of the Continental Congress and the existence of the Articles of Confederation, the original States, and particularly Virginia, in their cessions of lands to the United States guarded their own rights and limited the powers of the United States over them, until in October, 1780, Congress resolved that the lands which may be ceded to the United States by any particular State shall be disposed of for the common benefit of the United States and be settled and formed into distinct republican States, which shall become members of the Federal Union, and have the same rights to sovereignty, freedom, and independence as the other States. The fundamental proposition assented to by the United States upon which these cessions were based was that the public lands within new States, existing or to be created, should be disposed of, sold, for the benefit of the United States, for the reason that the States believed it would be injurious to their sovereign rights that any large areas of land within their boundaries should be permanently beyond their taxing power and control and within the sovereign jurisdiction of another power. Further, it is to be remembered, that all new States were to be admitted to the Union upon terms of exact equality with all other States, and the act of admission of the State of California declared that 'the State of California shall be one and is hereby declared to be one of the United States of America and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever. The people of said State shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the public lands within its limits.' In the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan (3 How., 212) the Supreme Court of the United States with great learning discusses these contracts between the several States and the United States and the meaning and force of the constitutional provisions thereafter passed. It is there declared as to the Government lands within such States that the United States never held any municipal sovereignty, jurisdiction, or right of soil in and to their territory, or in and to the territory of any of the new States, excepting the right over them of executing the trust, which trust was to provide for their disposition by cessions or sale. It is further held that every new State comes into the Union upon terms of equality with all other States, and such an equality can not exist if in any one State it exercises sovereign powers over the lands, while in another it has disposed of such lands, or in the execution of its trust must dispose of them. In Coyle v. Smith (221 U. S., 559) these doctrines are reasserted and affirmed, and the power of the United States to pass any law which will create inequality between the States has repeatedly by the Supreme Court of the United States itself been declared to be void and of no effect. (New Orleans v. De Armas, 9 Pet., 224; Groves v. Slaughter, 15 Pet., 449; Illinois Central R. R. v. Illinois, 146 U. S., 387; United States v. McBratney, 104 U. S., 621; Hardin v. Shedd, 190 U. S., 508; United States v. Winans, 198 U. S., 371.)

"We are, of course, not unmindful of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, such as Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S., 89) and Light v. United States (220 U. S., 523), which declare that within the governmental trust to 'dispose of' its public lands vast areas of them within existing States may be taken from the dominion and control of the State and placed in perpetual reserve. Whether inconsistency and hostility exists between this latter line of decisions and that headed by Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan the Supreme Court itself in due time will declare. But here we desire to point out that while the State of California was admitted as a sovereign State of the Union upon equal terms with all the other States, and while it has been judicially declared that an essential part of that equality is the disposition of the public lands within the State, to the end that the revenues by taxation therefrom and the control over them may be vested in the State, we have in California a withdrawal by the United States from sale and placing in reserves of one-third of the area of the whole State—an area greater than the combined territory of New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Jersey, and Maryland. Not this alone, but we have in these withdrawals a refusal upon the part of the United States to yield to the State of California control over its natural sources of wealth. Its forests, its mines, its oil-bearing lands, its power sites and possibilities have been withheld by the United States, which proposes to exercise over them, and is exercising over them, the 'municipal sovereignty' which the Supreme Court of the United States in Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan declared not to exist. If at the time of the proposed cession of its lands by Virginia Congress had declared its intent to be that which it has actually executed in the State of California, little doubt can be entertained as to the answer which Virginia would have made. It is indeed a departure from the accepted construction of these constitutional provisions to have it said that the United States may, as here, withdraw from State use one-third of the area of a sovereign State, forever deny to the State the sovereign power of taxation and control over these lands, and develop and exploit them under its own rules and regulations for the enrichment of its own Treasury. And so coming to the specific section of land here under consideration, if it has possibilities of water storage and power development, certainly it is to the interest of the State that these potentialities should be developed in the interest of its citizens and the revenue derived therefrom by rates, tolls, and taxation go into its own treasury, rather than to witness them lying undeveloped and unimproved, or, if improved at all, improved for the enrichment of the National Treasury. This is meant to convey no criticism of true conservation of natural resources. But it is a simple declaration of a manifest fact, that, in a State such as California, a large part of whose territory and whose natural resources are taken away from State control, the denial of the right of taxation to such lands, the erection of an imperium in imperio, are developments of governmental ideas not dreamed of at the time of the adoption of the Constitution nor at the time of the decision of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan, and in the State of California the cause of conservation would not suffer if intrusted to the State itself.

It it true that the legal title to the public domain rests in the United States, but that title is simply held in trust with the ultimate object that it shall be transferred to the people who will develop it, and thereby make possible the creation of or the maintenance of independent States of the Union. It was said in Shively v. Browlby (152 U. S., 1, 49):

"The territory is held by the United States for the benefit of the whole people and in trust for the several States to be ultimately created out of that territory."

It was never intended that these public lands should be indefinitely held and exploited by the Federal Government.

To us these paternalistic and centralizing tendencies appear little short of national bureaucracy run mad. Conservation has become a mania. We hope we may be mistaken, but this policy looks like a bold trampling upon the principle which lies at the foundation of our republican form of government. It appears to us as a brazen denial of the "equal footing" upon which the Western States entered this Union.

American citizens do not take kindly to absentee landlordism. We do not like the idea of perpetual bureaucratic rule. We prefer to be governed by the law and by our own people, instead of by rules and regulations promulgated from the city of Washington, ofttimes by people who have no personal knowledge of our local conditions. We believe these measures forever fasten upon the people of the West and the resources within our States the bureaucratic grasp of the Federal Government. We know that bureaucracy grows on what it feeds upon. We want the laws intelligently framed in the light of the welfare of the governed as well as the governing bodies. Let us western people develop the resources in our States under whatever reasonable restrictions you may deem proper, and we will soon become a storehouse of wealth to this Nation.

While it may be true, as stated, that "the mining of coal may well be termed a rich man's business," that condition has partially been brought about at the present time by the valuation of coal upon the public domain being deliberately placed at such a high price that no one but a rich corporation can afford to buy it. And while it is true that this bill retains a provision for the sale of coal land, yet that provision of the present law amounts to comparatively nothing so long as the price fixed by the classification on the 19,489,771 acres restored is approximately ten times as high as it should be and is clear beyond the reach of ordinary individuals or municipalities. We will not say that that defense of this bill is hypocritical, but will say that it is an utter delusion. Moreover, there are 48,244,274 acres of coal land now withdrawn and not classified and probably never will be either restored to public entry or classified.

If the Government has decided to own and operate our coal mines, we ought to be frank and say so, because that is what this means. This law may, as is stated, "do with Government property what has been done by the foremost countries of the world," and may be entirely suitable to a monarchy; but we confess we can not make ourselves believe that it is beneficial in our form of government. We do not relish the idea of Uncle Sam going into 57 varieties of business on our money.

No one can honestly deny the statement that any general scheme for the leasing of any of the public domain practically withdraws those lands from settlement or entry by those who wish to acquire them and make them productive by individual enterprise. And any system which prevents lands or resources from going into private ownership prevents their becoming subject to State and local taxation, and relieves them from their just proportion of the maintenance of the State government.

We believe all history will bear out the statement that it is not in the interest of the people or the welfare of the Western States to have large bodies of land and valuable resources withheld from taxation and managed and controlled at long range from the city of Washington; and every step taken by Congress in the direction of withholding from actual settlement and ownership by local citizens tends to the centralization of power and the strengthening of the bureaucratic grasp of the Federal Government upon the resources of control of our States.

The people of the West have already suffered so much at the hands of the misstyled conservationists that they are exceedingly apprehensive of the danger of this most bold and far-reaching Federal encroachment upon the public-land traditions of the Nation.

We feel that the West is in honor bound to resist to the utmost of its ability these imperialistic aggressions upon our public-land heritage which threaten to deprive the West of its wealth and rightful opportunities. Many of as patriotic citizens as there are in this Republic look upon this leasing policy as the last act in the effort of the East to overthrow all the traditions of our Government affecting the disposition of the public domain and the permanent establishment of bureaucratic control over the western lands and resources and the forcing of the Western States into subjection to the intense industrialism of the East. The Government has no moral right to hold these lands in perpetuity and lease them. The innumerable natural obstacles in the way of the development of the West are so arduous and almost insurmountable that they require the utmost heroic courage and endurance and persistence to overcome, and we appeal to Congress and to our other governmental officials not to inflict these additional and unjust burdens upon us and our children and our children's children.

The Eastern, Northern, and Southern States do not have to surrender 10 cents a ton for their coal. That coal land had no value until we went there and settled the country and made it valuable. Why should the Government get this unearned increment? This whole leasing system is wrong in every way. It is unwise, impractical, and unprofitable. It is economically and morally unfair, legally unjust, and a grievous and irritating political imposition upon the western people, because, forsooth, they are not sufficiently strong to prevent it. This policy compels us to pay an enormous tribute that will grind into our States a tyranny that will be intolerable. It is utterly unnecessary, and it can not be defended upon any grounds of equity or fair dealing.

To our minds, these leasing bills add insult to injury. They not only deprive us of our constitutional rights and at the same time impose outrageous taxes and royalties upon us, but in addition they deny both our honesty and capacity for self-government. These bills in their present form are nothing more nor less than a formal declaration by Congress that the Western States are incompetent and that their acts and purposes are subject to suspicion; that the Government is distrustful of the good faith of the people of the West; that Congress is of the opinion that those States, their citizens, and their legislatures are not competent to control, regulate, and develop in the public interests the resources within their borders.

We can hardly believe that this House will approve of or tolerate any such unprecedented imposition; and if it does, we hope the United States Senate never will.

The Federal Government might with equal justice, and with no more pointed accusation of incompetency, deprive the Western States of all their other sovereign powers. This leasing system will create, on the one hand, a dangerously powerful and undemocratic bureaucracy, and, on the other hand, a servile and browbeaten tenantry. It will constantly emphasize the assumed superiority of Federal over local government, and progressively during the passage of years wear down and render subordinate the structures and effectiveness of the State governments.

The so-called conservation bills are but another large wedge which, reenforced by later measures of similar character now pending and in contemplation, will finally cleave and ultimately disintegrate practically all local authority. We earnestly appeal to and warn our colleagues that this leasing system is an insidious policy that will in the near future rise to plague you. It will accomplish nothing beneficial, but will inflict untold burdens, hardships, and aggravations upon the people, bring about the subjugation of local authority and the centralization of tremendous and unwarranted powers in the Federal Government. If these bills are killed, as we hope they will be, there will then be some fair and suitable constructive legislation enacted for the opening up and developing of the West.

We regret to be compelled to file this minority report dissenting from the opinions of our colleagues on the committee. But we are unable to bring ourselves into that peculiar quiescence of mind in which we can avoid resenting the imputations that the people of the West are incompetent to wisely administer their internal affairs.

We certainly will never even tacitly admit or believe that any of the Western States can not manage their own development much better than any outsiders can. We will never acquiesce in the surrender of our western sovereignty. We have an abiding conviction that there are enough brains, honesty, and patriotism in the West to wisely regulate and control these public-service corporations; and if there is any question about it in any State at the present time, and until such time as suitable laws shall be enacted, the Federal Government can and should retain control over them; and probably should permanently reserve the right to exercise a supervisory regulation of them whenever the local utility commissions do not perform their duty. But in order to retain such control it is utterly unnecessary to impose a Federal tax upon our development and at the same time prevent the going into private ownership and onto the tax rolls of hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property. We look upon it as neither right nor necessary but humiliating for Congress to put the Western States upon the same basis as the Territory of Alaska, and thereby force many of our present and a large proportion of our future population into a perpetual Federal tenantry class under the guise of regulating our development. We repeat that this is not a question of individual or of political parties, but one of governmental policy.

We are not intentionally criticizing anybody in this minority report. We are merely giving a few reasons why we personally believe that the adoption of this leasing policy is unnecessary, unwise, and unjust to the West.

We look upon it as presaging the leasing of our gold and silver, lead and zinc, and all metalliferous mines, and all our other resources, including scenery and climate.

Bureaucratic control never has been and never will be good for either the people or the property so controlled. We object to the West being exploited as a province or insular possession of the United States with a permanent system of tenantry fastened upon us. We of the West do not relish carpetbag government any more than you of the South did. Why are you from below the Mason-Dixon line so soon forgetful of those hardships and so ready to inflict them upon us?

What honest or fair-minded man can justify putting a Federal tax upon the water power of our nonnavigable streams, the waters of which belong to the people of those States and which cost the Government nothing, and putting no tax on the use of the water power generated by the navigable streams that cost the taxpayers of the entire country hundreds of millions of dollars?

It has ever been easy to suggest specious reasons for the acquisition or usurpation of increased power by those in official position.

Bureaucracy has ever grown by what it feeds upon. This was pointed out by that eminent statesman, Daniel Webster, as long ago as 1837, and that other eminent statesman, James G. Blaine, said:

"There is nothing of which a public officer can be so easily persuaded as to the enlarged jurisdiction which pertains to his office. If the officer be of bold mind, he arrogates power for purposes of ambition; and even with timid men power is often assumed as a measure of protection and defense."

And that eminent California lawyer and author, Gregory Yale, as long ago as 1867, said, in speaking of the Interior Department:

"There is no other branch of the Government with such inherent tendencies to judicial usurpation."

We have not the slightest fear of Secretary Lane individually being unfair. But he can not personally attend to the tens of thousands of matters that this policy will involve, and no one can prophesy what royalties may be imposed by future Secretaries or bureau chiefs or 10,000 clerks and agents. But whatever they are, and no matter how fast or how slow they are increased, they are an unnecessary tax imposed upon the consumers and an unjust burden upon our development. It is a bad economic policy without a redeeming feature. We firmly believe that when these measures are thoroughly understood the public conscience of the Nation will wake up to discover that this wholesale leasing proposition is a gigantic bureaucratic scheme whereby the West is being compelled to barter away its birthright for a mass of Federal pottage, without any assurance of ever getting the the pottage—at least during this generation.

Aside from the principle of surrendering our State's constitutional rights and looking at it only from a commercial standpoint, it looks to me too much like taking $20 out of one pocket with the hope of ultimately putting 50 cents back into the other.

We can not believe that these bills in their present form will ever be enacted into law. If, however, they are, we confidently predict that history will repeat itself, and that these laws will sooner or later be again indignantly repudiated and repealed. But it will be after hundreds of millions of hard-earned dollars have been wrung from the pockets of the common people and consumed in undeserved salaries, needless expenses, and useless waste of our substance. It will be after our resources have been wantonly exploited and the Federal Treasury ruthlessly looted for many years by an army of utterly unnecessary Government employees. We therefore hope that this Sixty-fourth Congress will avoid that unwarranted burden upon every hamlet and fireside in the West by refusing to pass these most unwise and unjust measures.

Respectfully submitted.

EDWARD T. TAYLOR.
JAS. H. MAYS.
CHAS. B. TIMBERLAKE.
ADDISON T. SMITH.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Oklahoma to yield the gentleman from Colorado five minutes more in order that I may ask him a question.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Colorado and his colleagues who have signed this minority report are opposed to this bill. I want to ask the gentleman if he or any of such colleagues have introduced any bill into this House looking toward the unlocking of the resources referred to by the gentleman?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will answer that this way: The Interior Department has deliberately locked up those resources. The law does not do so, and if the Interior Department will put the restrictions that I believe it could and should upon the use of those resources and pass the title subject to the Government's reserved right to regulate the rates and prices and service and everything else necessary pertaining to it to prevent monopoly and extortion and protect the public, at least until such times as the local public-utility commissions perform their duties, that will prevent monopoly and waste and imposition upon the people, and if the advocates of this policy are honest in only wanting to prevent monopoly and waste, either the Interstate Commerce Commission or some other public-service commission to regulate those matters in our States might be authorized to do so whenever the local authorities do not do so satisfactorily. That would prevent all these large combinations and it would prevent monopoly and waste and insure fair rates and proper service; in other words, a proper utilization of these resources for its benefit of the public. That is my idea as to how these valuable resources should be handled by the Government. But to accomplish that it is not at all necessary to retain the title to maintain an army of Federal employees and make us pay for them.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman think no further legislation is necessary on the subject?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If any further legislation is necessary to prevent monopoly or waste or combination of any kind, we are here, and why should not Congress pass it?

Mr. LENROOT. Take this coal land, for instance. We leave those lands open to acquirement under the laws which now exist. Is the gentleman satisfied with that law?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the Geological Survey would reduce the classification price to such an amount that anybody could buy them and then pass laws against combinations and extortion in price, that would protect the public and the Government and coal mines would open up. We do not like the present Government-made monopoly. You ask if we have ever introduced any bills to unlock the governmental monopoly. I will say yes. I have a bill here to allow every city and town in our Western States to open up a coal mine free of charge, but under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, to take the land over for the purpose of furnishing cheap coal to the inhabitants of all those towns. I have that measure pending here now, and I have had it before Congress for several years, as I stated a few moments ago. That bill, if enacted, would afford a great deal of relief, and I know of no better legislation that this Congress could enact than to furnish cheap fuel to its people.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask the gentleman whether or not he does not know that the Interior Department has appraised these coal lands in response to a direction of an act of Congress?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes; and they have appraised them so high that nobody can buy them, with 50,000,000 acres of coal land lying idle, and coal $6.50 a ton when it ought to be $2.50 per ton.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the gentleman think there should be further legislation, if that be true?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think we ought to throw them open for settlement and purchase under reasonable prices and suitable regulations.

Mr. LENROOT. And disregard the acts of Congress and of appraisement?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, no; Congress ought to amend these acts, if it is necessary, but it should not be necessary. The Interior Department could open our coal lands to bona fide entrymen and relieve the situation if it would do so.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Colorado yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. In answer to a question of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] he said the appraisement of the coal lands was an appraisement undertaken in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress. The gentleman from Colorado knows there was no act of Congress on the subject. The Interior Department, after operating for a good many years under the maximum and minimum law, finally concluded that it had authority to place a figure on these lands above the maximum, and did so without any legislation.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It was an arbitrary action on the part of the Interior Department. There was no new legislation or any action by Congress that warranted it.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it not a fact that the act of Congress provided that they should not be sold at less than a certain sum?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask the gentleman one more question. He said that, in his judgment, there would be no profits from these royalties. I hold in my hand, if I may take just a moment, the report of the receiver of a very small portion of the oil lands that are in controversy here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that the gentleman be yielded one minute more.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LENROOT. And the receiver states that on something over a thousand acres his profits in those oil wells, a very small proportion of that embodied in this bill, for the last eight months are $1,582,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Well, if that is true and if they have royalties of that kind, why should not those funds go into the development of those States out there rather than go into the Federal Treasury? I said I thought there will temporarily at least be some considerable royalties from oil lands in California and Wyoming.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman knows this money does not go into the Federal Treasury. Every dollar of this goes into the reclamation fund in the first instance and 50 per cent then goes to the States.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes; it first goes into the reclamation fund to be used once and then one-half goes into the Federal Treasury. But what right has the Government of the United States to ever take any of it or make the consumers in our country pay that money?

Mr. LENROOT. It is ours.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It belongs to the Federal Government in trust, just the same as the Great Falls of the Potomac River and the navigable streams and harbors of this country do, for the benefit of the people, for the development of this country, not to be held by the Government and used to penalize the local people or put a burden on any one locality for the benefit of the rest of the country.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will.

Mr. LENROOT. The Federal Government took every dollar of the proceeds of the public domain in the Eastern States, with the exception of 5 per cent.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The proceeds from the sale of public lands at $1.25 per acre is scarcely a drop in the bucket to what is intended to be collected from us of the West under this leasing scheme. Moreover, all those funds that have been put into the reclamation projects come back into the Federal Treasury. We have to pay back all that money that is actually expended in our development.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CULLOP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 406) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium, and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. GALLIVAN was granted leave of absence indefinitely on account of the death of his brother.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Thursday, January 13, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

10. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a statement of conditions of the Steamboat-Inspection Service at the port of Buffalo, N. Y., and making recommendations in relation thereto (H. Doc. No. 548); to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and ordered to be printed.

11. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting copy of a letter by Maj. Gen. George W. Goethals, United States Army, governor of the Panama Canal, submitting the draft of a bill authorizing the President to regulate matters of sanitation, quarantine, taxation, and police in the Canal Zone (H. Doc. No. 549); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

12. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1916 (H. Doc. No. 550); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

13. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, withdrawing the estimate of $5,000 for "Files, Postal Savings System, office of Auditor for the Post Office Department" (H. Doc. No. 551); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

14. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting letter in regard to certain changes proposed in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill (H. Doc. No. 556); to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

15. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Willapa Harbor and the bar entrance thereto, Washington (H. Doc. No. 555); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

16. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of New York Harbor, N. Y., with a view to the removal of Craven Shoal (H. Doc. No. 557); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

17. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 10, 1916, together with copy of report from Col. Frederic V. Abbot, Corps of Engineers, dated July 26, 1915, with map on reexamination of Jamaica Bay, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 554); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

18. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of War College Division, General Staff, in charge of the distribution of War Department documents, approved by the Chief of Staff, with a report of the documents distributed by the War Department during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915 (H. Doc. No. 553); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

19. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to bring about the issue of shelter tents and field cooking appliances to educational institutions having officers of the Army on duty as professors of military science and tactics (H. Doc. No. 552); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill (S. 900) amending sections 476, 477, and 440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 36), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DENT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 403) granting to the State of Oklahoma permission to occupy a certain portion of the Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., and to maintain and operate thereon a fish hatchery, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 37), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WATKINS, from the Committee on Revision of the Laws, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8033) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 38), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 8790) to equalize the effects of Public No. 316 (H. R. 16510) chapter 167, recognizing the services of certain officers of the Army and Navy in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 100) authorizing and requesting the President to appoint a National Marketing Commission to be composed of seven members; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CRISP: Memorial relating to river improvement and memorializing the National Congress to provide for such improvement with a view to important industrial development; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAIR: A bill (H. R. 8829) granting an increase of pension to John Flight; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 8830) granting a pension to William S. Tyler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 8831) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Shannon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8832) granting an increase of pension to Felix R. Robertson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOUD: A bill (H. R. 8833) granting a pension to Gideon B. Marshall; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ASWELL: A bill (H. R. 8834) for the relief of the Rapides Building & Loan Association, of Alexandria, La.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: A bill (H. R. 8835) granting an increase of pension to Emily P. Stevens; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 13, 1916.

Rev. Boyd V. Switzer, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we bless Thee for the courage, wisdom, and self-sacrifice of our forefathers who gave to us civic, political, and religious liberty. We bless Thee that our people still cherish and value above all earthly possessions that sacred, blood-bought heritage of constitutional liberty. Therefore, in these perilous times, when our inalienable rights to life, liberty, and property are being jeopardized, we pray Thee, O Lord, that Thou wouldst so inspire and guide those in authority in these United States that peace may be preserved, individual security guaranteed, and our national honor preserved inviolate.

Do Thou, we pray Thee, in the midst of these years and these times breathe upon us such strength, wisdom and power from above that we may possess clear discernment, and that self-poise and fine sanity which will make us workmen of whom God need not be ashamed. In Christ's name. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COPPER EXPORT TRADE.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, an article was printed in the New York World of yesterday so extraordinary in its character that, although somewhat lengthy, I send it to the desk and ask unanimous consent that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

BRITAIN DEMANDS TRADE SECRETS OF UNITED STATES CORPORATIONS—METAL CONCERNS, ESPECIALLY COPPER COMPANIES, NOTIFIED TO GIVE LISTS OF STOCKHOLDERS, ADDRESSES, NATIONALITY, NUMBER OF SHARES EACH OWNS, AND CLIENTS, TOO—NO OPEN THREAT MADE, BUT ENEMY ACT IS CITED—PUTS FIRMS AT MERCY OF BRITISH, OFFICIALS SAY, FOR GERMANS ARE CONNECTED WITH MANY—SUSPECT BUSINESS TRICK—MAY REFUSE TO COMPLY—TO APPEAL TO WASHINGTON.

American metal corporations, particularly those whose principal business is the export of copper, have been "requested," by direction of the British Government, through their agents or other representatives in Great Britain, to furnish that Government with information concerning their companies and the business conducted by them of such intimate a character as the Government of the United States itself never has required corporations to give.

In demanding this information the British Government makes no announcement of what its action will be in regard to a corporation refusing to comply. No hint of punitive measures is conveyed, unless the fact that attention is directed to the newly amended trading-with-the-enemy act be so considered.

ASKS STOCKHOLDERS' LISTS.

American concerns are told that Great Britain desires certified lists of their stockholders, the name, nationality, and address of each and the number of shares of stock owned by each. The corporations are also informed that the British Government desires a list of their clients and to be kept informed of all changes in this list.

Attention is called to the amended act, which authorizes the King, at his discretion, to prohibit by proclamation any British subject from trading with any corporation outside the British dominions which does business with or has associated with it an enemy of Great Britain.

The corporations which have received this request were nearly panic stricken yesterday. Names of those which have already received it are withheld from publication upon their own request. Their officials stated frankly to reporters for the World that they dared not authorize publication of the communications from their own agents containing Great Britain's "request," because they felt assured that such publication would annoy the British Government and result in their being blacklisted.

TO APPEAL TO LANSING.

Meetings of directors of several of these corporations were held yesterday to discuss the situation and to decide upon some course of action. The result of these meetings, as far as it was possible to learn, was indecisive. Officials of the corporations gave it as their belief that no reply would be made until the question was laid before Secretary of State Lansing and the aid of the State Department sought.

The objection to furnish Great Britain the information, according to statements made by directors, lies chiefly in the fact that the knowledge thus gained by a trade competing nation would, in their opinion, be used to benefit British corporations to the serious handicap of American. It would, in substance, be turning over to rivals the business secrets of American firms, they said.

Charges that Great Britain is throttling this country's hundred million dollar a year copper export trade by using contraband regulations as a pretext to practice gross discrimination in favor of the British merchant were laid before the State Department late in 1914, and again in January of the following year, as the World exclusively told on January 25, 1915.

The five concerns which handle the great bulk of the copper-export trade of the United States combined at that time to engage John Bassett Moore to push their case against Great Britain. This latest demand by Great Britain is regarded as but another step in the throttling campaign, with the "great war" as an excuse.

COPY OF BRITISH ENEMY ACT.

A copy of the amended act has come into the possession of the World. It follows:

"An act to provide for the extension of the restrictions relating to trading with the enemy to persons to whom, though not resident or carrying on business in enemy territory, it is, by reason of their enemy nationality or enemy associations, expedient to extend such restrictions.

"Be it enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

"First. His Majesty may by proclamation prohibit all persons or bodies of persons resident, carrying on business or being in the United Kingdom, from trading with any persons or bodies of persons not resident, or carrying on business in enemy territory or in territory in the occupation of the enemy (other than persons or bodies of persons residing or carrying on business solely within His Majesty's dominions), wherever by reason of the enemy nationality or enemy associations of such persons or bodies of persons it appears to His Majesty expedient to do so, and if any person acts in contravention of any such proclamation he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, triable and punishable in like manner as the offense of trading with the enemy.

"Second. Any list of persons or bodies of persons with whom such trading is prohibited by a proclamation under this act may be varied or added to by an order made by the lords of the council on the recommendation of a secretary of state.

"SCOPE OF THE LAW.

"3. The provisions of the trading with the enemy acts, 1914 and 1915, and all other enactments relating to trading with the enemy shall, subject to such exceptions and adaptations as may be prescribed by order in council, apply in respect of such persons or bodies of persons aforesaid, as if for reference therein to trading with the enemy there were substituted references to trading with such persons and bodies of persons as aforesaid, and for references to enemies there were substituted references to such persons and bodies of persons as aforesaid, and for references to offenses under the trading with the enemy acts, 1914 and 1915, or any of those acts, there were substituted references to offenses under this act.

"4. For the purposes of this act a person or body of persons shall be deemed to have traded with a person or body of persons to whom a proclamation issued under this act applies, if he enters into any transaction or does any act with, to, on behalf of, or for the benefit of such a person or body of persons, which, if entered into or done with, to, on behalf of, or for the benefit of an enemy, would be trading with the enemy.

"Second. This act may be cited as the trading with the enemy (extension of powers) act, 1915."

URGE CONCERTED ACTION.

Officials of American corporations who had received requests for information pointed yesterday to what they considered the great skill with which this act was drawn. Under it, they said, the British Government was free to blacklist any American corporation at its pleasure and without any further explanation than that the corporation had a German, Austrian, Turk, or Bulgarian as a stockholder. There are Germans holding stock in practically every important copper or metal corporation of the United States.

Several said that safety lay only in concerted action by American corporations. They argued that if all American copper corporations would agree to make no reply to the request for information Great Britain would be left without pretext for blacklisting any particular one, and, inasmuch as she must have our copper, the British Government could not prohibit dealing with all.

Despite, apparently, general recognition of this principle, no firm could be found to express its willingness to lead in a movement to bring about such concerted action. Officials explained that the truth was they did not dare do anything which might bring down upon them the wrath of the British Government; that Great Britain had them all in a vise at present, and, as a matter of fact, did about as she pleased in regulating and restricting their export business.

DEVELOPMENT OF WATERWAYS—NOTICE ON CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice on the calendar of this morning, under the heading "Unfinished business," a notice given by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] that on the disposal of the unfinished business, the Philippine government bill, he would move to consider Senate bill 3331. That is simply a notice given by an individual Senator; it should not be placed under the heading "Unfinished business," and I ask that in the calendar for to-morrow it shall be changed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any rule of the Senate which provides what shall go on the calendar?

Mr. SMOOT. I have always understood that nothing under the heading of "Unfinished business" should go under that head unless it is unfinished business. This is nothing more nor less than a notice given by a Senator, and, therefore, it should go, the same as other notices, under the heading of "Notices."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator realize that such notices amount to nothing?

Mr. SMOOT. I am fully aware of that. Therefore I did not want to have a notice go under the heading of "Unfinished business."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand that there is any rule of the Senate which fixes what the calendar of business shall contain.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any rule, but it has been the universal practice.

Mr. LODGE. Should not a notice go under the head of "Notices"?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; of course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know how the entry got there.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the notice which was given by the Senator from Tennessee be placed under the heading of "Notices," the same as all other notices in the past have been placed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, it is wholly immaterial to me under what head the notice is placed upon the calendar. The Senator from Utah seems to me to be highly technical. If he desires it in another place, if it affords him any pleasure, I am entirely willing to have it go to another place. I did not ask that it be placed there. However, it seems to me it is in its proper place, as it relates to unfinished business. It does not purport to be unfinished business, but relates to what will be asked to be made the unfinished business. But, as I said, it is immaterial to me whether it goes under that heading or under the heading of an ordinary notice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, on all further prints of the Calendar of Business of the Senate the notice of the Senator from Tennessee will go under the head of "Notices."

TAX ON MINING PROPERTY IN MEXICO.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have a communication from one of my constituents relating to the decree of Carranza affecting mining property in Mexico owned by Americans, tending to show that the enforcement of the taxes levied by this decree will amount to a confiscation of property. I ask to have the communication printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 6, 1916.

MY DEAR SENATOR WORKS: I wrote the inclosures last night and this morning am surprised to see in the Los Angeles Times an article regarding the very selfsame outrage—the Carranza mining decree—a copy of the article I shall give below. Also we note with interest another article in same issue—one advising us of the manly attitude taken by yourself in a speech in the Senate, explaining to them most thoroughly that our so-called neutrality of to-day is but one of hypocrisy. I assure you that you are receiving the hearty sanction of almost the entire populace. Would that there were more like you where you are, who would be fearless enough to come out of the dark and talk as they surely really down in their hearts believe.

The notice first spoken of is as follows:

"CARRANZA INSISTS ON MINING TAX—DECLARES STEPS NECESSARY TO PREVENT MONOPOLIES.

"EL PASO, TEX., January 5.

"Negotiations of representatives of the International Mining Association with Mexican de facto government officials for annulment of the decree of March 1, 1915, which places income taxes on mines and their output, have been without result, according to advices from Mexico City to-day.

"The mining men contend that the decree taxes are prohibitive and claim that nearly all of the 440,000 mining claims in Mexico will be compelled to discontinue operation under their terms.

"Gen. Carranza, according to reports, contends the decree, by fixing a graduated tax on holdings of more than 10 claims (each claim is but 2½ acres), tends to discourage monopolies and is similar to the income tax in the United States."

The above dispatch only helps to authenticate the necessity of our Government taking this matter up and demanding that our rights be not sacrificed. It also shows that influence of others than the mining men themselves must be solicited and obtained or these 400,000 mining claims will be confiscated for such taxes, as are fully explained in the inclosures as certainly confiscatory.

The inclosures also show plainly the hypocrisy and incompetency of the statement above as quoted as the reason for the decree being insisted upon.

Trusting you can make use of all this, I am,

Respectfully,

E. J. KIMBALL.

P. S.—I shall to-day endeavor to get the chamber of commerce or mines to take this matter up also.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., January 5, 1916.

Hon. Senator JOHN D. WORKS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Firstly I wish to again thank you for your favors in the past which have been of invaluable service to me in obtaining action on the part of our Department of State as to Mexican affairs.

I am inclosing data on a serious condition that has arisen in the matter of the decrees of the newly recognized President of Mexico. Another self-made President.

Certainly this confiscatory decree, as explained in the inclosed article, can be eliminated if our President and Senate, or either or both, will force the issue and protect us against a pure confiscatory measure made under the guise of a tax. No doubt it is a concocted scheme on the part of some one or ones to make a wholesale killing in the confiscation of properties in that land of Manana. It should be pinched in the bud. I wish you would find time and opportunity to look into this matter, if possible, along with any other Senators who will be so kind as so to do.

I shall send copies of the inclosure, with comments, to several other Republican Senators within the next few days.

Thanking you in the matter, I am sincerely,

E. J. KIMBALL,
1632½ Winona Boulevard, Hollywood,
Los Angeles, Cal.

AS TO THE DECREE OF VENUSTIANO CARRANZA, PROVISIONAL PRESIDENT OF MEXICO, AFFECTING MINING TAXES ON PROPERTIES IN MEXICO, PAYABLE DURING MARCH, 1916, AND THEREAFTER.

All persons owning mining properties in Mexico or being in any manner interested in the future and welfare of Mexico should take notice of the following and use their good influence to endeavor to show the Mexican authorities that for the welfare of Mexico and for the sake of equity and justice to foreigners owning properties in that country that the decree in mention and explained below should be rescinded at once.

It is in name a tax, but in purpose and effect is none other than a diplomatic confiscatory measure. Surely confiscating the greater portion of the mining claims belonging to Americans and other foreigners in Mexico. With the exception perhaps of those properties belonging to a few great corporations, who may be fortunate through governmental pressure or private arrangement to escape this tax.

Mining properties owned by Americans and other foreigners in Mexico were either purchased or located by them during the régimes of Porfirio Diaz, Fco Madero, or Victoriana Huerta, and at a time when the taxes, although high enough, were not confiscatory. The taxes were as follows:

For the first 25 pertenencias in a claim, tax was yearly 6 pesos each.

For all pertenencias in addition to 25, tax was yearly 3 pesos each.

Therefore, if a claim containes 60 pertenencias, the tax was as follows:

First 25 pertenencias, at 6 pesos yearly, or 150 pesos.

The remaining 35 pertenencias, at 3 pesos, or 105 pesos.

Thus for a mine of 60 pertenencias the tax was 255 pesos yearly.

Under the Carranza decree the mining tax is as follows, no matter whether your holdings are in in one claim or in many:

The first 10 pertenencias in a district, tax 12 pesos, gold, yearly each pertenencias.

The second 10 pertenencias in a district, tax 15 pesos, gold, yearly each pertenencia.

From 20 to 50 pertenencias in a district, tax 18 pesos, gold, yearly each pertenencia.

For every pertenencia above 50 in a district, tax 24 pesos, gold, yearly each pertenencia.

Therefore, second to the new decree, the tax on the same claims as cited above as being 255 pesos yearly will be henceforth as follows:

	Pesos gold.
First 10 pertenencias, at 12 pesos gold yearly, or	120
Second 10 pertenencias, at 15 pesos gold yearly, or	150
Next 30 pertenencias, at 18 pesos gold yearly, or	540
Remaining 10 pertenencias, at 24 pesos gold yearly, or	240
	1,050

Thus, the tax on 60 pertenencias has been raised from 255 pesos to 1,050 pesos yearly. If the case were that a company has 500 pertenencias in a district—which is a common occurrence, and many times much more—the difference in the amounts as paid when they obtained such holdings and what they will be compelled to pay henceforth or loose their claims is as follows:

OLD LAW.	Pesos.
First 25 pertenencias, at 6 pesos each yearly, or	150
Remaining 475 pertenencias, at 3 pesos each yearly, or	1,425
Total tax yearly	1,575

Under new decree, the yearly tax on 500 pertenencias is as follows:

	Pesos gold.
First 10 pertenencias, at 12 pesos each yearly, or	120
Second 10 pertenencias, at 15 pesos each yearly, or	150
20 to 50 pertenencias, at 18 pesos each yearly, or	540
Remaining 450 pertenencias, at 24 pesos each yearly, or	10,800
Tax yearly on 500 pertenencias	11,610

One thousand and fifty pesos instead of 255 pesos yearly on 60 pertenencias.

Eleven thousand six hundred and ten pesos gold tax instead of 1,574 pesos on 500 pertenencias.

Besides this so-called tax increase, there is accompanying it an exceedingly great increase in the tax on all production of the metals—

A gross tax of 110 gold on every kilo of gold produced.

A gross tax of 2.60 pesos gold on every kilo of silver produced.

Under certain circumstances this production tax is reduced 20 per cent, making it close to and around 7 per cent of the gold and silver produced.

It is needless to say that there are very few mines anywhere that will, month after month and year in and year out, pay a profit outside of all expenses of as much as 7 per cent gross of the production. Therefore it is plain to anyone that this tax is not a tax at all, but simply a diplomatic method of the confiscation of the greater portion of the mines of Mexico from their rightful owners, who have in good faith either purchased or located their properties, as the individual case may be.

When the revolutions broke out in Mexico these mine owners were rapidly developing the resources of Mexico.

American mine owners were ordered by their respective consular agents of the United States of America to leave Mexico and return to the United States of America and were advised that their properties would be protected.

These Americans closed down their mines as ordered, or their development enterprises, as the case might have been.

Now they are being "protected" by the administration that ordered them to leave Mexico. Protected! Better said they are sanctioning the Americans and other foreigners being diplomatically robbed of their holdings.

Should they not have the privilege of returning to Mexico when peace does reign and without any danger of confiscation at all be allowed to develop their properties, paying an equitable tax and having ample protection?

If proper representations be made, no doubt the Mexican authorities could be persuaded to see the unjust position taken in this matter by them. What an injustice it is and also what a disaster it will mean to Mexico herself to enforce such decrees, for it will surely keep nearly all foreign capital from their country. It will be needless to say, thus also cause very little American machinery and American products to go into that land—a greater injustice to Mexico herself than to anyone else. This is not only of importance to mining men but to everyone, for the throttling of the mining interests in Mexico would be far-reaching, indeed.

If this decree is not rescinded, Mexico's mining interests will have been throttled, the properties of the majority of the Americans will have been confiscated. These Americans and other foreigners' interests will have been sacrificed on the alter of greed and dishonesty, at least acquiesced in and presided over by that man who guarantees the safe delivery of death-dealing munitions of war to his favored friends, placing innocent women and babes astride torpedoes to guarantee or insure them against molestation of destruction even by those whom they are being sent to kill.

ENLISTMENT OF AMERICAN CITIZENS IN CANADA.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, it appears that some time ago the Secretary of Labor issued a statement in the form of a rule that a citizen of the United States enlisting in the Canadian Army to fight in Europe could, upon his return to the United States, be admitted to full citizenship. I do not care to discuss that proposition now, but inasmuch as the article which I ask to have read contains a procedure of enlistment and the oath which the soldier takes, I desire a clipping from a Michigan paper, an editorial, about a third of a column, to be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

ENLISTMENT AND CITIZENSHIP.

There has been some protest from German sympathizers in this country because Secretary Wilson, of the Department of Labor, has ruled that Americans who enlist in the Canadian Army and subsequently return to this country are not to be treated as aliens by the immigration inspectors, but are to be allowed full rights as citizens of the United States. The pro-Germans insist that such persons lose their citizenship by entering the service of a foreign potentate. Wilson bases his ruling on the circumstance that the United States accepts the enlistment of aliens without depriving them of their citizenship in the land of their birth.

Without in the least undertaking to take sides in this controversy, we venture to suggest that what Canada requires in accepting the services of aliens is more pertinent just now than what the United States does, since it is Canada and not America that is swearing in troops.

The Canadian enlistment blanks for those desiring to join the overseas expeditionary force contain a declaration and an oath which must be signed by the applicant. In the declaration the recruit says he engages and agrees to serve in the over-seas force and to be attached to any arm of its service for one year, or during the war now going on between Great Britain and Germany should that war continue more than a year, and also for six months after the termination of the war "provided His Majesty should so long require my services."

The oath says:

"I do make oath that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to His Majesty King George V, his heirs and successors, and that I will, as duty bound, honestly and faithfully defend His Majesty, his heirs and successors in person, crown, and dignity against all enemies, and will observe and obey all orders of His Majesty, his heirs and successors, and all the generals and officers set over me."

The Canadian recruiting officers hold that the declaration explains and modifies the oath, and shows that the American recruit is entering into only a temporary engagement and allegiance.

When an alien acquires citizenship in this country he is required to forswear and repudiate all foreign allegiance. Can he subsequently reassume that allegiance and then drop it again at pleasure, as one might take on or put off a cloak, and still remain an American citizen? Can a native-born American give temporary fealty to a foreign monarch and retain his rights in this country unimpaired? Can there be such a thing as a partial allegiance to a foreign government on the part of an American which will not affect his standing as a citizen of the United States?

Such things may be possible. But the final determination must be left to an expert. Even Secretary Wilson recognizes this, for he admits that his ruling is only provisional until the courts have opportunity to pass on the subject.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the ruling of the Secretary of Labor at this time further than to say that it seems to me most remarkable that a citizen of the United States can take such an oath, which might possibly easily involve him against his own country in defense of a foreign potentate; but inasmuch as the matter is not now here I am going to refrain from submitting any remarks at this time, but shall only submit to the Senate the statement which I have had read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have here a communication from the Secretary of Labor on the subject to which the Senator from Michigan has just now referred, which sets out in detail the Secretary's view of the matter. It is important that the Senate should have information concerning the subject, because it is a question of no mean importance. I think that it ought to be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I shall be very glad to have that done.

Mr. WALSH. I will say in this connection that I have been appealed to in a very considerable number of cases by the parents of boys 16, 17, and 18 years of age, who have been induced to enlist in the military service of Great Britain, to secure, if possible, their release. I do not care to comment at this time upon efforts that are being made to thus lead our young men into the service of any of the contending nations. I submit, however, that it would be a somewhat regrettable thing if these boys by their heedless and inconsiderable action should be put in a situation where they could no longer claim the protection of our Government nor claim the advantages of American citizenship when they should be restored to their parents. I do not mean to say that it would not be wise that that conclusion should follow, but the question is a rather delicate one. Therefore I am glad to submit what the Secretary of Labor has to say about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the communication submitted by the Senator from Montana will be printed in the RECORD.

The communication referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 8, 1916.

Hon. T. J. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter addressed to the solicitor for the department, in which you inclose an article from the Fatherland criticizing the action of this department in the case of Frank Caswell, wherein the department laid down a rule of policy, hereinafter referred to, in this class of cases. The article quotes a circular issued by the commissioner of immigration at Montreal, Canada, as follows:

"Several cases have arisen of late wherein the question has been raised as to whether a United States citizen expatriates himself by enlisting in the Canadian Army. The matter has been the subject of considerable correspondence and has now been definitely decided, as attested by the following quotation from bureau letter of October 9, 1915, No. 54003431:

"'Instructions should be issued by you to the end that hereafter the boards will not question the American citizenship of an applicant because of the fact that he took the oath of allegiance and enlisted in the Canadian forces.'

"Officers in this district will be governed accordingly."

The article then states:

"Under this ruling a native-born or naturalized American citizen may take a solemn oath that he will forever forswear allegiance to the Stars and Stripes, become a subject of King George of England, offer his life and limbs in the cause of a foreign potentate, and yet remain a citizen of the United States, welcome to return and be received into full citizenship as anyone else who has throughout remained loyal to his own country."

Of course there is no truth in the statement that "under this ruling a native-born or naturalized American citizen may take a solemn oath that he will forever forswear allegiance to the Stars and Stripes, become a subject of King George of England, * * * and yet remain a citizen of the United States." The Department of Labor and the Bureau of Immigration have invariably administered the immigration laws impartially, irrespective of the nationality of the applicant for admission. It is probable that a number of men of American birth have enlisted in the armies of each of the belligerent countries of Europe and have taken the qualified oath of allegiance which a soldier is required to take upon enlistment, and the same interpretation of the law would naturally be applied to each of them when returning to the United States as was applied in the case which resulted in the issuance of the circular quoted in the clipping, no matter which of the armies they enlisted in. The circular was issued by the commissioner of immigration at Montreal to the immigration inspectors on the Canadian border as per the decision of the department in the Frank Caswell case contained in the following letter of instructions from the Acting Commissioner General:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 9, 1915.

UNITED STATES COMMISSIONER OF IMMIGRATION,
Montreal, Canada:

Referring to the Frank Caswell case (your 11035/395), you are advised that the board should reconsider his application for admission without relation to the fact that he enlisted in the expeditionary force from Canada to Great Britain.

Instructions should be issued by you to the end that hereafter the boards will not question the American citizenship of an applicant because of the fact he took the oath of allegiance and enlisted in the Canadian forces.

ALFRED HAMPTON,
Assistant Commissioner General.

You will observe that the circular only quotes a portion of the bureau letter, and consequently does not show the fact that the conclusions arrived at grew out of the consideration of a specific case, nor does the letter make any reference to the moot point of law upon which the department based its action. The letter of the Acting Commissioner General represents, in part, the attitude of this department in dealing with the subject of expatriation in administering the immigration laws, except that the word "qualified," which should have occurred before the word "oath," was inadvertently omitted in the communication.

This department has no authority to determine the question of expatriation except for the purpose of administering the immigration and Chinese exclusion laws. It can not confer citizenship upon anyone. That is a judicial function. An alien coming to the United States is admitted solely as a mater of privilege if he conforms to certain conditions established by law. An American citizen returning to the United States is entitled to admission unconditionally as a matter of right. If we err in denying admission to an alien, his only ground of complaint is that he has been denied the privilege which has been granted to others similarly situated. If we err in denying admission to a citizen, the department is placed in the position of taking away from one of our own people that which is his inherent right.

In the act of March 2, 1907, section 2 (34 Stat., 1228), Congress, for the first time, undertook to define the conditions which would result in expatriation. It provided:

"That any American citizen shall be deemed to have expatriated himself when he has been naturalized in any foreign State in conformity with its laws or when he has taken an oath of allegiance to any foreign State.

"When any naturalized citizen shall have resided for two years in the foreign State from which he came, or for five years in any other foreign State, it shall be presumed that he has ceased to be an American citizen, and the place of his general abode shall be deemed his place of residence during said years: Provided, however, That such presumption may be overcome on the presentation of satisfactory evidence to a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States, under such rules and regulations as the Department of State may prescribe: And provided also, That no American citizen shall be allowed to expatriate himself when this country is at war."

In construing this law for the purpose of administering the immigration laws it is the policy of this department that whenever any citizen of the United States, native or naturalized, takes an unqualified oath of allegiance to any foreign State by which he becomes a citizen or subject of that State, or renounces his allegiance to the United States, or when any naturalized citizen shall have resided for two years in the foreign State from whence he came, or for five years in any other foreign State, without having presented satisfactory evidence to a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States, under such rules and regulations as the Department of State shall prescribe, to presume that the expatriation is complete, and such persons presenting themselves for admission to the United States are dealt with in exactly the same manner as any other alien.

When any citizen of the United States takes a limited or qualified oath of allegiance to a foreign State, which expires by its own time limitations and does not make him a subject or citizen of the foreign State to which he has sworn allegiance, and which does not renounce allegiance to the United States, a judicial question is involved which, so far as this department is advised, has never been determined by any of our courts, as to whether or not citizenship in the United States is automatically restored when the time limit of the oath of allegiance to a foreign State has expired and the person who has taken such an oath seeks to return to this country. It is understood that the oaths of allegiance taken by citizens of the United States when they join the army of any of the belligerents in the war now raging in Europe do not make them citizens or subjects of the State whose army they join. They expire by virtue of their own time limitations, and contain no clause renouncing allegiance to the United States. These conditions create an element of doubt concerning the automatic restoration of citizenship to persons who have taken such an oath, and until the question has been determined by judicial interpretation it is the purpose of this department in administering the immigration laws to resolve the doubt in favor of the person returning to the United States under these circumstances.

I would be very glad to arrange with the Department of Justice to have a test case instituted which would determine the point at issue. That can be very readily accomplished in the Frank Caswell case, out of which have grown the rulings of this department on the question. Frank Caswell, a native of Maine, went to Canada in 1912 for the purpose of obtaining employment. During his stay there, on August 13, 1914, he enlisted in the Canadian military service and was sent to England for the purpose of training. He returned to Canada on April 3, 1915, and was discharged from the military service in question on the 7th of April following. It appears that he took the regular oath of allegiance required of all persons enlisting in the Canadian service for the present European war. On August 18 last he secured an offer of employment from a cabinet company in Detroit, Mich., and while on his way to accept the same he was excluded at Port Huron, Mich., as an alien seeking to enter the United States in violation of the contract-labor provisions of the act of February 20, 1907 (34 Stat., 898), his alienage being based on the ground that the oath of allegiance taken when he entered the Canadian military service operated to expatriate him, under the provisions of section 3 of the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1228), which made him, as an alien, amenable to the provisions of the immigration law. Upon appeal to the department he was admitted, in accordance with the policy outlined above. He is now in the United States. The essential facts are admitted. If he is an alien, he has violated the alien contract-labor provisions of the immigration laws, is unlawfully in the United States, and can be deported. Deportation proceedings can readily be instituted and an interpretation obtained from the courts which can be used as a guide in the administration of the law.

Respectfully,

W. B. WILSON, Secretary.

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC STEEL.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, recently in this body a statement was made that two-thirds of the structural steel which was used in the reconstruction of San Francisco, Cal., was imported from Europe. For the information of the Senate I wrote to the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco and to the iron works there. I have a communication in reply, and I request that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the communication presented by the Senator from California will be printed in the RECORD.

The communication referred to is as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, December 31, 1915.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiry concerning the use of German steel in the reconstruction work in San Francisco, Cal., we beg to submit the following, gleaned from our knowledge of the facts and figures:

Since the disaster of 1906, approximately 1,100,000 tons of structural steel has been used in rebuilding, of which at the utmost 120,000 tons was imported direct to this port from Germany and Belgium.

Of the total tonnage of 1,100,000 tons used, approximately 600,000 tons was fabricated and erected by the local shops, and the balance, 500,000 tons, was furnished and erected by eastern firms.

We have no means of ascertaining whether any of the steel used by the eastern firms was imported from abroad or not, but the amount of foreign steel brought direct to this port by the local shops and used in reconstruction is less than 12 per cent of the total tonnage used.

The comparative prices of foreign and domestic steel at various periods from 1906 to the present are as follows:

10 years.	Domestic price.	Foreign price at San Francisco, Cal.
	Per cwt.	Per cwt.
1906	$2.35 to $2.50	$2.35
1907	2.25 to 2.45	2.25
1908	2.35 to 2.40	2.25
1909	2.10 to 2.25	1.85
1910	2.10 to 2.20	1.85
1911	2.05 to 2.25	1.82½
1912	1.90 to 2.20	$1.90 to 2.02½
1913	2.25	1.76½
1914	1.90	1.31½ to 1.76
1915	1.90 to 2.65	[1]

[1] No information at San Francisco for first half of year.

Trusting that the foregoing will serve your purpose, and that if we can be of any further assistance to you that you will not hesitate to command us, we beg to remain,

Respectfully, yours,

CENTRAL IRON WORKS (INC.),
A. A. DEVOTO, President.

MEMORANDUM SUBMITTED TO MR. PHELAN,

SAN FRANCISCO, December 24, 1915.

Referring to the amount of structural steel which came into this port during the reconstruction period, I beg to advise you that it is extremely difficult to determine, owing to the changing classifications of the customhouse. By carefully checking the records of the customhouse from 1906 to the present time and by comparison with the figures similarly obtained by one of the largest steel users in the West, we can roughly estimate the amount of purely structural steel imported into San Francisco during this period to be 33,000 tons.

There is no doubt that much bar iron came in, which was used for reinforcing purposes, but it is nearly impossible to approximate this amount, as it is included within the figures under the classification ingot, bar, and other steel. We are informed by steel men familiar with the situation that the steel imported into this port for this purpose was approximately 10 per cent of the amount used.

Very truly, yours,

SAN FRANCISCO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By ROBERT K. LYNCH,
Vice President and Manager.

THE EXPORT TRADE.

Mr. STONE. During the month of November last I addressed a communication to the Secretary of Commerce, requesting him to furnish me with some statistical information. I sought to ascertain, as far as possible, the data showing the amount of our exports to various countries, those engaged in war and neutral countries, and also, as far as possible, to separate such exports, so as to show what part of those exports could be said to be for war purposes as compared with exports that could not be said to be for war uses. I have here an answer to my communication.

The Secretary of Commerce has transmitted to me a communication from the Bureau of Statistics inclosing two tables. The first of these tables shows the values of exports from the United States to the principal foreign countries in October, 1913, and October, 1915, with the increase or decrease to each country. The European countries are grouped in two classes according as they are belligerent or neutral.

The second of these tables shows the exports of domestic merchandise from the United States to belligerent countries of Europe, Canada, Japan, and Asiatic Russia, to the neutral countries of Europe, and to other countries in October, 1913, and October, 1915, classified according to the extent of their use as munitions of war.

I thought that the communication and the tables would be of interest and value to Senators, and I therefore ask that they may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DECEMBER 27, 1915.

The SECRETARY OF COMMERCE:

There are inclosed herewith two tables showing:

1. The value of exports from the United States to the principal foreign countries in October, 1913, and October, 1915, with increase or decrease to each country. The European countries are grouped in two classes according as they are belligerent or neutral.

2. The exports of domestic merchandise from the United States to belligerent countries of Europe, to Canada, Japan, and Asiatic Russia, to neutral countries of Europe, and to other countries in October, 1913, and October, 1915, classified according to extent of use as munitions of war.

A single month has been taken, because of the difficulty in making the necessary compilation from the returns of the various collectors of customs. Similar returns can be compiled, if necessary, for later months and, it is believed, much more promptly. October is doubtless the best single month, because of the heavy shipments. Comparison is made with October, 1913, the latest corresponding month before the outbreak of war.

There have been large shipments to Canada, doubtless intended, in part, for reexportation to Europe, and to Asiatic Russia for shipment across Siberia. Exports to these countries and to Japan are shown so as to avoid any suspicion that the movement of war supplies has been minimized. In view of the very close supervision of the trade with neutral countries it is considered doubtful whether any considerable exports to such countries can reach belligerent destinations.

The impossibility of distinguishing accurately between munitions of war and commercial shipments must be clearly recognized. It is not practicable to ask our exporters to declare whether each individual shipment is destined for the supply of armies or for commercial use. Many shippers are undoubtedly not informed and, in any event, such a requirement would meet vigorous opposition. Yet in no other way can commercial shipments and army shipments be distinguished, even in a general way. With the leading competing nations at war, it is natural that there should be large demands for our manufactures from neutral countries and from belligerents themselves for goods which were formerly obtained from the manufacturing nations of Europe. Failure to give due weight to this consideration is responsible for much of the confusion that has appeared in newspaper interviews. The increased exports to the nations at war are frequently taken as a measure of our trade in army supplies while, to a large extent, these exports are the result of lessened productivity in the warring nations.

EXPORTS TO BELLIGERENT EUROPE.

To the belligerent countries of Europe our total exports in October, 1915, were $31,500,000 more than our exports two years earlier. Explosives and firearms showed a gain of $18,000,000. Articles largely used for army purposes, including horses, woolen wearing apparel, commercial automobiles, etc., increased $21,000,000. Foodstuffs, the proportion of which used for army supplies can not be determined, increased $26,000,000, and other articles partly used for army supplies increased $21,000,000.

Some of these increases can not fairly be chargeable to the war. Our wheat crop this year is 249,000,000 bushels more than in 1913, an increase of 32 per cent, which would undoubtedly, even had peace prevailed, have resulted in largely increased shipments. To credit one-half of the gain in the third group of articles (those partly used for army supplies) would perhaps be fair, and on this basis $60,000,000 to $65,000,000 would represent the amount of munitions of war in our October exports.

Even counting the total gain in the articles used partly for army supplies, the increased exports in all three classes amounted to somewhat less than $86,000,000. This maximum commercial gain from the war must be offset by our loss in cotton and copper.

The cotton crop last year was 2,000,000 bales more than the year before (a percentage gain of 14 per cent). The small crop of the present year, largely due to reduced acreage, reflecting the low prices of last year, is supplemented by heavy stocks. The decrease of $63,000,000 in our cotton exports to belligerent countries is therefore attributable directly to the war. Copper exports fell off a third in value, while the production in 1914 was only 6 per cent less than the year before.

Charging off the large decrease in cotton and copper and the smaller decrease in gasoline and naphtha, the net gain from the war, even on the most liberal basis of calculation, is only $19,500,000 (for October). In articles which can scarcely be affected appreciably by the war, the gain in exports to belligerent countries was $12,000,000. This group includes a $600,000 increase in coal and coke, a $700,000 increase in wire (other than barbed wire) and wire manufactures, a gain of $300,000 in cottonseed oil, and of $160,000 in tinplate. Barley, corn, cars and carriages, tanning bark, dyes and dyestuffs, sugar machinery, leather manufactures (other than men's boots and shoes and harness and saddles), oleo oil, butter, condensed milk, gas oil and fuel oil, toys, beans, peas, and potatoes are some of the other articles showing a gain to all countries of more than $100,000 each.

EXPORTS TO CANADA, JAPAN, AND ASIATIC RUSSIA.

The only largely increased exports to Canada of articles in Table 2 are horses, with a gain of $3,000,000, and brass, with a gain of $1,500,000. To Asiatic Russia the gains are chiefly $2,500,000 in locomotives and $1,000,000 in steel rails. To Japan, although a country at war, the exports show a decrease, chiefly in raw cotton ($2,400,000).

EXPORTS TO NEUTRAL EUROPE.

Our exports to neutral Europe doubled. The gain of $16,600,000 is made up chiefly of wheat, $5,000,000; rye, $3,000,000; bacon, $1,000,000; and sole and upper leather, $800,000. Our abundant wheat crop and the cutting off of the Russian supply of rye explain fully the largest two items. From the nature of the articles involved our gain, if any, from the war, is due to the temporary elimination of our foreign competitors.

GAINS AND LOSSES TO INDIVIDUAL COMPANIES.

Largely increased exports to the United Kingdom, Italy, European Russia, and France are offset in part by the cutting off of our shipments to Germany, Belgium, and Austria-Hungary.

It is to the neutral countries of Europe that increased exports are most general. This is natural, in view of the former dependence of these countries on supplies from the countries at war and the need of finding new sources to meet their requirements. Gains are largest in exports to Norway, Sweden, the Netherlands, and Greece. Only Roumania, to which approach through both central Europe and Turkey has been closed, shows a loss.

Among non-European countries, our gains are largest to Asiatic Russia and Cuba and our loss greatest to Japan. This disastrous effects of the war on the markets of South American are, in spite of recent improvement, visible in exports to Brazil, Chile, and Argentina much below the level of two years ago. For the preceding quarter (July-September) the showing to Argentina, Brazil, and Chile was more favorable, a gain of $5,000,000 over the corresponding three months of 1913 being recorded.

FRANK R. RUTTER,
Assistant Chief of Bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if the tables presented by him show the exportation for one month in each of the years 1913 and 1915, or for those two entire years?

Mr. STONE. I read what the tables show. They contain a comparative statement for the months of October, 1913, and October, 1915, which are the months immediately preceding my inquiry.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the matter being printed; but I wish simply to say in this connection that I have a list of exportations of all articles and classes for nine months of the years 1913, 1914, and 1915; that is, the first nine months of each of the three years, and the amount of exportations as classified by the department. For the information of the Senate, without going into details, I will say of those 36 classifications the exportations for the first nine months of 1913 amounted to $1,733,400,000; for the same months of 1914 the exportations were $1,467,400,000, or a decrease over the exports for the year 1913; but in the year 1915 the exportations were $2,532,500,000.

I wish to call attention to some of the items that can be classified as those for which the increased demand has been brought about on account of the war; and call attention to the fact that the difference between the total exportations for 1913 and those for 1915 amounts to $799,000,000. I wish to call attention to some of the items of increases, showing that the increases were on account of the war and for items used in the war that this increase of exportations occurred. For instance, in the item of cattle, hogs, horses, sheep, mules, and so forth, in 1913 the exports were $5,600,000, while in 1915 they were $96,200,000. In the case of chemicals and drugs, in 1913 the exportations were $19,800,000, while in 1915 they were $54,200,000. In the case of explosives, in 1913 the exportations were $3,800,000, while in 1915 they were $84,300,000. The exportations of iron and steel manufactures in 1913 were $226,500,000, in 1915 they were $251,100,000. In 1913 the exports of meat were $120,200,000, while in 1915 they were $194,800,000. The exports of refined sugar in 1913 were $1,300,000, while in 1915 they were $24,800,000. The exportations of zinc manufactures in 1913 were $1,000,000, whereas in 1915 they were $21,500,000.

Mr. President, I might go on and mention every item and show that most of the increased exportations from this country have been undoubtedly brought about by the war and are made up of those articles that are used in war, and for no other purpose.

The same report also shows that the items that have been usually exported, that go into the everyday life of the people and the commerce of the world, have not been exported to so large an extent in 1915 as in the year 1913.

Mr. President, I simply wanted, in connection with the statement that was made here for one particular month, to call attention to the figures for nine months of the three years, so that there could be no mistake as to the actual conditions.

Mr. STONE. I wish to ask the Senator if it is his purpose to have printed in the RECORD the statement from which he has quoted?

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly satisfied that it should go into the RECORD.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator has no objection, I should like to have it go into the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask, then, that the table from which I have quoted be printed in the RECORD, without my reading it.

Mr. STONE. Yes; I think that had better be done. As the Senator has made comments, I should like to see the document and I should also like to know where he got it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will tell the Senator where I got it. The Department of Commerce, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, issues a "Monthly Summary of Foreign Commerce of the United States," and if the Senator will take the time to examine it, he will find the figures I have quoted.

Mr. STONE. This is a computation made by the Senator himself, based on some reports to which he has the kindness to invite my considerate attention, but it is the Senator's own computation.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not want to claim credit for the work, Mr. President.

The information is gathered from the "Monthly Summary of Foreign Commerce of the United States."

Mr. STONE. Well, who made the tables—that is the point—from which the Senator was reading a moment ago? Who collated them? Who compiled them?

Mr. SMOOT. The table that I just asked to have put in the RECORD?

Mr. STONE. The Senator knows what I am talking about—yes; who compiled that?

Mr. SMOOT. It was compiled in my office.

Mr. STONE. Oh, that was what the Senator seemed reluctant to say.

Mr. SMOOT. Not in the least.

Mr. STONE. Now, I will ask that it be printed.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator need not ask that; I have already asked that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. STONE. Then I supplement the Senator's request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter will be printed in the RECORD, in the absence of objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if the table which he has presented is intended to disclose the amount of our foreign exportations due to the war and the amount not due to the war? If that be so, does this table show what proportion of our foreign exports were to take the place of goods which the nations at war had heretofore sent to those countries, but which, on account of the war, they were unable to send?

Mr. STONE. The tables which I have submitted, and which will appear in the RECORD to-morrow morning, will show the losses in the way of imports into the neutral nations of Europe—for example, coming from what are now belligerent nations in Europe—and will very clearly disclose, I think, for the month indicated, the increased exports from the United States to such countries due to a falling off of foreign exports to those countries. I think the tables will show that. It might have been better to have covered a period of 3 months or 9 months or 12 months, but I asked simply for this information for a single month as merely indicative of a general condition.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Mr. FLETCHER. On December 10 the Chair laid before the Senate the annual report of the Attorney General for the year 1915, and it was ordered to lie on the table and be printed. I move that the report be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 89) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," approved February 25, 1915, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 1230. An act to authorize the construction of bridges across the Fox River at Aurora, Ill.; and

S. 2409. An act to authorize the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at the city of Steubenville, Jefferson County, Ohio.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HARDING. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of Ohio, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution memoralizing the Senators and Representatives to Congress from the State of Ohio to support H. R. 12292 as amended, popularly known as the Palmer-Owen bill, designed to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor.

Whereas the people of the State of Ohio, in response to enlightened and humane impulses, have, through their representatives, enacted into statute law, provisions for the protection of the State's most valuable asset—its growing children—such laws prohibiting the employment in mills and factories of children less than 14 years of age and embodying, with the exception of the laws of but one State in the Union, the most advanced legislation upon the subject; and

Whereas the blot of unrestricted—or practically unrestricted—child labor still rests upon a number of States, the youth and future career of the Nation's embryo citizens being sacrificed to the assumed needs of commerce; and

Whereas the reckless waste of future potentiality involved in the industrial exploitation of immature children is uneconomic and wrong and constitutes a crime against childhood and against the race itself; and

Whereas the products of various industries of the State of Ohio, manufactured under humane conditions and without robbing childhood of its birthright, are forced to seek to market in competition with the output of child-labor industries in various States in the Union; and

Whereas Federal H. R. 12292, as amended by the House Committee on Labor, known as the Palmer-Owen bill, seeks to prohibit the shipment in interstate commerce of the products of the labor of little children less than 14 years of age; and

Whereas such H. R. 12292 is indorsed by the American Association for Labor Legislation, by organizations of workers and employers alike, by the leaders in contemporaneous thought, and by all true men and women familiar with its provisions; and

Whereas the State of Ohio, being, as stated in the vanguard of States in the matter of child protection, a peculiar responsibility rests upon her representatives: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That our Senators and Representatives to Congress be requested that they use every legitimate effort to secure the speedy enactment into law of H. R. 12292 as amended.

That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each such Senator and Representative by the secretary of state of Ohio.

CHARLES D. CONOVER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
JOHN H. ARNOLD,
President of the Senate.

Adopted March 4, 1915.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OHIO,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, C. Q. Hildebrant, secretary of state of the State of Ohio, do hereby certify that the foregoing is an exemplified copy, carefully compared by me with the original enrolled resolution now in my official custody as secretary of state, and found to be true and correct, of house joint resolution No. 18, adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio March 4, 1915, and filed in this office on the 5th day of March, A. D. 1915.

Witness my hand and official seal at Columbus, Ohio, this 6th day of March, A. D. 1915.

[SEAL.]

C. Q. HILDEBRANT,
Secretary of State.

Mr. NELSON presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens of the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Arthur MacArthur Camp, No. 16, Department of Minnesota, of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the discharge of ex-soldiers from Government positions in the Philippine Islands, which was referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. SHERMAN presented petitions of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church of Gardner, of the Swedish Free Sunday School of Rootford, and of sundry citizens of Maxon, Bellair, Yale, Crandall, Casey, West York, Pontiac, Martinsville, Bath, Saidora, Odin, Salem, and Xenia, all in the State of Illinois, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of 42 citizens of Hartford and East Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, praying for an increase in armaments, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Association of Collegiate Alumnæ of Norwalk, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CURTIS presented memorials of sundry citizens of Arkansas City, McPherson, Wichita, Grand River, and Brazilton, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against an increase in armaments, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wamego, Kans., praying for the placing of an embargo on munitions of war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Lyon County, Kans., remonstrating against the placing of a tax on gasoline, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Washington Post, No. 12, Department of Kansas, Grand Army of the Republic, of Lawrence, Kans., and a petition of the Women's Relief Corps, No. 9, of Lawrence, Kans., praying for the enactment of more liberal pension laws, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

THE JUDICIAL CODE.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2406) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 42) thereon.

PEND OREILLE RIVER BRIDGE, IDAHO.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 320) to authorize the county of Bonner, Idaho, to construct a bridge across Pend Oreille River, and I submit a report (No. 40) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHATTAHOOCHEE RIVER BRIDGE, GEORGIA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 775) granting the consent of Congress to J. P. Jones and others to construct one or more bridges across the Chattahoochee River between the counties of Coweta and Carroll, in the State of Georgia, and I submit a report (No. 41) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

By Mr. HARDING:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 77) directing the Bureau of Education to take such steps as are compatible with Federal authority to encourage the teaching of the Spanish language in the United States of America; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to present a concurrent resolution, now hastily drawn, authorizing the President of the United States to exercise the same power with the Army and Navy in Mexico that is now exercised in Nicaragua and Haiti by our Navy under previous laws concerning their conditions and the maintenance of the peace and security of citizens and property of America.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator have the resolution read?

Mr. LEWIS. No, Mr. President. It may take the usual course. At another time I purpose addressing myself to the resolution.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Illinois to refer to the use of the Army in Nicaragua and Haiti.

Mr. LEWIS. The resolution seeks to authorize the use of the Army and Navy in Mexico under the authority by which we use the Navy in Haiti and Nicaragua.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the resolution to lie on the table, or is it to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. LEWIS. For the present I prefer to have it lie on the table, sir, if that is consistent with the rule, and to have it printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

Mr. LEWIS. I will amend the resolution later. It is rather crudely and hastily drawn. I shall have it substituted by another in more perfect form.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 9) is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be authorized and empowered to order the Army of the United States, or any necessary part thereof, to the country of Mexico and to there cooperate with any force there existing which to the President shall seem appropriate for the object of protecting the citizens and property of the United States and to punish those violating the security of its citizens, and to authorize the President to use the military and naval forces of the United States in Mexico to the same extent as now by law permitted the Navy in Nicaragua and Haiti for the protection of American rights.

PROPOSED CONVENTION ON INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer a concurrent resolution, and as it is very short and rather pertinent to present conditions, I ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 10) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to call a convention of all of the nations of the world to meet in Washington, at such time as he may designate, for the purpose of drafting a code of international law and rules of international conduct, which shall apply to all of the nations of the earth, such code and rules to be adopted and agreed to by such nations, and to be enforced under a joint agreement by all of the nations against any one or more which shall disobey the code and regulations so adopted; that provision shall be had for a permanent international legislative assembly, which shall from time to time enact such further international code, rules, and regulations as in their wisdom may be necessary to preserve the rights of all such nations, with provision for continuity of such legislative body; the purpose of this act, when carried into effect, being to provide for final disarmament of all the nations of the world, preserving in each one such armies and navies as may be proper and necessary for its own police protection and regulations and enforcing all international rights and duties by the combined efforts of all the nations; such legislative assembly to provide for a general court of arbitration for the settlement of all international disputes and the power of all of the nations to be exercised to compel the submission of such questions to arbitration and the enforcement of the judgment of the arbitrary tribunal, pending the continuance of the present war in Europe, and in the event of the failure of the warring nations at present to join in such international convention, the President is authorized to call together all of the neutral nations of the world and secure, if possible, such a code, guaranteed by the respective nations, and to secure as speedily as possible the consent of the several warring nations to enter into such an agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What disposition will the Senator have made of the resolution?

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ARTICLE BY ARTHUR M'DONALD.

Mr. CLAPP. I present a copy of an article by Arthur McDonald, anthropologist, of Washington, D. C., entitled "Peace, War, and Humanity," which I would like to have printed as a public document. I therefore ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to its publication.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The article will be referred to the Committee on Printing for action.

ADDRESS BY HON. CYRUS KEHR.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have a copy of an address by Hon. Cyrus Kehr, of Knoxville, Tenn., delivered before the American Civic Association at a recent meeting of that association in Washington, D. C., December 31, 1915, on the subject of a national system of highways and landscape designing. I am desirous of having the address printed as a public document, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing for action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The paper will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

JEWISH IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that 15,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 611, Sixty-third Congress, second session, be printed for the use of the Senate document room. It is a report of a subcommittee of the National Jewish Immigration Council appointed to examine into the question of illiteracy among Jewish immigrants and its causes. There is a very large demand for the document, and it is not voluminous by any means, and it has already been published.

Mr. CHILTON. Of course nothing can be done with it unless there is an estimate made for the printing.

Mr. CLAPP. That is only necessary where the cost will exceed $500, and this will not exceed, at the outside, $125.

Mr. CHILTON. I have no objection, so far as I am concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. J. Res. 89. Joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," approved February 25, 1915, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 381 be taken up for consideration at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, this is the bill that was pending yesterday evening upon adjournment. I could not consider the parts of the President's message relating to the public revenues and keep within the ordinary parliamentary limitations, except for the rule that prevails within this body, which is different from that which confines the preacher to the text.

I am not desirous of making any prolonged address upon the Philippine question. I have observed with deep gratification, in the course of the discussion of the Philippine question, the development of a single economic condition. That condition was briefly referred to by the chairman of the Committee on the Philippine Islands [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and elaborated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH]. It showed, very commendably, that economies had been made possible in the civil administration of the affairs of that archipelago.

That is a very gratifying condition. It is tinged with regret, however, that economy begins a third of the way around the world, and, like foreign missions, it goes to the heathen of other lands, to the neglect of the economic heathen here at home.

I have not, in the time that I have been permitted on this floor hitherto, observed in this administration any visible economy in the departments or in the administration of governmental affairs. I have, however, observed the contrary. It is well enough for the economies to begin in the Philippine Islands. It is like the payment of taxes; we always are unanimously in favor of the other fellow's paying them. If anybody's salary is to be reduced, I am heartily in favor of beginning on the Filipino. The cost of living, so I am advised by gentlemen who have sojourned in those parts, is not so high there as it is in the United States where the climate is not so temperate. Wardrobes are more expensive here, and the usual diet of the Filipinos would make them fit subjects on which to practice economy. I shall sincerely advocate, after an appropriate interval, the extension of the economies practiced in that country to our own.

Taxation is an inseparable companion of public revenues. The sources of revenue are enduring subjects of controversy. So long as government exists, they will provoke earnest disputes. It is a permanent condition that makes the tariff the center of constantly recurring struggles. No one experienced in actual legislation believes the tariff can be removed from politics until the sources of revenue and the methods of taxation cease to provoke differences of opinion.

Customs duties under Republican administration supplied approximately one-half of our total Treasury receipts, except during the Civil War and the Spanish-American War, when extraordinary demands were met by direct special taxes. Under Democratic administrations from one-third to 40 per cent are derived from customs, and the remainder are from direct taxes.

For many years the Democratic Party has declared for a tariff solely for revenue. The Baltimore platform of 1912 followed that principle. Those into whose hands fell the power of legislation framed a hybrid species known as a "competitive tariff."

The ostensible purpose claimed is that when the duties "are high enough to allow the American manufacturer to make a profit before his competitor can enter the field" such duties must be lowered to enable his foreign competitor to sell in our markets. Inevitably the American producer's profit is singled out here for attack.

It is said that—

> The protection of any profit must of necessity have a tendency to destroy competition and create monopoly, whether the profit protected is reasonable or unreasonable.

I quote from the House committee report in 1913.

It can fairly be inferred that one purpose of the 1913 tariff was to destroy the producers' profit. This is the only success achieved. This absence of profit has not subtracted from the cost of living by a penny. The protection of wage schedules is ignored. The dominant motive is to create competition with the employer who must pay the wages.

Profit to the American employer and manufacturer is condemned and pursued by a competitive tariff to the vanishing point. What profit the foreign manufacturer may gain on his wage scale when selling in our market does not concern this administration in raising revenue. What legitimate industries like iron and steel, sugar, or leather manufactures, agricultural implements, sewing machines, the great grain and live-stock interests, or chemicals may be injured or destroyed by a competitive tariff create no anxiety. What pay rolls are scattered and wages lost do not disturb the gentlemen who follow this destructive practice.

Everybody is asked to forget it when the war orders pour "the cornucopia of plenty" over the country, to borrow a significant phrase used not long ago in this Chamber. Mere phrases can not obliterate the memories of industrial depression temporarily stayed by commerce in war supplies.

The cost of living is not reduced by a competitive tariff. The ability, however, to buy staples by all who support themselves and dependent ones by their earning capacity has been impaired or destroyed by the futile effort to demonstrate a theory. Employees who have felt the hardships of attempting to shift their occupations are not convinced by academic reports of visionary gentlemen who tell them their employers do not know how to run their business. The wage earner will be skeptical about instructing his employer by some one who knows nothing about business. In Republican years his employer managed his business so as to maintain pay rolls and make a reasonable profit. In the absence of war orders we can not now do either.

DEMOCRATIC PROMISES.

The tariff revision act of this administration was signed October 3, 1913. On that occasion the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee said:

> I am absolutely confident that this law will reduce the cost of living in the United States and will provide ample revenue for the Government.

Speaker CLARK, of the House, in the autumn of 1913, in an address in Maine said:

> We believe our tariff bill will reduce the cost of living and at the same time raise abundant revenue.

The report of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House on the tariff bill in 1913 admitted that, according to expert computations, it would probably fail to produce the amount of customs revenue its predecessor did by $37,896,000. It said further:

> The saving thus made in revenue collections is only suggestive of the immensely greater savings secured to the public by the probable change in prices resulting from the removal of the excessive rates of the present law.

This difference was to be supplied by the income tax. It is essential to remember that this report from the House, which alone is given constitutional power to originate money bills, explicitly states that the only deficit apprehended was the difference in the customs collected under the revision and the customs duties collected under the Republican act of 1909. It was proposed to supply this deficiency by the income tax. No other source of revenue was mentioned as necessary fully to supply the Government with adequate revenue.

The House minority report accompanying the majority report reminded the Democratic administration that—

> No new administration ever inherited such a full Treasury and such abundant revenue. In view of the official Treasury statement, all must admit the prosperous condition of our governmental finances. The people of the country have been more prosperous than ever before in our history. There is no excuse for the radical change in our revenue system proposed by this bill. The party proposing it is in power not by the grace of the majority of the American people but by a division in the ranks of the majority on other questions than that of protection. The administration has the power to enact this legislation. The accounting for the abuse of that power will come later.

The Senate Finance Committee, reporting on the floor of this Chamber in July, 1913, took occasion to say:

> Revenues for the current fiscal year, and especially those from customs receipts, though covering a period of transition from a policy of high protection to a policy of competitive tariff legislation, will be fully equal to the expenditures appropriated for the corresponding period.

It is stated further in this report that under this bill there will be a surplus of receipts over expenditures. It was urged that a competitive tariff must be substituted for a protective tariff. Greatly increased imports were predicted. Their competitive effect in our markets, it was said, would reduce the cost of living. That prediction has signally failed.

WHAT BECAME OF THE MONEY?

The responsible leader of the House majority declared a few days ago, in substance, that the Democratic administration has appropriated less money than the preceding Republican one. It is asserted by his predecessor, now a Member of the Senate, that the tariff act of 1913 produced more revenue than the Payne-Aldrich law.

If less money is appropriated, as claimed by the House leader, and more revenue is collected under the law of 1913 than under its predecessor, then, with increased revenue and with lower appropriations it is a pertinent inquiry what becomes of the money, Mr. President. I should like to have this interesting psychological financial exhibit explained in some way so that it can be demonstrated where the resulting surplus revenues have gone.

So far the only visible results of this happy state of affairs is the President's annual message asking for increased taxation and a constant decrease in the general fund balance. In the absence of military and naval increases for preparedness still additional taxes would be needed to avert a deficit. Mr. President, the prodigal son was considerably more candid in his explanation. When his balance met the fate of all spendthrifts in private life he owned up and repentant returned to an improved diet and sounder finances.

Statistics of several years have been assembled in this Chamber and invidious comparisons made greatly to the comfort of an embarrassed administration. Figures, of course, will not deceive, but the persons who handle them can produce some astounding conclusions. No greater hallucinations ever seized upon the human mind than when it is permitted to run at large among a lot of statistics. It is fit that some of those conclusions be examined in the light of the entire financial record affecting the receipts and expenditures of the last two fiscal years.

COMPARISONS OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Let me premise the statement by saying that the election of 1910 sent 228 Democrats and 160 Republicans to the House, a party majority of 68. The House possesses the exclusive power to originate money bills. The legislation of the House began in 1911 with the Sixty-second Congress and ended March 4, 1913. With a Republican majority still remaining in the Senate and a Republican President, some restraint was laid upon whatever extravagant propensities appeared in the House.

The Sixty-second Congress appropriated, exclusive of the Post Office, for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1912, and ending June 30, 1913	$695,693,760.06
For the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1913, and ending June 30, 1914	768,166,710.41
Total appropriations by Sixty-second Congress, exclusive of Post Office	1,463,860,470.47
The Sixty-second Congress appropriated for the Panama Canal	53,172,343.00
Leaving appropriations by Sixty-second Congress, exclusive of Panama Canal and Post Office	1,410,688,127.47
The ordinary receipts for the fiscal years beginning: July 1, 1912, and ending June 30, 1913, exclusive of postal receipts, were	724,111,229.84
July 1, 1913, and ending June 30, 1914, exclusive of postal receipts, were	734,673,166.71
Total ordinary receipts, fiscal years 1913 and 1914	1,458,784,396.55
If the Panama Canal appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1913, and June 30, 1914, are deducted, there was appropriated by the Sixty-second Congress, exclusive of Post Office	1,410,686,127.47
Leaving excess of receipts for fiscal years ending June 30, 1913, and June 30, 1914, over appropriations by Sixty-second Congress, exclusive of Panama Canal and Post Office, of	48,096,269.08
If the Panama Canal appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1913, and June 30, 1914, be paid out of the ordinary receipts for these years, the appropriations of the Sixty-second Congress, exclusive of Post Office and including Panama Canal, were	1,463,860,470.47
And the total ordinary receipts for those years were	1,458,784,396.55
Leaving an excess of appropriations by Sixty-second Congress, exclusive of Post Office, over ordinary receipts of	5,076,093.92

The Sixty-third Congress was Democratic in House and Senate, with a Democratic Executive. It convened in extra session April 7, 1913, and remained in session practically until March 4, 1915, when it expired by law and not by its voluntary act.

It appropriated, exclusive of the Post Office, for—

The fiscal year beginning July 1, 1914, and ending June 30, 1915	$802,753,471.55
The fiscal year beginning July 1, 1915, and ending June 30, 1916	801,572,345.02
Total appropriations by Sixty-third Congress, exclusive of Post Office	1,604,325,816.57
The Sixty-third Congress appropriated for Panama Canal	41,921,573.39
Leaving appropriations by Sixty-third Congress, exclusive of Panama Canal and Post Office	1,562,404,243.27
The ordinary receipts for the fiscal years— Beginning July 1, 1914, and ending June 30, 1915, exclusive of postal receipts, were	697,910,827.58
Beginning July 1, 1915, and ending June 30, 1916, exclusive of postal revenues unless additional revenue receipts shall be procured by new legislation, estimating the receipts of 1916 as the same as 1915	697,910,827.58
Making total ordinary receipts, fiscal years of 1915 and 1916	1,395,821,655.16
If the Panama Canal appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1915, and June 30, 1916, are deducted, there was appropriated by the Sixty-third Congress, exclusive of Post Office	1,562,404,243.27
Leaving excess of appropriations for fiscal years ending June 30, 1915, and June 30, 1916, exclusive of Panama Canal and Post Office, of	166,582,588.11
If the Panama Canal appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1915, and June 30, 1916, be paid out of ordinary receipts for those years, the appropriations of the Sixty-third Congress, exclusive of Post Office and including Panama Canal, are	1,604,325,816.73
And total ordinary receipts, estimating the receipts of 1916 under present revenue laws, the same as 1915, will for those years be	1,395,821,655.16
Leaving an excess of appropriations by Sixty-third Congress, exclusive of Post Office, over ordinary receipts, of	208,504,161.59

I think it is proper here to notice a statement made not long ago in this Chamber—a most remarkable assumption by the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to relieve this administration from the financial plight in which it is placed by its own legislation. The first year of the tariff act of October 3, 1913, is credited with producing $734,343,700. This fiscal year began July 1, 1913, and ended June 30, 1914.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, it seems to me that in such an important discussion as this, concerning Democratic policies, there should be more than two Democrats present on the other side of the Chamber. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fall	Lodge	Simmons
Bankhead	Fletcher	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Gore	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Gronna	Myers	Smoot
Bryan	Harding	Nelson	Sterling
Catron	Hughes	Oliver	Stone
Chamberlain	James	Page	Sutherland
Chilton	Johnson, Me.	Phelan	Swanson
Clapp	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Thomas
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Poindexter	Thompson
Colt	Kenyon	Shafroth	Townsend
Cummins	Lane	Sheppard	Underwood
Curtis	Lee, Md.	Sherman	Weeks
Dillingham	Lewis	Shields	Works

Mr. ASHURST. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber.

Mr. STONE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. REED] is absent on important business. He is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I wish also to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is confined at home by sickness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], who is absent from the city, is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I desire this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. GOFF] is detained from the Senate on account of illness. I desire also to announce that the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are also unavoidably absent. The senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH], the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] are detained on official business. I wish also to announce that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Illinois will proceed.

DUTIES COLLECTED.

Mr. SHERMAN. Duties were collected from July 1, 1913, to October 4, 1913, under the Republican rates of the act of 1909 in the sum of $88,617,096. If the rate of duties in the Democratic act of October 3, 1913, had applied from July 1, 1913, to October 4, 1913, customs of only $57,000,000 would have been collected on the same volume of imports for this interval. This is an excess revenue of $31,617,096. Duties on wool were continued from October 3, 1913, to December 1, 1913; on woolen manufactures until January 1, 1914, and on sugar until March 1, 1914. The last three items produced before the dates named an excess of revenue over that which would have been collected from the same volume of imports if the October 3, 1913, rates, or free list, had been applied, of $20,287,864.

The revenue-producing capacity of the act of October 3, 1913, is measured by stripping it of the revenue it did not collect. Fifty-one million nine hundred and four thousand nine hundred and sixty dollars must be deducted from its revenue for the year ending June 30, 1914. The actual revenue produced by it is $682,768,206.71. The last year of the Payne-Aldrich Act, ending June 30, 1913, collected $724,111,229. The new act collected $41,343,023 less than the preceding Republican act.

With this loss of revenues, the appropriations of the Sixty-third Congress showed no reduction. If a normal increase be allowed, still no excuse for the totals of that Congress can be justified. The Sixty-third Congress was wholly Democratic. Its total of appropriations, exclusive of the Post Office, were $1,604,325,816.57. The Sixty-first Congress was wholly Republican. Its total appropriations were $1,453,084,293.99. This is an increase of $151,241,522.58 in four years.

The Sixty-second Congress was Democratic in the House. They held the absolute power to prevent any appropriations. The Senate and the Executive were Republican. Its total appropriations, exclusive of the Post Office, were $1,463,860,470.47. The Democratic Sixty-third Congress exceeded it $140,465,345.90. The total appropriations of the Sixty-second Congress, Republican in the Senate and Executive, were $1,463,860,470.47, as compared with the total appropriations of the wholly Republican Sixty-first Congress of $1,453,084,293.99. This is an increase of only $10,776,176.48 in two years between the Sixty-first and the Sixty-second Congress.

Let this be compared with the increase in appropriations of $151,245,522.58 between the Sixty-first and the Sixty-third Congress and the increase of $140,465,345.90 between the Sixty-second and the Sixty-third Congress.

Here is the fit place to extract a plank from that weather-beaten derelict known as the Baltimore Democratic platform of 1912. It is labeled—

"REPUBLICAN EXTRAVAGANCE."

We denounce the profligate waste of money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

This astonishing declaration tested by the cold, impartial light of two years of recorded performance is worth even less than the single-term curiosity that is reposing, forgotten and unused, in that document. It is a very pertinent inquiry, Where has this one hundred and forty or one hundred and fifty million dollar increase gone in these appropriations?

I might parenthetically remark here, Mr. President, while it is pertinent, that in the estimates of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is found some very edifying material. The ordinary internal-revenue receipts for 1916 are estimated at a little short of $300,000,000; the estimated receipts from corporation and individual income taxes are estimated at about $90,000,000.

I have been looking over the pay roll in the department, and I find that it costs the salaries of nearly as many employees in the corporation and individual income-tax department to collect $90,000,000 as it does in the ordinary internal-revenue receipts department to collect nearly $300,000,000. In the ordinary internal-revenue receipts department the employees are 276 in number; in the estimates of the money that will be provided by an indulgent Congress for the employees required to collect $90,000,000 of corporation and individual income-tax receipts it will take 254 employees, within 22 of as many as are required to collect $300,000,000; and here is the first visible fruit of that economy and simplicity so essential to a Democratic government.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do for a question, but I do not want to lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois yields for a question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not examined the record with a view of ascertaining how many men are employed in connection with the collection of the income tax. I think when the present tariff law was passed we did make provision for an additional force to collect the individual income tax which that act imposed. My recollection is that the number of officials provided for was less than a hundred in the office and field force. I am not quite definite about that; but less than a hundred is my recollection. Of course, there were already a number of officials in the department who were employed in the collection of the corporation tax. Their service began under the old administration, because the corporation tax was imposed before the beginning of the present administration and before the passage of the tariff act of 1913. I am not prepared to say further than that about it, but my recollection is that it was 84, less than a hundred, that we added to the income-tax force. I do not think that that is an excessive number.

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Utah has looked it up. Does the Senator from Utah have the exact number?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I was looking at the law itself. The law itself does not provide any number, but in the appropriation bill——

Mr. SIMMONS. There was an estimate submitted for the general appropriation bill, and I think the appropriation was about $290,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator that the appropriation bill provided perhaps for the number of which the Senator speaks to take care of the first two months of the work, but I will say to the Senator that since that time there have been a great many employees added to the number provided for originally by the appropriation bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I would not say a great number, but I think the appropriation bill did make some addition. Those men also had to look after collections under the emergency act after it went into effect.

Mr. GALLINGER. And outside of the civil service.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. But that was the estimate at that time. Others were added, especially the passage of the emergency act. As to the number employed in connection with the corporation tax, I do not know; I have no information about that, but I presume the Senator has looked that up. What I wanted to ask the Senator is this—because it bears upon the question of whether the cost for the collection of this tax is excessive—what is the percentage cost of collecting the income tax?

I ask the Senator that question because my impression is, as a result of a conversation I had some time ago with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that this tax has been collected at a relatively small percentage of cost to the Government. I do not mean by that to say that it has been collected at the same percentage of cost that our internal-revenue taxes are collected, and I think if the Senator will consider the difference in character between the two kinds of taxes he will see that it is not reasonable to suppose that it could be collected at as low a cost as these taxes, certainly not when we consider the many difficulties we have had in getting taxpayers to make proper assessments and returns, making it necessary and wise for the department to put a large force of men in the field for the purpose of checking up and correcting improper assessments and seeing that incomes are properly listed. I think I recall reading in a report of the Secretary of the Treasury a statement that so many of the returns showed upon their face circumstances of such suspicion that it was felt necessary to detail the full available force to this work of examination and investigation; and as a result the amount added to the assessments against the individuls investigated, being only a small per cent of those who have been set apart to be investigated, runs away up into the millions of dollars. I think the statement was to the effect that several hundred thousand such cases were yet to be investigated, but that the department did not have sufficient force in order to make the investigation within reasonable time.

I am stating these facts to impress my thought upon the Senator's mind that, of course, he could not properly compare the cost of collecting this tax during the first year of the operation of this new law with the cost of collecting the internal revenue, which is an old system, well established.

One internal-revenue office in my State, in the town of Winston-Salem—where there is but one deputy and two clerks, all of whom together do not receive over $5,000 compensation—collects something about $600,000 a month of internal revenue, largely, almost entirely, in stamp taxes upon tobacco, the cost being small. This is merely a random illustration. We collect our internal revenue at a very small percentage, I think, somewhere about one and a half per cent; not over that. I am not pretending to speak accurately, because I do not carry the figures in my mind. Again I ask the Senator if he has any information he can give the Senate showing the percentage cost of the collection of the personal-income tax?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think so. Mr. President, the inquiry is certainly a proper one. The beginning of the collection of the income and the present corporation tax found preceding it the old corporation tax, imposed under a different act. There were considerable data and some trained force in the Internal-Revenue Department for the collection of the corporation tax. When the change came this force was transferred in the department and in the several internal-revenue districts of the United States to the present line of service.

The first year under the act of 1913, the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, there was collected, as the Senator will remember, a total of some $58,000,000—that was for a fractional year, it ought fairly to be stated, and not for an entire year—of income tax from both corporations and individuals. That was not for a full year, as I stated; but a portion of the employees from the old corporation-income tax were transferred to that service. They were not novices in the business. Neither was the collection of the corporation tax a novel source of revenue, nor was it an unusual method of collecting revenue. We had had some experience in collecting revenues from the different corporations subject to tax throughout the country. Therefore, in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, we had the first of the full years of the internal-revenue receipts from corporation and individual income taxes.

I think the Senator will find, by referring to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that it cost $1.64 per thousand to collect for the last fiscal year as compared with $1.52 for the preceding year. There has been, according to my recollection, an increase in the cost. That is for the general revenue receipts of the department of which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is the head. In other words, the cost is increasing.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois further yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMMONS. I simply desire to ask the Senator please to repeat that figure. Some one interrupted me, and I did not catch it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will do so. I stated that for this fiscal year the cost of collection was $1.64 per thousand, as compared with a cost for the preceding fiscal year of $1.52. I am quoting now from memory. It is a matter which I had not intended to take the time of the Senate to discuss. What it costs to collect the individual income tax and the corporation income tax when segregated from the entire internal-revenue receipts I can not now tell the Senator. The figures are readily accessible. I am only referring to the corporation tax that was formerly levied, for the purpose of showing that there was a trained force that was transferred at that time to the present force, and numerous additions have been made.

The total receipts by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from fermented spirits, distilled liquors, tobaccos, and the like, and from various other sources, such as oleomargarine, together with the income from corporations and individual income-tax receipts, have made up the total receipts. Then I separate the pay roll necessary to collect these receipts. The pay roll in the ordinary internal-revenue receipts of the department aggregates 276 persons. The pay roll in the corporation and individual income-tax receipts aggregates 254 persons—22 more in the department that collects nearly three hundred millions of revenue, estimated receipts, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916; only 22 more employees to collect this entire sum than are found in the collection of the corporation and individual income-tax receipts estimated at $90,000,000, with a total of 254 employees. These are the figures as I have compiled them from accessible reports and estimates up to this time.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that instead of costing more to collect income tax and corporation tax, it ought to cost less.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois further yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator does not understand me as asserting that the force that is now employed for the collection of the corporation tax is inadequate. I think that force is entirely adequate. I do not think that force has been increased, however, under this administration. I think the only increase has been with reference to the personal tax. Although we have increased somewhat the corporation tax, I do not think we have increased at all the expense of collecting that tax.

Does the Senator insist that after his segregation of the force assigned to collect the personal income tax from that engaged in collecting the corporation tax, the rate paid and the force employed in collecting the income tax is excessive as compared with that employed and the amount paid out by the Government in the collection of the corporation tax?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then does the Senator insist that the cost of collecting the additional income taxes—that is to say, the personal income taxes—provided for in the present tariff law is greater per dollar collected than the cost of collecting the corporation tax under the old law which originally imposed that tax? Has the Senator investigated that matter?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know, when you segregate the individual income tax from the corporation tax and compare the corporation tax for the last fiscal year with the preceding year before the act of 1913, whether there is an excess of charges or not. I have not the figures before me.

Mr. SIMMONS. The point I am trying to get the Senator to consider is this: I think the Senator is going far afield when he undertakes to institute a comparison between the cost of collecting the income tax and the cost of collecting the general internal-revenue taxes on tobacco and on whisky in the main. Using again the illustration that I made from my own State, there is a tax of about $600,000—I do not remember the exact amount—collected per month in a little office, where they have three poorly paid men, the total cost being less than $5,000. That is a mere illustration of the manner of collecting and the small cost attached to the collection of a large part of our internal-revenue taxation throughout the country.

In some districts there are immense whisky distilleries. The tax is paid from one office. The stamps are sold, and they are put on. It takes only a very few officers in order to perform that duty. In the case of tobacco, the production of which is rather concentrated at a few points, immense sums of money are collected in one small office.

The Senator can not in fairness compare the cost of collecting money under that service with the cost of collecting money under the income-tax provision. It is wholly different. Take my illustration again. In one office in my State that much money is collected by three men in one month; and yet we do not collect from the whole State of North Carolina a quarter of a million dollars of income tax. Still, unless we had a considerable force in that State traveling about looking after the Government's interests, we probably would not collect anything like that amount. The very process, the very nature of the thing, requires more expense.

I say you can not compare the cost of collecting the income tax, either corporate or personal, with the cost of collecting the internal-revenue tax. The only proper comparison is the cost of collecting the additional income tax provided in the new tariff law with the cost of collecting the old corporation tax under the old law. If the Senator had those figures, they would throw some light upon the matter.

So far as I am concerned, there are no partisan considerations governing my position in this matter. I have interrupted the Senator, and I am saying this because I think, first, his comparison is unjust, and because the Secretary of the Treasury, in his report that I now have before me, tries to impress upon the Congress the necessity of an increase in the force in order more perfectly and efficiently to collect the income tax. If the Senator will pardon me, I should like to read in this connection, in justice to the department, what the Secretary says in recommending that this force should be increased rather than diminished.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection. I should like to have it in the RECORD.

Mr. SIMMONS. After recommending the increase he says:

It is absolutely certain that the Government is losing, through inaccurate returns and evasions of the law, a sum many times greater than the cost of the necessary field force to investigate and check the returns and to bring to account those who are failing to make returns as required by law.

Let us consider the matter of checking the returns: The total number of personal returns for income tax for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, was 357,515. The total number of corporation returns for the same year was 338,860. Of these returns the preliminary examination in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has shown that 5 per cent of the individual returns and 15 per cent of the corporation returns reveal on their face that they require an investigation. Even this small percentage of the returns is largely in excess of the number the available field force now authorized will be able to examine.

For the fiscal year 1915 there was a total of 295,723 personal and corporation income-tax returns to be examined, and with the present force of 274 field officers, making examinations at the same average rate as experience has shown that they are able to go, it will require three and a half years for this force to complete the examination of the transcripts that will be sent to the agents for examination in the present fiscal year. With the accumulations of succeeding years this force, unless greatly enlarged, will be unable to keep up with the essential work that must be done if we are to effectively administer the income-tax law.

Now, let me show the result of these examinations.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has informed me that taking the total number of agents' reports of examinations of personal returns for the months of June, July, August, and September, 1915, as a basis for calculation, 63 per cent of the returns examined showed that an additional average tax of $150.07 was due the Government on each return. On this basis the 31,101 returns yet to be examined would produce $4,667,327 additional tax.

Taking the total number of agents' reports of examinations of corporation returns for the months of June, July, August, and September, 1915, as a basis for calculation, 63 per cent of the returns examined showed that an additional average tax of $78.95 was due the Government on each return. On this basis the 264,622 returns yet to be examined should produce $20,891,906.90.

So these men are confronted with a situation with reference to the returns growing out of the disposition of people to escape this tax which makes it necessary, if the Government is to be protected in its revenues, that there should be a big force always in the field.

Mr. SHERMAN. That illustrates the peculiar method of raising revenue which is favored by this administration. Ordinarily from 50 to 52 per cent would be raised by customs.

Mr. SIMMONS. Most of that, if the Senator will pardon me, was with reference to a method employed by the other party before we came in and which we simply adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was for the corporation tax?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. The method of collecting the income tax under the act prior to 1913 is admitted by the course of argument and the figures cited by the Senator to be more expensive than the ordinary internal-revenue collection. I can read from the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a great many details showing the difficulties of collecting the tax on oleomargarine. It is as difficult to prevent moonshining as it is to keep track of the different corporations and the different individuals subject to tax.

The oleomargarine man thinks he has about as much right to make a substitute for butter and color it without paying the Federal tax as the man who raises corn down some convenient ravine near a brook thinks he has a right to distill whisky out of the grain that he raises. So that makes trouble, and it requires expenditures to run down the offender. In all the large centers of population where oleomargarine is manufactured you will find inspector on inspector and deputy piled upon deputy attempting to collect this tax so that none shall escape. With fermented and distilled liquor there is the same difficulty; it is difficult to compel everybody to pay the tax. The liquor-dealers tax is not collected without a large force of traveling deputies. I see no particular reason why the corporation-income tax or the individual-income tax is more difficult of collection than the ordinary liquor dealer's tax. Constant vigilance is required. Every term of every Federal district court has constantly upon its docket men charged with selling liquor without a license. In the common parlance the boot-legger cases occupy a considerable space of every docket at every term of court in the various districts of the United States. It is a difficult tax to collect. It is equally as difficult as the individual income or the corporation income tax. Upon the merits of the question there is no more reason why more employees are required to collect an income tax than there is a liquor dealer's tax. The figures read from the report and the argument made by the Senator prove nothing except the inherent difficulty of collecting a tax which is a favorite source of revenue in the bill which he successfully managed on the floor of the Senate in 1913. I am reminded of a quotation:

> In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt
> But being season'd with a gracious voice
> Obscures the show of evil?

I always like to hear the Senator from North Carolina talk. He is comprehensive in his generalizations but somewhat mistaken in detail; and mathematics, unlike politics, is an exact science, Mr. President. I do not myself think there is any justification to be found in the pay rolls of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of 254 men in one department and 276 in another. Even if it be admitted that it is only by inquisitorial processes, only by the rack and thumbscrew that you can get money out of anybody who has an income in this country under a Democratic tariff act and administration; if that be admitted, why this very great discrepancy in the amount of revenue collected by ordinary receipts in the department of nearly $200,000,000, with only 276 employees, compared with less than $90,000,000, with 254 employees? The matter is not satisfactorily accounted for among the killed, wounded, and missing, to adopt a phrase used by the commander after the casualties.

I now refer to the plank in the platform, Mr. President, from which I was temporarily diverted, but to which I return with considerable pleasure. This astonishing declaration tested by the cold, impartial light of two years of recorded performance is worth even less than the single-term curiosity that is reposing, forgotten and unusued, in that document. It is a very pertinent inquiry, Where has this one hundred and forty or one hundred and fifty million dollar increase gone in these appropriations?

It is pertinent to remark here that the letter of the Chief Executive, dated the 5th day of February, 1913, on the single-term question seems to dispose of another plank in that platform.

Now, with this increase in appropriations of between one hundred and forty and one hundred and fifty million dollars, what have we to show for it? Increased pay rolls, new offices, additional expenditures, more items added to every bill that has come in for more than two years. No unusual strength to the Army and the Navy has found any place in these additional appropriations.

In December, 1913, and since at regular intervals we have had several Executive messages. In one of them we were admonished by the Chief Magistrate not to be nervous or excited, although war was in progress across the sea, although we had been talking about preparedness for some time, although, if there were any yellow peril in the Orient, it existed long before that time. The land laws of California had been a mooted question. The effect of the treaty on a statute of the State in the holding of land had been raised long before. The article written by the prime minister of Japan and inserted in the RECORD, it is true, had not appeared; but many of the Japanese statesmen had repeated their views of the land question in the different States and especially in the Pacific Coast States. They had said, and had said in many places, that they regarded the denial to their citizens or subjects in this country of the right to hold land as an infraction of the treaty, and if it were not that it was something that concerned the Japanese in a world-wide problem. All of that had happened long before this message came in. Still we were admonished not to be nervous or excited.

Our neighbors may be killed in Mexico, they may be destroyed by submarines in foreign waters, our peace merchandise by the millions of dollars may be taken when sailing under a neutral flag clearing from a neutral port with a neutral destination, with not an article in the cargo contraband of war, conditional or absolute, peace merchandise in every sense—all that might have happened, and still we are not to be nervous or excited. We are to have that calm equipoise which belongs only to the superior beings who walk unruffled under all emergencies.

Now comes preparedness, and in the wake of preparedness always walks the taxgatherer taking his toll. I shall differ from my Democratic brethren on the sources of revenue or the methods of collecting it. I shall not, perhaps, very materially differ from many of them on the question of adequate preparation. But in all these appropriations, Mr. President, which have been added there has been no great increase for that object. I remember only a few years ago when the House, controlled by the majority party, opposed the building of battleships, opposed the increase of the Navy, opposed coast fortifications, opposed even the lighthouses on the coast to safeguard the hardy mariner from the perils of the sea. I can remember all that. Now, suddenly the chief becomes nervous and excited, and preparation on every hand is the note to be struck.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator makes the statement that he will probably not differ very materially from a good many other Senators on the question of preparedness, adequate preparedness. I should like to ask the Senator what he regards as adequate preparedness, confining his answer to the Army.

Mr. SHERMAN. An Army of 200,000 regular soldiers.

Mr. WORKS. Does the Senator think that 200,000 soldiers would be adequate to defend the Pacific coast alone if we are going to prepare for actual war?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not on a war basis. Two hundred thousand, however, in time of peace, together with an adequate number of officers, would meet the requirements of a regular army.

Mr. WORKS. I am very glad to have the Senator's idea about what constitutes adequate preparedness.

Mr. SHERMAN. I may add, in order that I may not appear to be presumptuous, that my opinion is second handed. It is based upon gentlemen whom I regard as military experts. I realize that I am not a military or a naval expert either, and I shall take very largely the judgment of those who are. The men who in the event of defensive warfare would be required to use this instrument at the risk of their lives, and who would be required to prepare and execute a successful defense, and whose life training is in that line, I would be disposed to trust with preparation for such a crisis.

EFFORTS OF THE MINORITY.

Implied criticism, at least, was made not long ago of the minority in the Senate and in the House because we have not raised our voice in protest against these appropriations. When we have done so it is only to be defeated by a party vote, if a roll call were ever reached. The river and harbor bill was not long ago under discussion in this body. I was temporarily absent in 1914, engaged myself in a course of preparedness for defensive warfare. I was not here at that time to engage in that public duty. I thought it was more important to the people of my State that I should continue to represent them than even to respond to the duties of legislation.

I can remember that the river and harbor bill was defeated by an alleged reprehensible practice, something that has been under criticism since then. Many distinguished gentlemen who can write essays of magnificence and power to be published in various periodicals have told us what a reactionary body the Senate is. Some of the Members have gone so far as to say that the only thing that can rejuvenate this body and make it a fit representative of a free people is cloture. King Caucus will still stalk through the corridors of the Capitol, executive influence will dispense patronage with its insidious wiles and will continue to persuade gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber as of old, but cloture must be applied in order that the people may rule. What would have happened to the river and harbor bill, that is by courtesy and sometimes affectionately called a "pork-barrel" bill, if cloture had been the parliamentary rule of the Senate at that time?

The river and harbor bill, Mr. President, was defeated. It was inexcusable in its extravagant sums. It was defeated in this Chamber by the determined opposition of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] with the then senior Senator from Ohio, Mr. Burton. It was called in vulgar parlance a filibuster, but it successfully filibustered more than $30,000,000 out of the bill. You ought to rise on that side of the Chamber and call us blessed, instead of indulging in criticism, because we saved the deficit from being greater than it is. The gentlemen who are of my political affiliation on this side were doing picket duty, and saved the Treasury to the degree of $30,000,000.

Only last winter there came from the Chief Executive advice and from the majority party, acting in caucus, a bill. I know it is disclaimed that there is any such thing as a caucus, Mr. President. It has been criticized like the open forum in the Senate. Many gentlemen wrote against it. Few of them ever ran for office. It is a characteristic of some of the most prominent critics in the country that their chief function is to criticize people who do run for office and are sometimes successful in being elected. They then become a shining mark for the critics. The critic had, or thought he had, his way. He destroyed the caucus, and instead of the caucus we have now what is called more euphoniously a conference. Down beneath the sturdy vest of a conference beats the still sturdier heart of King Caucus, as of old. There is not any change in it except by name, and a rose by any other name would still possess the same flavor. It is the result, not the name, after all.

So out of that caucus came a Government shipping bill. Forty million dollars for the initial expenditures was contemplated. It is a good deal when the Treasury is depleted. It was presented and urged for passage in this body after passing the House. It was supported by the administration and by the caucus action of the majority. It was defeated in this body by the minority Senators, joined by a few of the majority, who declined to commit themselves or be committed by the administration to the unwise policy embodied in the measure. Over $100,000,000 additional appropriation would have been taken from the Treasury if the minority side of the Chamber had not protested.

The President told us not very many months ago, when he was out in Indianapolis, just a year ago the 8th day of this month, on Jackson Day, that he was perfectly willing for us to talk as long as we did not hurt anybody. When the minority talked against the appropriations he criticized it and wishes a gag law in the Senate. We talked last winter and talked successfully.

When the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] implies that we assisted by our votes in such attempted appropriations he is in error. We accept the responsibility of defeating the legislation referred to or helping defeat it. Let it be remembered that when our voices were raised upon a roll call it was ineffective. The only way in which the shipping bill and the river and harbor bill could be beaten was by the much-condemned employment of a filibuster. I am always frank enough to say that it was a filibuster, intended as such, and for no reason under the sun except to defeat the legislation by mere lapse of time.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have just come into the Chamber. I do not think the Senator from Illinois means to say that the Senator from Alabama said that no Republican voice was raised against the appropriation in connection with the shipping bill. The Senator does not mean, I say, that the Senator from Alabama singled out that bill and said you did not protest against it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; only you will find, by consulting the RECORD, that it was suggested if we by our votes assisted in enacting laws for the expenditure of money we were responsible. The intimation seemed to be we had helped the administration into its present troubles.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not hear all the Senator from Alabama said in his forceful and illuminating speech.

Mr. SHERMAN. I both heard it and read it. It invited perusal and examination.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am sure he did not say that, because the Senator will recall the fact that the shipping bill provided for issuing Panama Canal bonds for the purpose of building or purchasing ships under it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The substance of the impression was that the minority was responsible and that we were estopped from complaining about extravagant appropriations.

Mr. SIMMONS. I called attention only to one specific thing. I do not remember the declaration of the Senator from Alabama. Certainly the shipping bill could not have been included in the meaning of anything he said on that subject, because the bill did not appropriate money. It proposed to issue bonds.

The Senator, in claiming that the Republican Party is entitled to the credit, as he put it a little while ago, of the defeat of the river and harbor bill, is, I think, far afield from the facts. It is true, as the Senator says, that that measure was filibustered to death by the activities, largely, of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and the then Senator from Ohio, Mr. Burton, and a few others. But outside of a few Republican Senators and probably a few Democratic Senators, if we had come to a vote upon that bill, my understanding is that it would have received a majority of the votes of the Senators on the other side of the Chamber. I recall the fact that during the consideration of that measure, after the filibuster had continued for some time, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], recognized as one of the leaders on the other side of the Chamber, rose in his seat and expressed the earnest and sincere hope that the effort to defeat the bill would not succeed, and he pledged assistance from the other side of the Chamber in the passage of the bill.

Of course, I can not tell, and no one ever can tell how many Republicans would have supported that bill if we had taken the vote, but from my knowledge of the Senators on the other side—and I had something to do with that bill, I was on the Committee on Commerce which reported the bill, and anxious for its passage, and was in constant conference with Senators on both sides of the Chamber—it was my belief that a large majority of the Senators on the other side, probably as large a majority of the Senators on the other side as on this side of the Chamber—no, I will not say that, but a large majority of Senators on the other side, in my judgment, were in favor of that bill. The Republican Party, therefore, are not entitled to the credit, if there is any credit due to anybody, for its defeat. I do not think there is any credit due to anybody for its defeat, but if there is, certainly it is not due to the Republican Party, but to a few members of that party who prevented it from coming to a vote by filibustering.

Mr. SHERMAN. At any rate, Mr. President, the bill in question came out with a favorable committee report and it reached in the Senate the parliamentary stage of legislation where nothing but a roll call intervened between it and the Treasury. At that point it hit the obstacles that finally led to its undoing, and as I understand, if I am correct in my reading of the RECORD, finally, at the end of a prolonged discussion, it was agreed between the friends of the bill and those opposed to it that something like thirty or thirty-three million dollars should be cut off, and it went through finally for $20,000,000 instead of the original amount of $53,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is right in saying that a compromise bill was passed; but the Senator has just referred to the fact that there was a report upon the bill. Of course there was, as there is a report on every appropriation bill that comes to the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Was it a favorable report?

Mr. SIMMONS. That is exactly what I was going to say. There was a report from the Committee on Commerce upon that bill, and I think, if the Senator will get the report and read it, he will find that it was a unanimously favorable report. That committee was composed of Democrats and Republicans; I think there was a Democratic majority of only two; among the Republican Members were some of the leading Senators on that side of the Chamber. That bill came out of the committee without a dissenting vote, so far as I now recall.

Mr. SHERMAN. At any rate, it came out, and whatever may have been the conditions when it was in the committee, it emerged from the committee and got into trouble, which ultimately lost the greater part of the appropriation. It is a matter of record that Senators on the minority side of the Chamber successfully raised their voices, even if they were joined by those on the majority side of the Chamber. It is a part of the credit to which minority Senators are entitled for blocking that much of the appropriation.

It is worthy of note here, Mr. President, that if a Senate cloture rule had been in force at that time there would have been something over $30,000,000 additional in the river and harbor bill, burdening the Treasury at this time, requiring either a bond issue of $40,000,000 under the authority to issue Panama Canal bonds, or there would have been that appropriation out of the current receipts of the Treasury. I do not go on the idea that because we issue bonds we thereby never have anything to pay. The misfortune is when I have signed anything or issued any obligation of mine, that pay day always arrives. I never in my life had a check lost; I never signed a promissory note that it did not turn up in some quarter of the globe demanding payment. If we issue bonds we only defer the day of payment, and at some time the taxpayers, at some time the Treasury, is called on to meet the bond when it matures. So it does not make any difference whether it be a bond issue or whether it be paid out of current receipts, it still calls upon the taxing resources of the country to meet it.

I think, in view of these authenticated records, that instead of the censorious shifting of responsibility it ought to be acknowledged that a minority saved the country from further financial ills you sought to inflict on it.

NATIONAL RECEIPTS.

No war disturbed the world in our fiscal year 1914. It was for import and revenue purposes a peace year for us. When war came in August it was unexpected in every market and exchange in this country. The German Army crossed the Belgian frontier on the 3d day of August, 1914. Before that time imports and exports had pursued the usual channels of peaceful merchandise. Imports increased nearly $81,000,000 over the preceding year of 1913. Democratic tariff rates, however, produced but $237,320,015. The universal excuse for the present condition of Government finances is the decrease of imports and consequent loss of customs for the fiscal year of 1915. If the entire receipts of the Government for the year 1915 be assembled for purposes of comparison with 1914 it will shed light on Democratic finances.

Customs receipts	$209,786,672.21
Internal revenue, ordinary	283,398,760.85
Corporation income tax	39,155,596.77
Individual income tax	41,046,162.09
Land sales	2,167,136.47
Miscellaneous	70,287,372.99
Total	697,910,827.58

The foregoing includes the total receipts of the Government except that from postal savings bonds, bank-note redemption fund, and postal revenues—being $933,540, $21,553,415, and $287,248,165.27, respectively—and are not material in the analysis of the revenue-producing quality of the 1913 tariff act.

The customs receipts of 1915 are the lowest since 1899. Our total imports in 1899 were $697,148,489, as against imports in 1915 of $1,674,169,740. In 1899, 56.93 per cent of our imports were dutiable, as against 38.30 per cent in 1915. Customs receipts in 1899 were $206,128,482. With less than 42 per cent of the imports of 1915 there was collected within $3,658,190 of customs in 1899 as in 1915 with nearly two and one-half times the imports in 1915 as in 1899.

It is instructive to marshal the customs receipts alone of the peace year of 1914 with the internal revenue, corporation and income tax, and other receipts of 1915, excluding the customs receipts of the latter year. The customs receipts from July 1, 1913, to June 30, 1914, excluding $55,000,000 derived from Republican rates in excess of that produced by Democratic rates and $3,800,000 surplus postal revenues, are $237,320,015; ordinary internal revenue, 1915, $283,398,760.85; corporation income tax, 1915, $39,155,596.77; individual income tax, 1915, $41,046,162.09; emergency revenue act, October 22, 1914, $52,069,126.29. Total, $652,989,661. If the emergency revenue receipts be deducted from the total of the last table, it would leave $600,920,534.71. This omits miscellaneous receipts, land sales, and items of receipts not directly affected by tariff legislation. It is apparent from the foregoing that if the revenue from customs receipts in the peace year of 1914 were added to the ordinary internal-revenue receipts, corporation-income tax, and individual-income tax of 1915, it would still fall far short of enough to meet the expenses of the Government. This deficit was sought to be filled by the emergency tax of October 22, 1914. It, too, proved inadequate to stay the dwindling revenues. This demonstrates conclusively that if the world were at peace Democratic finances would inevitably empty the Treasury. Coupled with the foregoing decrease in revenues is the tremendous increase in appropriations of the Sixty-third Congress over the last Congress controlled by Republicans already alluded to.

The decrease in tariff rates is directly responsible for inadequate revenues. It is capable of proof. There was collected from customs in 1915, $209,786,672.21. This, compared with the customs receipts of 1914 of $292,320,015, shows a loss of customs of $82,533,342. This is habitually charged to the reduced imports resulting from the European war. The revenue-producing power of the Democratic tariff act of 1913 is capable of proof to demonstrate this fallacy.

The total dutiable imports of the war year of 1915 are $640,643,065. It must be borne in mind that the remainder of the $1,674,000,000 for this year passed through our customhouses duty free. The dutiable imports, therefore, raised the whole of the $209,268,109 customs receipts. This is an average ad valorem of 32.66 per cent. The dutiable imports of the peace year of 1914 were $766,422,958. If the average ad valorem 32.66 per cent rate of duty were applied to the total dutiable imports of the peace year of 1914, it would produce in customs duties $250,313,738.08. This would be the most favorable condition under which these normal revenues would be produced, making total ordinary receipts of 1915, excluding emergency tax:

Customs receipts	$250,313,738.08
Ordinary internal revenue, 1915	283,398,760.85
Corporation income tax, 1915	39,155,596.77
Individual income tax	41,046,162.09
Sales, public land	2,167,136.47
Miscellaneous	70,287,372.99
Total ordinary income, including what would have been derived from the dutiable imports of 1914 on the 1915 rates of customs	686,368,767.16

Government expenses in 1915 are:

Civil establishment	$207,169,824.05
War Department	172,973,091.73
Naval Establishment	141,835,653.98
Indian Service	21,130,350.70
Pensions	164,387,941.61
Interest, public debt	22,902,897.04
Panama Canal disbursement	29,187,042.22
Bank-note redemptions	17,205,958.00
Miscellaneous redemptions	47,533.00
Making a total disbursement, exclusive of Post Office Department	777,840,292.33
Leaving an excess of disbursements over receipts of	91,471,525.17

The estimates of the revenues of 1915 omit the emergency tax of October 22, 1914. Receipts under this act were, in 1915, $52,069,126.29; which, deducted, still leaves a deficit of $39,420,398.88.

The foregoing tables show that the tariff act of 1913 would not under peaceable conditions, even supported by the emergency revenue act, have supplied enough funds to meet the appropriations of the Democratic Congress. The responsible authors of the Democratic tariff revision avowed that its rates were deliberately framed to decrease customs receipts. The increased imports of 1914 were a natural result of this act. It is now sought to evade its natural consequences. A comparison of the free imports for periods covering Republican rates and Democratic rates is instructive.

	Per cent.
Year ending June 30, 1911, imports free of duty	50.87
Year ending June 30, 1914, imports free of duty	59.54
Year ending June 30, 1915, imports free of duty	61.70
Month of July, 1915, imports free of duty	62.53
Month of August, 1915, imports free of duty	63.14
Month of September, 1915, imports free of duty	64.12
Month of October, 1915, imports free of duty	70.91
Average ad valorem duties, 1911	41.22
Average ad valorem duties, 1914	37.60
Average ad valorem duties, 1915	32.66
The average ad valorem rate on free and dutiable imports for the year ending June 30, 1915, was	12.50

This average rate applied to the $270,000,000 estimated customs receipts in 1914 by the House and Senate committees reporting this measure would have required imports of $2,160,000,000 in 1915. To produce the revenues derived from the customs receipts of 1914 it would have required an increase of imports to $2,338,560,000. To have produced these revenues would have created such a flood of imports under normal conditions as would have invaded this market in time of peace, and would have produced the normal results we began to feel before the outbreak of the war.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. What did the Senator say was the increase in the imports during the fiscal year 1915?

Mr. SHERMAN. The increase in imports that year, which I have used here, was reached by taking the estimated revenues from the customs of $270,000,000, and, with that as the basis, taking the average ad valorem rate on dutiable goods.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has misunderstood me. I asked him what he had stated was the increase in the imports from June, 1913, to June, 1914?

Mr. SHERMAN. It was $81,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator says that in order for us to get anything like an adequate revenue from the customs taxes it would require an importation of goods to the amount of $2,100,000,000. I want to ask the Senator how he reconciles that statement with the fact that in the fiscal year from June 30, 1913, to June 30, 1914, there was only an increase of about $81,000,000 in imports into this country in the face of the fact that customs duties collected from those imports in that year were $292,000,000, compared with $318,000,000 collected in the previous year.

Mr. SHERMAN. The figures just quoted are for the year ending June 30, 1914.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I understand they are for the year 1914. With an increase in importations in that year of only $81,000,000 we collected in customs duties $292,000,000, as compared with $318,000,000 collected in the preceding year, when the Payne-Aldrich tariff law was in force.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I can explain that.

Mr. SIMMONS. A difference of just about $28,000,000; that is, with an importation of only $81,000,000 in excess of the previous year we collected within $28,000,000 of the amount of customs revenue collected in that year.

Mr. SHERMAN. First, Mr. President, the $292,000,000 of customs duties in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, were not collected under the act of 1913. The duties collected under that act fall $55,000,000 short of that amount. The Senator is assuming the credit for revenue not collected under the law; he is borrowing the fruits of previous Republican legislation. It is an assumption on the floor here that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, the tariff act of 1913 produced $292,000,000 of revenue.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator makes that point, then we will start at October, 1913, when the present law became effective. From October, 1913, to August 1, 1914, when the war began, we collected under the present tariff law $306,000,000, whereas the revenues from October 1, 1912, to August 1, 1913, were $295,000,000. So that during that period of about 10 months before the war began there was collected under the present law, when it was in full operation, except as to the taxes on wool, over $10,000,000 more than was collected during the preceding year. That statement includes the amount collected under all the provisions of the law, not only from customs duties but under the corporation and individual income-tax provisions.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator quote the customs duties alone in the figures he gives?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not in the last statement, but I did in the first statement.

Mr. SHERMAN. In the latter statement the Senator does not include customs duties alone?

Mr. SIMMONS. Not the customs duties alone, but the customs duties with the amount from the income-tax provisions.

Mr. SHERMAN. The figures for the corporation tax and the individual income tax were included, then, in the last statement?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes. That does not apply so strongly in answer to the argument of the Senator as the results from the operation of the tariff provisions alone of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand.

Mr. SIMMONS. The customs receipts under the present law during the first year of its operation amounted to within $28,000,000 of the receipts from customs duties during the preceding year, when the Payne-Aldrich bill was in force, while the imports increased only $81,000,000 over the previous year.

If the conditions shall ever be as they were before the war, does not the Senator believe, from that showing, that with a reasonable increase in imports—and we contemplated and intended that there should be an increase in imports—the present law will yield enough revenue to respond to the needs of the Government in normal times without any resort to other means of revenue?

Mr. SHERMAN. On the figures the Senator has cited he would have to have at least twice the amount of imports in order to collect the required amount of customs duties, because the average rate is so very greatly reduced that it could only be compensated for by a very large increase in the volume of imports.

Mr. SIMMONS. But the Senator said that we had an increase of $81,000,000 in imports, and yet there was only a falling off of $28,000,000 in the receipts from customs duties.

Mr. SHERMAN. I had not completed the reply. First, Mr. President, the Senator himself voted for the act in 1913, and was entirely consistent in doing so, with the reasons he presented both as chairman of the committee and otherwise. The revenues, according to the figures quoted by the Senator from the report of the Department of Commerce, can be readily accounted for. The duty on sugar for the last four or five years has yielded about $52,000,000 a year, except last year, when it yielded $49,282,113; that is, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915.

During the months the receipts for which were read by the Senator there was an average of $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 every month derived from the duty on sugar. The Senator does not believe in making sugar dutiable. He thinks the ultimate consumer's interests demands that sugar be free listed. The high cost of living was to be thereby reduced.

Since it goes into every home, everybody is interested in having removed the tariff, which is a tax, according to the economic school in which the Senator believes. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, therefore, Mr. President, more than $49,000,000, even under the reduced duties on sugar provided in the act of 1913, were collected from sugar alone. That, too, is another spurious virtue assumed as being incident to the act of 1913. It is borrowed strength; it is a source of revenue that is deliberately filched from Republican legislation. If the Senator would deduct the sugar duties from the receipts he has cited, he would find no such pleasing assurance as he derives from the figures which he has quoted.

The actual imports in 1914 were $1,894,000,000. If imports had increased so as to produce the estimated receipts or the actual receipts in the peace year applied to 1915, our imports would have increased between $400,000,000 and $500,000,000. This immense flood of merchandise which would have entered our markets is what was averted by the war conditions that prevailed in the principal producing and distributing centers of Europe. The industrial depression that existed when the belligerent nations entered our markets for munitions of war was a forerunner of the natural results of the Democratic tariff revision of 1913. The estimates I have given indicate the menace of a 70 per cent free-trade act when peace is concluded.

At some time a treaty of peace will be signed; victor and vanquished will appear; all human events end. There never has been a war waged on earth that at some time did not conclude; and when the present war shall cease, Mr. President, there will be a necessity for economic preparedness here to defend from peril the great manufacturing centers, the great grain-producing areas of the Northwest, and the great live-stock interests of this country, a preparedness second only to that for military and naval defense.

A GROWING DEFICIT.

The competitive tariff for which such a glowing future was predicted in 1913 will resume its operations when the war is over. A Treasury deficit is the least of the sins charged to this measure. I do not believe in times of peace, with from 60 to 70 per cent imports free listed, as they are, it would produce enough customs revenues under existing laws to equal the expenditures of this administration unless supplemented by additional direct taxation.

On July 1, 1914, the world was at peace. Our imports had not been affected by war. It is indisputable, however, that Government revenues had already diminished. Our expenditures had increased steadily under the appropriations of a Democratic Congress. The natural tendency of decreased receipts and increased appropriations was becoming manifest. The general balance in the Treasury June 30, 1913, according to the same reports from which the Senator from North Carolina quotes, was $166,000,000. By June 30, 1915—last summer only—it had fallen to $104,000,000. That, too, in the face of a statement in the House that appropriations have been less than for preceding years, and the statement in this Senate that our receipts have been greater during that time.

In the face of that, the general balance in the Treasury shows a shrinkage of more than $62,000,000. This decrease in the Treasury resources was in spite of the emergency tax of October 22, 1914, intended to supply the additional revenue required. That act produced up to the 30th day of last June $52,000,000, and in the four months since that time about $27,000,000. In the aggregate the actual annual receipts from the emergency tax are about $80,000,000.

Those two sources of revenue—the emergency tax of October, 1914, and the corporation and individual income tax of the act of 1913—make about $132,000,000 of increased revenue; and still, with this increased revenue, the shrinkage in customs duties has been such as to create a shrinkage in the general balance of the Treasury, such as to show each month, as the summary comes out from the Department of Commerce, an excess of expenditures over receipts, except a few months—some two or three, I think—since the 4th day of March, 1913.

Miscellaneous receipts in 1915 were $70,000,000. It runs generally from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000, $58,000,000, and $60,000,000—rarely over $60,000,000. We can not flatter ourselves that miscellaneous receipts will be $70,000,000 unless we sell two more battleships, as we did, the proceeds going into the Treasury in 1915.

NEED OF MORE REVENUE.

Supplemental revenue is still indispensable to the continued solvency of the Treasury. The Republicans believe in increasing receipts from customs by increasing the duties. If that were done, with a readjustment of the income tax, as suggested, by increasing the supertax instead of lowering the exemption to reach the living line, enough revenue would be produced to meet necessary expenses and appropriations for proper military and naval forces sufficient for defensive purposes.

The President in his message estimates that $93,800,000 additional revenue will be required to carry out our military and naval preparations, and he and the department recommend that such additional revenues be produced by new legislation. Bonds are condemned. He sums up the situation in the conclusion that all told about $112,000,000 of new revenue will be required annually, provided all existing sources of revenue now in force shall be retained. That would retain the present duty on sugar of $1. It would retain the emergency revenue tax of something like $79,000,000 or $80,000,000 a year. It would retain every source of revenue that exists at this time.

I favor the duty on sugar. I would vote readily to increase it to $1.35, or even higher, for two reasons: First, I believe the cane-sugar growers are entitled to it. They have had it from time immemorial. I believe the beet-sugar producers are entitled to it. Because of that, if it be made a source of additional revenue, no objection will be heard from those on this side of the Chamber, very likely. I can speak only for myself, however, on that point.

It is to procure this additional revenue that taxes on gasoline, automobiles, bank checks, iron, and steel, and the like, are proposed.

Iron and steel and bank checks and automobiles by the horsepower—to be paid by the manufacturer, it is true—are all to be included in the list. The manufacturer will pass it along until the purchaser finally will pay it. That is the usual course of business. In the emergency act of October, 1914, a tax of 1 cent was imposed on telegraph messages, on telephone messages above 15 cents, on bills of lading, and the like. Who pays it? The carrier does not. The telegraph and telephone company does not. It is paid by the user of the facility for the communication of intelligence or for the transportation of merchandise. It is passed on to the general public.

If necessities are to be taxed, if iron and steel are to be taxed, if everything from a coal hod to a locomotive is to be taxed, I wish the President would get his horizon high enough to suggest a tax of about 50 cents a bale on cotton. That would produce seven or eight million dollars. The annual crop is about 14,000,000 bales. Of course, that would be passed on to the ultimate consumer, too, like everything else, but it is no worse in the one case than it is in the other.

The evident purpose, though, in all this taxation, is to levy a greater part of the burden upon a certain part of the country. I should like to have the populous States understand—populous in point of people and great in resources of banking, manufacturing, and transportation lines, agriculture and live stock—that those States are now paying three-fourths of the burden of supporting the Government; and the method proposed in the President's message increases this injustice.

If the tariff be regarded as a tax, as some gentlemen argue, it ought to have diminished the cost of living when a 70 per cent free-trade list became operative. No greater delusion ever seized upon the human mind. It is refuted by the figures of a hundred years. It is refuted by the figures of the last four years, especially since 1913. When sugar was reduced there was no material change in the price. There was a temporary reduction for two months of the summer of 1914, and after that a rise that has continued up to the present time. Nobody, outside of the solidly Democratic States and the authors of books gone mad with excessive and undigested learning, ever believed in the soundness of such a theory applied in the actual affairs of government.

NEW PROPOSITIONS.

In addition to this $112,000,000 of new revenue, other appropriations are threatened. We learn from the head of the administration here that another shipping bill is to be urged upon the Sixty-fourth Congress at this and subsequent sessions. The Government, it is insisted, must undertake this task, with the consequent financial risk; and after it is well on its feet as a going concern the Government is to retire and turn it over to private enterprise.

For my part, while I come from a western country where there is not much sentiment for subsidies, you may call it what you will, but I would rather at any time vote for liberal contracts for carrying the mails overseas in American registered, sailed, and operated ships, in order to recreate merchant shipping, than embark upon the scheme of Government ownership and operation. The continually recurring reports that our expenditures exceed our receipts are ominous.

There is a treaty pending before this body that sometime we may be asked to ratify. It proposes to pay Colombia $25,000,000 to repair her lost chance to loot the United States and delay the construction of the canal. Another treaty contemplates spending $3,000,000 on a Nicaragua canal route that will have more navigation and fewer slides than the one we have. I have noted the somewhat aggressive and determined spirit among the friends of river and harbor appropriations in this Congress. The sum to be appropriated is uncertain, but I am sure considerable vigilance will be required to keep it within proper bounds. The Government will be called upon to provide for the development of good roads throughout the country. Bills have made their appearance appropriating different sums for that purpose. We have undertaken to build a railroad in Alaska. The initial appropriation is a constantly recurring charge on the Treasury until the road shall have been completed or the appropriation exhausted.

The Navy Department is asking for additional sums mentioned in the President's annual message, as well as the War Department. These estimates are the basis of appropriations. It is especially significant now, when our revenues are constantly decreasing, that such large sums are under consideration. It indicates that the utmost economy is required; that the economy plank of the platform of 1912, adopted at Baltimore, must not be an idle declaration, but it must be made effective if we are to have money enough to meet the charges necessary for military and naval preparation.

Direct taxes are resorted to. That is necessary where customs duties are abandoned as the principal source of revenue.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

It ought not to be forgotten in this financial discussion that the Panama Canal was built under the revenues and financial legislation of preceding years and not that of 1913. A comparatively small bond issue was made under legislation that authorized a total of $375,000,000. The greater part of the canal expense was defrayed from current revenues produced under a protective tariff. Customs duties constituted, under that legislation, one-half of our total receipts. At the close of the year ending June 30, 1916, after all the appropriations for the canal shall have been paid, this Government will have expended more than $402,000,000 in its construction. Of this total cost $66,000,000 has been expended under appropriations since this administration came into power, paid out of the current receipts of the Treasury. If $66,000,000 be deducted for the years 1914, 1915, and 1916, there remains a total of $336,000,000 paid during during previous years.

The total proceeds of bonds sold was $138,000,000. Nearly $200,000,000 remains as the sum paid out of the Treasury, supplied by the fiscal legislation of the party in power before March 4, 1913. Nearly $200,000,000 paid out of current receipts for the construction of the canal is the record of the revenue-producing qualities of the laws that preceded the tariff revision of 1913. If the proportional part of this nearly $200,000,000 burden during this administration had fallen upon its dwindling resources, it would have made a much more striking exhibit of its financial failure.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMMONS. It just occurred to me to ask the Senator, if the facts are as he states them, why it was necessary for his party to issue any of these bonds for the purpose of paying for the construction of the Panama Canal. I believe that the only bonds that have ever been issued under that act have been issued by the Republican Party during the administrations of President Roosevelt and President Taft; and I believe the total amount of those bonds issued during these Republican administrations was $138,000,000.

If the ordinary revenues under those administrations and during the years when these bonds were issued were sufficient and more than sufficient to meet the current expenses of the Government, and left the big surpluses in the Treasury which the Senator is talking about, why did they issue those bonds, a part of them during Taft's administration and a part of them during Roosevelt's administration?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have just stated, as the Senator will recall, if he has been following the course of the figures, that nearly $200,000,000 have already been paid out of current receipts in previous years—that is, prior to 1914, 1915, and 1916—nearly $200,000,000 during the revenue-producing period of the fiscal legislation of Republican administrations. One hundred and thirty-eight million dollars have been derived from bond issues. If the nearly $200,000,000 of current receipts paid out on this account had been added to the $138,000,000, it would have been burdening—to use the language of some of our Democratic friends—the present generation to pay the entire cost of this great improvement. The present generation paid $200,000,000. If $200,000,000, or the proportional part of it, had been paid out of the receipts of this administration, there would have been a gathering of the clans that has not been equaled since the 4th of March, 1913, because there would be not only a deficit but a public indebtedness, or the construction work on the canal would have stopped. The $138,000,000 of bonds was issued that future generations of taxpayers might pay their just share.

Mr. SIMMONS. But I will ask the Senator if that was the reason why they issued only $138,000,000 of bonds? Why did they not, by the same token, issue bonds for the Panama expenditures during these administrations?

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, if you had done that, does not the Senator know——

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I want to ask the Senator if he does not know the fact that when these bonds were issued there was a shortage in the current funds to pay current expenditures?

Does the Senator mean to tell the Senate and the country seriously that the $138,000,000 of bonds which his party issued for the construction of the Panama Canal was deliberately issued for the sole and exclusive purpose of passing that burden on to future generations and not because of the condition of the Treasury?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; that was not the sole purpose.

Mr. SIMMONS. And that after his party had followed that course for some little time it suddenly changed its mind and concluded that it would no longer put this burden upon future generations, but would pay it out of the current revenues of the Government?

Mr. SHERMAN. That was not the sole reason, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator says that his party, in addition to the amount derived from these bonds, paid $223,000,000 toward the construction of the canal. That was not a very large sum per annum, if we consider the number of years that that great work was under construction during the administrations of his party. The Democrats have been in power about three years, and we have paid every dollar of that expense—I do not remember the exact figures now, but something like $30,000,000 per annum—out of the current revenues. Up to this time we have not issued a single bond for that purpose.

The question which I want to get the Senator to answer is this: Does he mean to tell the country that these $138,000,000 of bonds were issued by his party, not because of a deficit in the Treasury, not because of the condition of the finances of the Government, but for the purpose of passing this burden on to future generations? That is what I understood him to say.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was not the sole motive.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought it was an inadvertent statement when I heard the Senator make it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The statement was not inadvertent but was unfinished when the Senator asked his question. The Republican Party is a party of long experience and great foresight, Mr. President. It was not born yesterday; and, notwithstanding the mutations of fortune, it will survive, in my judgment, for many years. Pursuant to that foresight it not only had the motive of passing on a portion of this indebtedness to future generations that would receive the benefits of the canal when in operation, but it had another motive.

By the way, not $138,000,000 of bonds were issued, but $134,000,000, in round figures. The balance was the premium collected on the bond issue, paid by the investor. It is noticeable that it is very seldom that a premium is paid on public securities at so low a rate of interest, and it is an additional evidence of the soundness of the finances of preceding administrations that that premium could be collected on the sale of these securities.

But there is an additional reason, based upon the foresight of the party then in power. It does not lie in the attitude taken by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance to complain of a $134,000,000 bond issue for the purpose named. He is the last person in the world authorized to complain of it. There were $166,000,000 left in the general balance of the Treasury on the 30th day of June, 1913. That was a surplus brought over from preceding Republican administrations. I ask my distinguished friend from North Carolina, if it had not been for that surplus afforded by a Republican administration where would the Senator and his party be except in the deep morasses of financial imbecility and failure? You ought to thank your good fortune that a party preceded you that had some financial economy and sense instead of posing here in a spirit of censorious criticism because we left you a surplus to squander.

UNJUST TAX BURDENS.

The responsibility for the unjust distribution of the revenues now collected so as to place their burdens disproportionately upon certain sections of the country, if continued or increased, ought to be fixed and known. I have prepared certain tables, Mr. President, that I will insert here without reading. I ask to have them printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course may be taken.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Corporation and individual income tax collected for fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

California	$2,860,751	Alabama	$261,760
Connecticut	1,283,695	Arizona	126,559
Illinois	5,654,151	Arkansas	127,326
Iowa	733,488	Florida	229,509
Massachusetts	4,536,141	Georgia	440,600
Michigan	2,913,307	Louisiana	526,177
Minnesota	2,033,523	Mississippi	108,180
New Jersey	2,673,267	North Carolina	381,078
New York	27,638,743	South Carolina	161,401
Ohio	4,027,459	Texas	1,048,277
Pennsylvania	9,367,696	Tennessee	410,209
Rhode Island	711,111	Oklahoma	406,888
Wisconsin	875,352	Virginia	627,938
Total	65,308,684	Total	4,855,902

Mr. SHERMAN. These tables show that the attempt by a graduated income tax to cast the burden on the general wealth of the country has failed. It was stated here upon several occasions in 1913, and has been repeated at this session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, that the purpose in reducing customs revenues was to throw the burden of taxation upon the wealth of the country that was escaping a just proportion of taxation under former revenue measures. In this particular form it has classified property and levies the tax upon certain classes of property and exempts others.

It may be said of the newer States that wealth is more evenly distributed among many hands, resulting in fewer large holdings. A large proportion of the property of some of the States showing a large total wealth is farms, their equipment, and live stock. Incomes from such property in a large number of holdings fall below the $3,000 and $4,000 exemptions. In the older-settled States, such as Louisiana, the Middle West, and some of the North Atlantic States property has assumed different forms. Much of it is in corporations engaged in various undertakings, industrial and otherwise. It makes no difference how widely scattered their shares are, the corporation itself is subject to tax. To that degree it diminishes the earnings finally distributed to the shareholders, without regard to the size of the holdings.

The whole theory on which an income tax is framed is that the large incomes are able to pay, while those that run near the living line are not. The exemptions have excluded from the operations of the tax a great body of farmers of the country, wage earners, skilled labor of all kinds, and the employees in offices, mills, transportation companies, and elsewhere whose salaries fall within the exemption. They constitute the great body of active men and women throughout the country who are engaged in the necessary service incident to gainful occupations.

The exemption of this large multitude is not made on the principle of equality of taxation. It is based entirely upon the ability of the persons with incomes above $3,000 and $4,000 to pay. This is further emphasized by the supertax on incomes exceeding $20,000. This creates yet a third classification, on the idea that after this larger income has been reached that more can be exacted by the Government without impairing the support of the taxpayer or those dependent on him.

The proposal to increase the rates of taxation on individual and corporation incomes is made by the Secretary of the Treasury. The exemptions of $3,000 for single and $4,000 for married persons, it is suggested, could be reduced to $2,000 and $3,000, respectively, without hardship. The supertax, it is further intimated, could begin at $10,000 or $15,000 instead of $20,000 as provided by the present law.

I am opposed to lowering the exemption below the $3,000 and $4,000 limit. I believe it would impose burdens on a large multitude engaged in various forms of active service. If the question of equality of taxation were the controlling motive of this form of tax the exemption could be removed entirely. But the ability to pay and not the possession of the income is the motive of the law. Many employees engaged in many lines of service would be taxed on a $2,000 or $3,000 limit. This proposition reaches the bread line or the income required for living necessities. It threatens a tax on earning capacity.

There were 357,515 returns made for the fiscal year of 1915. The normal tax is assessed between the $3,000 and $4,000 exemption line up to $20,000 income. Beyond the $20,000 income the supertax is imposed. Three hundred and twenty-six thousand six hundred and fifty-eight persons out of 357,515 making returns paid the normal tax. The supertax was paid by only 30,857 persons in the United States. The total individual income tax collected for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, was $41,046,162.09. Of this, $16,559,492.93 was a normal tax by the 326,658 persons. The remaining $24,486,669.16 was paid by the 30,857 persons subject to the supertax, or additional tax, as it is known in section 2 of the tariff act of 1913.

Reduced to percentages, 43 per cent of the individual income tax is normal and 57 per cent is the supertax, or "additional tax," levied upon incomes in excess of $20,000.

The proposition to lower the exemption below the $3,000 and $4,000 income would necessarily reach out and grasp in its operation a great multitude of persons who are living upon their earning capacity and not upon fixed investments or very large compensations for extraordinary services. It would reach a large multitude—the locomotive engineer, the farmer, the man in the railroad shop, those engaged in many of the transportation undertakings of the country. A vast number who are the living agents by which the great industrial mechanism of the country is kept in operation will be taxed when this exemption is lowered.

INHERITANCE TAX SUGGESTED.

Revenue must be had. I anticipate it will be a difference only in the source of revenue and the methods of collection. Great Britain derives more than $125,000,000 a year from inheritance taxes. Her total wealth is estimated to be about $85,000,000,000. She is an Empire with a central authority, governed by Parliament. No States or Provinces, with their exclusive local laws, apply many sources of revenue. Our States are different. They have certain rights not granted away. Among them are the laws of descent and the statute of wills. The property is taxed under the local laws of the State. They stand, therefore, at the gateway, and in the first instance are entitled to levy the inheritance tax or death rate.

Ordinarily I am opposed to the Government taking the inheritance tax as a source of revenue away from the States. The wealth of this country is over $187,000,000,000. It is constantly passing by inheritance or will. It is a proper subject for excise taxation. The smaller estates can be exempted, so that we can follow the spirit in which the income-tax law was framed.

It ought generally to be reserved to the several States as a source of revenue. Many States collect considerable sums from this source already. The largest States and some of the smaller ones collect it and have for some years. In some places the income from that source runs up considerably in excess of $1,000,000 annually, and in the larger three or four States it is likely to be much in excess of that sum.

On ordinary occasions the States ought to have reserved death rates as a source of State revenue. It may be admitted, though, that this is not an ordinary occasion. The only ordinary thing about the condition we are in now is that usually an administration of the party now in power always produces a deficit instead of a surplus. It is ordinary in that sense, but extraordinary in its necessity.

A strenuous effort is made to discover new sources of revenue. I am in favor of dividing the revenue from inheritance taxes equally between the Government and the State in which it is collected. This plan would raise a sum that is difficult correctly to estimate at this time, but from fifty to seventy-five million dollars could be paid without imposing serious burdens upon heirs or devisees or legatees taking the property. Our total wealth is more than double Great Britain's. It is fair to say we could collect more death rates than she does.

The proposal to tax gasoline and bank checks and a great variety of products of iron and steel is a tax at last to be paid by the user of the article. The opinion seems to prevail in some quarters that gasoline is a luxury; that comes from habitual residence in cities. If a gentleman was out in the Northwest country, the great grain-producing area, in the great industrial centers, the dairy regions, he would find that gasoline is as much a necessity as a horse or a mule in other sections. It is a different form of power, and a proposal to tax gasoline so much per gallon is a tax upon the source of mechanical power in nearly every farming community in the country.

These are direct taxes, and it is an unfair distribution. Why should one occupation pay $10,000 a year and somebody carrying on another kind of business handling a different article of merchandise pay $5 or $20 a year?

The idea that tooth powder and tooth paste is now to be taxed as a luxury approaches, as a sober business matter, the realms of the sublimely ridiculous. It might have done in the time of the cave men, but I go on the presumption that even Members of Congress are entitled to brush their teeth without paying tribute to a war tax.

SECTIONAL LAWS.

The grossly unfair distribution of such tax burdens throughout the country is shown by the following tables of collections under Schedules A and B of the emergency-tax act of October 22, 1914, and described as No. 1 and No. 2:

Schedule A (No. 1).

California	$826,760.18
Illinois	2,292,855.98
Indiana	374,006.19
Iowa	576,179.22
Massachusetts	915,431.60
Michigan	485,712.68
Minnesota	665,773.63
Missouri	858,628.73
New York	5,131,040.10
Ohio	849,996.36
Pennsylvania	1,523,038.68
Wisconsin	385,961.93
Total	14,885,345.27

Out of a total of $20,494,474.75.

Schedule B (No. 2).

California	$90,858.88
Illinois	573,121.87
Indiana	29,409.38
Iowa	38,122.36

Massachusetts	$128,903.90
Michigan	81,535.98
Minnesota	38,995.61
Missouri	119,164.84
New York	900,688.03
Ohio	160,236.28
Pennsylvania	119,510.83
Wisconsin	36,463.94
Total	2,317,011.90

Out of a total of $2,961,490.59.

Nearly $15,000,000 out of a total of a little over $20,000,000 in A are paid by 12 States, while the same 12 States pay $2,317,011.90 out of a total of $2,961,490.59 collected under Schedule B. The burden falls unjustly upon a few occupations, upon a few States, and upon a few people.

Direct taxation falls on the property and the earning capacity of the country finally, whatever may be said to the contrary. Republican government obtains its power from the people of the country.

I wish to use the following tables, described as No. 3 and No. 4:

TABLE No. 3.

States.	Population 1910	Votes 1912.
California	2,377,549	673,527
Connecticut	1,114,756	190,398
Illinois	5,638,591	1,146,173
Indiana	2,700,876	654,474
Massachusetts	3,366,416	488,056
Michigan	2,810,173	550,976
Minnesota	2,075,708	334,219
Missouri	3,293,335	698,562
New York	9,113,614	1,587,983
New Jersey	2,537,167	424,622
Ohio	4,767,121	1,037,094
Pennsylvania	7,665,111	1,217,502
Wisconsin	2,333,860	399,972
Tota	49,794,277	9,403,558

States.	Population 1910.	Votes 1912
Alabama	2,138,093	117,879
Arizona	204,354	23,722
Arkansas	1,574,449	124,029
Florida	752,619	51,891
Georgia	2,609,121	121,420
Louisiana	1,656,388	79,377
Mississippi	1,797,114	64,523
North Carolina	2,206,287	244,455
Oklahoma	1,657,155	253,801
South Carolina	1,515,400	50,350
Tennessee	2,184,789	247,821
Texas	3,896,542	301,788
Virginia	2,061,612	136,976
Total	24,253,923	1,818,037

It will be noted that the 13 States in Table No. 3 have a population of 49,794,277 and cast 9,403,558 votes. Of the population 18.88 per cent voted in 1912. The 13 States in Table No. 4, containing a population of 24,253,923, cast a total vote of 1,818,037. Less than 7.5 per cent of the population of Table No. 4 of States voted in 1912.

It will be noted here that the distinguished senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] was evidently hedging against this the other day when he said that the argument that we were solicitous about the Philippine Islands and cared so little about certain people living in his State was enfantillage. I am not versed in French. If he wishes to barricade himself behind a foreign tongue, all right. But I called up the Library in order to piece out my abysmal ignorance of French and asked them what it meant, and they said "child's play."

So 3.6 per cent in Mississippi vote of the entire population, and 10 per cent vote in the Philippine Islands. You think more of the Philippine Islands and the Malays than you do of Booker Washington and his race. This is not child's play. The Senator from Mississippi said if he had been a Filipino when we took possession of the islands he would have fought to the last drop of his blood. This will be advice heeded by the next revolutionary leader there who rises to accelerate our exit from that country. This is more "enfantillage."

I do not know what the rights of negro citizens will be under some decisions of the Federal Supreme Court on the grandfather clauses and under the decisions of the Federal court in Terre Haute, Ind., in the Roberts case. Lately decisions were rendered the full scope, the pith, and moment of which are not fully appreciated yet by gentlemen who are responsible in the affairs of government, that the grandfather clauses and certain clauses in the statutes or constitutional provisions for the literacy test were invalid as being contrary to the fifteenth war amendment. That can be worked out in due season. I only refer to it in view of the tables I have just put into the RECORD.

What is government? The definition of self-government was given here yesterday. Self-government in the Philippine Islands appears to be a government of 8,000,000 people by, say, 800,000, or a government of many by a few.

I submit Tables Nos. 5 and 6, showing the total wealth of certain States and the total income tax paid by the same States.

TABLE No. 5.

	Total wealth.	Corporation and individual income tax.
North Carolina	$1,807,573,780	$381,379.31
South Carolina	1,351,400,753	161,401.95
Mississippi	1,344,860,020	108,180.65
Florida	1,049,138,228	229,509.82
Total	5,552,972,781	880,471.77

TABLE No. 6.

	Total wealth.	Corporation and individual income tax.
New York	$25,011,155,223	$27,638,744.25
Illinois	15,484,459,232	5,654,157.65
Pennsylvania	15,457,583,277	9,367,696.34
Massachusetts	6,302,988,392	4,535,144.97
Total	62,256,074,124	42,365,185.78

It will be observed that the first four States named in Table No. 5 have 2.95 per cent of the total wealth of the United States, which is estimated at $187,739,071,090.

These tables show the wealth, vote, and population of the country, and there is nothing left in government but its institutions, as far as public affairs are involved. So, if the Government of the people is to be preserved in this matter at the present time, it is a misgovernment, a government of many by a few, taxation of many by a few, collection of three-fourths of the income from certain localities, persons, and things, and its expenditure by one-fourth of those, or a number represented by one-fourth of the payments.

The total wealth of the first four States is $5,552,972,781, compared with $62,256,074,124 in the last four. The corporation and individual income tax paid by the first four is $880,471.77, and the like tax paid by the last four $42,365,185.78. The first four States have 2.95 per cent of the wealth of the United States, and pay one ninety-first of the total corporation and individual income tax. The last four States have 33⅓ per cent of the total wealth of the United States, and pay 52.83 per cent of the total corporation and individual income tax.

I submit Table No. 7 of certain other States, with the several amounts of corporation and individual income tax paid by each and the total wealth of each. It illustrates how the tariff act of October 3, 1913, has distributed unequally the burden of direct taxation. It does not fall upon the wealth of the country, but upon a certain class of wealth. It ought not therefore be the principal source of revenue, neither ought it be intensified by lowering the exemption or by such taxes as the emergency act of October 22, 1914.

TABLE No. 7.

States.	Total wealth.	Corporation and individual income tax.
Rhode Island	$970,802,690	$711,111.61
Nebraska	3,794,986,781	361,373.32
Maryland	2,177,958,864	1,021,879.61
Connecticut	2,285,454,659	1,283,695.97
Iowa	7,868,454,211	733,488.69
Michigan	5,427,022,651	2,913,308.13
Delaware	307,948,613	282,791.04
North Dakota	2,141,626,961	97,496.68
Louisiana	2,164,437,746	526,177.94
Alabama	2,127,054,930	261,760.79

But little comment is necessary. It is proper to emphasize, however, certain features of this inequality. Rhode Island has barely more than one-fourth of the wealth of Nebraska and pays nearly twice the income tax. Maryland possesses about the same wealth of Louisiana and pays nearly double the income tax. The wealth of Louisiana and Alabama are nearly equal, yet Louisiana pays over twice the income tax of Alabama. Delaware has one-seventh of Alabama and yet pays more income tax than the latter.

By comparing the wealth of Iowa in the last table with that of Massachusetts in the former table it is found that Iowa's wealth exceeds that of Massachusetts by $1,500,000,000, yet Iowa pays $733,488 income tax, while Massachusetts pays $4,536,141, or more than six times the burden, although possessed of vastly less wealth.

North Dakota's wealth nearly equals that of Louisiana. Louisiana, however, pays nearly five and a half times as much income tax. Connecticut, with wealth comparatively little more than North Dakota, pays over 13 times as much income tax. Nebraska, with nearly four times the wealth of Rhode Island, pays but a little over one-half as much income tax.

I submit certain other tables, No. 8 and No. 9, showing manufacturing data:

The foregoing tables indicate in what part of the United States the volume of manufacturing is. The capital stock employed, as shown in Table No. 9, is nearly eight times as great as in the part of the country embraced in Table No. 8. The wages are more than eight times in Table No. 9 those in Table No. 8. The value of products in Table No. 9 exceed those in Table No. 8 more than eight times. In the great group of States in Table No. 9 is transacted the business on which falls the present burden of the emergency tax of October 22, 1914.

The transactions in assembling the raw material, the creation and distribution of the finished product, the commercial transactions between the buyer and the seller, the immense transportation required to reach the consumer and in the export trade of our surplus are all burdened with the direct taxes in the emergency act of 1914.

The proposal in the President's message for further taxes would place upon this great volume of business at least three-fourths of such tax, leaving the other portions of the Union to escape their just share.

CONCLUSIONS.

In conclusion, I summarize from the foregoing conditions:

Revision of the tariff along lines of protection so as to produce additional customs duties.

A discontinuance of excise taxes, such as the emergency act of October 22, 1914, continued for one year by this Congress.

An inheritance tax divided proportionately, say 50 per cent each to the Government and the several States.

A readjustment of corporation and individual income tax.

Economy in appropriations and expenditures.

A defeat of such measures as the Government shipping bill and a reduction of appropriations of the rivers and harbors bill to indispensable improvements such as connect themselves with a general plan of inland and ocean navigation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to address myself for a very few minutes only to the bill under consideration.

Most of the argument on this question has been directed to the ability or inability of the Filipino people to maintain a stable self-government. From my standpoint this is not the vital question. It is probable that they can not assure to themselves a government entirely free from turmoil or uprising. There is at least danger of such conditions. It is quite certain to my mind that they can not claim such qualification for self-government as is possessed by the American people. But that may also be said as to some of the great European powers. Their monarchial forms of government and their willingness to submit to it indicate characteristics that would hardly, from our view, fit them for our republican system. But I should not for that reason regard it as the duty of this Government to reform their system. I can not but believe that the creation of any class of privileged persons, the creation and maintenance of degrees of nobility, which engenders a spirit of egotism and arrogance in one individual and a spirit of subserviency in another, is destructive of the highest standard of individual character, and this whether the aristocracy be a military or civil one. Its baneful effects upon the character of a people are the same. But does that fact impose upon us the duty to seize or hold aristocracy-ridden England or military-ridden Germany for the purpose of reform, for the purpose of fitting them for a republican form of government, or any of these great powers of Europe who see fit to live under a different form of government?

I shall vote to strike out the preamble, not because it declares a purpose to ultimately give independence to the Filipino people, but because by its words it leaves the discretion entirely with the United States, without reference to the judgment or desire of the Filipino people themselves.

The Philippine Archipelago came to us as the result of conquest, without the consent of its inhabitants and against their protest, backed by all their power of resistance. As these islands were acquired by force, they are now held by force. We justify their retention on the grounds that it is for the best interest of their people. We justify it on wholly altruistic motives; and that leads us directly to the question of both the right and duty of this Government to hold a foreign people and their territory, whose possession is in no way essential to the life or defense of our own Government. Were these islands so close to our own shores that their possession by any other power would endanger our national safety, we might justify their retention on the grounds of self-defense. But no such exigency now exists or can exist, and we are face to face with the moral question. Ought we to hold a foreign race in a foreign land for the sole purpose of fitting them for a higher degree of self-government or a higher citizenship?

If we have a right to hold a people against their will for that purpose, then we must also have the right to take possession of other like people for the same purpose; for the right to hold must be buttressed on the right to seize. If that is our moral privilege, as well as our moral duty, toward those who have not achieved our standard of enlightenment, then is it not just as much our duty and our right to seize the Chinese Empire and by force teach these people our higher civilization and fit them for self-government? They seem to have entirely failed in maintaining such a government. The fire of revolution has but recently destroyed their old monarchical government, but before the ashes have cooled another dynasty has been erected on its ruins. Here is a mighty field for the exercise of our desire to civilize a people up to our standard. We do not avail ourselves of this opportunity for educational work because we recognize that national rights are superior to our desire to reform.

Mr. President, in my opinion, while we may be excused for taking possession of the Philippine Islands under the circumstances, and while we may have been justified in paying $20,000,000 to secure the release of these people from oppression of another Government, we have no right to hold that foreign people by force and against their will and compel them to remain under our control for such length of time as we, not they, may consider it for their best interest. I contend these people have national rights which we are morally bound to respect.

Looking at it from the standpoint of our own interest, I confess the only object our possession has so far subserved has been an excuse for the construction and maintenance of an enormous Navy. We all know that these islands constitute our only vulnerable point of attack, and they therefore offer a needed and cherished excuse to those whose patriotism always runs toward war and military prowess to demand an ever-increasing Army and Navy fully adequate for their protection against assault.

So long as we hold these islands we, of course, must be able to protect them in case we are at war.

It is well known to-day that we could not defend them against the nearest great Asiatic power. To do so we must double the size of our Navy. We must add immensely to our Army. We must burden our people with a mighty armament to defend a little group of islands which are of no value whatever to us and which wish to free themselves from us—islands whose possession invites attack by any Government with which we might possibly have a quarrel. Not only this, but the fact that they can so easily be attacked and their defense by us would be attended with such difficulties encourages and invites hostilities against us. A nation might well be content, if at war with us, to simply take immediate possession of those islands and allow us to waste our strength in attempting to regain them, where such nation would never dream of crossing the ocean to strike a blow at us within our own waters.

Mr. President, I favor most heartily the extension of the right of self-government provided in the resolution. The capabilities of this people for full and complete independence may possibly be foreshadowed in their use or abuse of the additional governmental powers here conferred. But only a violent and gross abuse of the power would justify our interference.

I do not wish to be understood, without further consideration of the matter, as favoring the release of these people from our tutelage without any further act of ours. While I do not admit there is a moral duty of this Government to force our civilization upon them, the fact that they have been under our care and adoption creates ties of deeper friendship and more earnest wishes for their welfare than would otherwise obtain. Though forced into submission, they are still to some extent our foster child, and we may well deal with them with greater concern for their welfare.

What they want above all things is independence, not only from us but from all other powers, and we ought to secure an understanding from every great power of the world that their independence shall be respected. The Senator from Colorado used the word "protectorate." That is not what we want and not what they want. Protectorate carries with it a sort of right of interference—a sort of subindependence only. The agreement that we should secure should be of a negative character, not that the powers should protect the independence of the islands from each other but that they should each and all refrain from interfering with their independence.

There is no use, Mr. President, in our dodging or veering from the real object which we had in view when we forced Spain to cede those islands to us. Our motives were not at that time wholly altruistic, but rather wholly commercial. We were not looking for opportunities to extend our civilization, but to extend our trade. We had awakened at that time to the trade possibilities of the Orient. Hawaii and the Philippines were to be the stepping stones ocross the ocean and ultimately lead us to the goal of our hopes—trade with China and the Orient generally. The reformation of the Philippine people, for their own salvation, was a secondary sentiment. Since that time, another great aggressive tradelike, as well as warlike, nation has arisen out of the sea and now obscures to considerable extent our roseate commercial view.

We have learned in the last 16 years that the people who can most cheaply produce and deliver their goods to the Orient will monopolize the selling trade of that section of the world; and that schooled in the most rigid frugality and with a wage scale almost infinitesimal as compared with labor wages here, the Nippon will undoubtedly command the selling trade to the Orient. We do not need any Philippine Islands to insure us a buying trade. We can buy all we want if we have the price to pay.

As a commercial asset these islands have proved worse than useless. Every dollar of benefit has cost us a hundred dollars of loss.

But the worst aspect of the Philippine proposition, so far as it affects us, is that it forces us into the un-American policy of entering into an armament competition which has taxed the very life out of the Old World. So long as we hold the Philippine Islands we must be prepared to defend them against invasion in case of war, and that means that we must have a more powerful Navy than any European or Asiatic power with which we would be liable to have war. I say "liable to have war" because I do not think there would be any possibility of war between this country and Great Britain. There are conditions which would keep her from ever engaging in war with us.

The responsibility of holding these islands is enormous, both in its expensiveness and in its effect upon our national character. With a fair navy and proper submarine and coast defenses we need have no fear of any nation declaring an aggressive war against us on this side of the ocean. But with our territorial body projected some 6,000 miles from our real shore—projected into another hemisphere, surrounded by a yellow race whose friendship we have not by our historical conduct sought very earnestly to cultivate, a race which believes it has been slighted by us, and which has taken offense at our exclusion policies, we shall need to maintain a far greater Navy. And just to the extent that we create a war organ, Navy or Army, whose only function is war, just to that extent do we create a desire that these organs perform their functions, and just to that extent we create the military spirit in this country.

But, as I have suggested, I believe we can secure from the great governments of the world an agreement to respect the independence of the islands. When such agreement has been secured, when we can give to these people an independence which we can assure, and which other nations would respect, then we should show to them and to the world that this country, rising above every semblance of greed and pride of possession, is capable of doing an act of justice and philanthropy to another people never before voluntarily performed by any other country in the whole history of war and conquest.

I do not entirely agree with the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], because it provides for independence first and the securing of an agreement to respect that independence afterwards. I should prefer, Mr. President, and I think the Filipinos themselves would prefer, that we first secure an assurance from the great powers of the world that their independence would not be interfered with; that we then prepare to call a convention in those islands to adopt a constitution and a republican form of government; that we then proceed to organize that government; and when it is fully organized, when the officers have been elected and this agreement has been secured, we then declare them independent of the United States.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota pardon an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. CLAPP. Does not the Senator also feel that the nations that we might consult would very much more appreciate our consulting them before than after the granting of independence? It strikes me that it would appeal to them much more strongly than to consult them after we had already decided it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think, Mr. President, they would not only more appreciate being consulted before independence was declared, but I think they would be far more likely to accede to a request that they keep their hands off the Filipinos while the islands are still in our hands than after we had released them from our control.

Mr. CLAPP. It strikes me so.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have epitomized the sentiments which I have expressed into an amendment, which I offered yesterday and asked to have printed. I will ask the Secretary to read the amendment at this time as the closing part of my address upon this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

"The President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to indicate to the great powers of the world the desire of this Government to extend to the Philippine Islands and the Philippine people full and complete independence whenever it shall be warranted in the belief that such independence will be permanent and be respected by the other powers of the world. The President is further authorized and requested to secure from such other powers such agreements as will insure the independence of said islands in perpetuity, and when such agreements have been made he shall forthwith direct a convention to be held in such islands for the purpose of adopting a constitution providing for a republican form of government; and as soon as such constitution has been adopted and officers have been elected and a government inaugurated thereunder, he shall, by proclamation, declare such islands and the people thereof to be a free and independent state, with all the powers of complete sovereignty."

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, it is not my intention to make any extended remarks at this time, but as we approach a vote on this question I can not refrain from saying a few words in favor of the bill and in behalf of the Filipino people.

I have been interested in the Philippine Islands ever since May 4, 1898, when Admiral Dewey won the Battle of Manila Bay, one of the most brilliant naval victories in all history. I had a friend, Mr. William Weaver, of Seneca, Kans., who participated in that battle as a gunner on the Olympia, the admiral's flagship, which gave me a personal interest in that great event. Kansas is especially interested in the government of the islands and the welfare of the Filipino people by reason of the fact that the present vice governor, Hon. Henderson S. Martin, was appointed by the President to that position from Marion, Kans., and he has had much to do with the writing of the present bill. By virtue of his office he is also at the head of the bureau of education in the islands and has done much to assist the young people of the islands to receive an education sufficient for self-government. Over 500,000 Filipino children are now attending school and studying the English language and American institutions in these islands. More than 9,000 Filipino teachers are now teaching the common branches in English in these schools. Gov. Martin was so greatly interested in this bill, so thoroughly convinced of its great benefit to the Filipino people and to this country, that he came all the way from the Philippines to give evidence before the Senate committee at the last session of Congress, and was exceedingly anxious that the bill should pass that session. Gov. Martin gave valuable evidence before the committee, taking the position, after thoroughly studying the question on the ground, that the Filipino people are ready now for self-government and that the United States should grant them independence at the earliest possible moment.

I am heartily in favor of this bill, because it gives to the Filipino people a greater measure of self-government than they have before enjoyed, and is a decided step forward toward the ultimate fulfillment of the promises of the United States Government to grant to them absolute independence. So far as I am concerned, I am willing they should have their independence just as quickly as it is possible to be arranged. From all the testimony before the committee at the hearings, it is clearly demonstrated that they are capable of governing themselves; not in a way, perhaps, that we would like to govern them, but in a way that they want to govern themselves. I do not suppose that any American would admit that the Filipino people, or any other people in the world for that matter, are as capable as ourselves to govern. Most American citizens believe that the United States is the best-governed country in the world; but this does not necessarily mean that we are more capable of governing another country and a different race of people than the people of that country themselves.

These people have already shown remarkable advancement in education, civilization, and ability to govern. Nearly all of the offices in the Philippines are now successfully filled by Filipinos—a majority of the commission who constitute the upper house of the legislature, all the members of the lower house, all the governors of the various Provinces, and nearly all of the officers and employees of the municipal governments are Filipinos and are faithfully discharging their respective duties with honesty and fidelity. Every member of the lower house, composed of 81 members, is a college graduate, a distinction not possessed by any other legislative body in the world. A very valuable comparative statement furnished by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] in his eloquent and very exhaustive address on this subject recently delivered in the Senate, shows the percentage of illiteracy to be less in the Philippines than in most of the South American Republics and in many of the nations of Europe.

The Philippine Islands are 7,000 miles away, and are inhabited by about 8,000,000 people who wish to govern themselves, and who ask us, the great American people, to free them from the yoke which binds them to us, and which was placed on their necks through no fault of theirs, and without their consent. The Declaration of Independence provides—

> That all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

No man or set of men has a right to take from us any of these inalienable rights prescribed in the Declaration of Independence and guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. Demanding these rights for ourselves, we ought to be willing to treat others in exactly the same way and recognize their rights to those things which we declare to be sacred to us. The Filipino people did not consent that we govern them; and now, wanting independence for themselves, this great principle of liberty which is so dear to the people of this country ought to be extended to them without further controversy, even if there were no other reasons demanding that it be done. I believe that it is not only to the best interests of the Filipino people, but also to the best interests of the people of the United States, that the Philippines should be free and independent. It is estimated that the islands have cost us about $600,000,000, and there has been no monetary return to this country. It has been well worth the price, however, if through our aid and influence we have helped a poor struggling nation of people to a position of self-government. As stated by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] in his splendid speech on this bill the other day:

> The American occupation of the Philippine Islands is the finest example of an altruistic effort by a great country to bring the blessings of civilized government to a weak people. In all the history of the world there is nothing that approaches it.

More than this, it was never the intention of our Government to keep the Philippines as absolutely our own and to have the same become a part of our country any more than it was our intention to keep Cuba and permit it to become a part of our country. There would have been more sound sense and reason for retaining Cuba than the Philippines, but it was contrary to the policy of our Government to do so. In the circumstances, as the result of the war with Spain, it became our duty to establish a stable government in both countries, which we have done. We turned the government of Cuba over to her own people long ago, and it is now time to turn the government of the Philippines over to her own people, aside from the necessary time required to put the new governmental machinery into complete operation. The Filipino people, or at least those in authority to represent them and who are qualified to speak, are satisfied with this bill, and it ought therefore to be satisfactory to us.

We only have to consider the feelings of our own people in the Revolutionary period to understand the feelings of these people now. The American people were demanding the same right to be free from England. All the arguments which have been made here against this bill were made in the English Parliament against us. Only a few brave men like Edmund Burke and William Pitt, in the House of Commons, and Lord Camden, in the House of Lords, championed the cause of the colonists. Are we Americans, who believe we were right then, to so far forget ourselves now as to say that the principle of liberty contended for is wrong when applied to another people?

Liberty to man has been of very slow growth since first the flight of time began. It has been hindered and obstructed upon every turn. Those who have attained it have been obliged to fight for it from the earliest time down to the present day. Hence it was that John Philpot Curran remarked that, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." Thomas Jefferson once said that, "The God who gave us life gave us liberty at the same time." Liberty is as precious as life itself. It was the realization of this truth that prompted Patrick Henry to use that fiery but most patriotic expression in his immortal speech, "Give me liberty or give me death!"

Some of the opposition contend that the Filipino people are not prepared for independence because of the way they live, claiming they have not sufficiently pretentious habitations and are not properly cultivated in the modern way of living. While most of the people have modest homes, yet they are generally suitable to their race and climate, and many of the citizens in the cities live in magnificent modern residences. But the poet Pope has forcefully answered that argument in the following suggestive lines:

> Give me again my hollow tree,
> A crust of bread, and liberty!

There ought not to be a single voice of the American people, who know of the awful struggle we passed through to secure this same sacred right, raised against this bill. I certainly hope it will pass. It will be the means of adding another republic to the galaxy of nations, and will be a lesson to the Old World which they may well emulate, since their greatest troubles through the terrible war in which they are now engaged came from monarchies and distant possessions. Pass this bill and joy will go up over this country and through the Philippine Islands equal to that when the stamp act was repealed by the English Parliament, and Edmund Burke exclaimed, "It caused more universal joy throughout the English dominions than perhaps any other act that can be remembered."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 13, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we turn to Thee in fervent prayer for guidance in this hour of distress. Move Thou, we beseech Thee, upon the hearts of the strong, pure, noble, brave men of our Republic that they may devise ways and means by which the rights of every American citizen may be protected on land and on sea against the greed, rapine, and murder of lawless men, whether under the pretext of war or imaginary wrongs.

We pray for a patriotism which shall lift us above parties, creeds, and selfish desires, that life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness may be maintained and upheld under the Stars and Stripes for the sake of humanity, justice, and purity. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS BACK RIVER, GA.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Georgia rise?

Mr. EDWARDS. For the purpose, Mr. Speaker, of submitting a unanimous-consent request. There is a bill introduced by myself, H. R. 7611, which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, for the purpose of permitting the Seaboard Air Line Railway to build a bridge across the Back River at Savannah, Ga. I ask for its present consideration and passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7611) authorizing the Seaboard Air Line Railway Co., a corporation, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge or bridges and approaches thereto across what is known as "Back River," a part of the Savannah River, at a point between Jasper County, S. C., and Chatham County, Ga.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Seaboard Air Line Railway Co., a consolidated corporation organized under the laws of the State of Virginia and other States of the United States of America, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge or bridges and approaches thereto across what is known as Back River, a part of the Savannah River, near the city of Savannah, Ga., at or near the plantation of J. Heyward Lynah, in Jasper County, S. C., to the shore opposite thereto in Chatham County, Ga., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, and in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and all amendments thereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Also, the following committee amendments were read:

Amend, on page 1, line 5, by striking out, after the word "Virginia," the following:

"And other States of the United States of America."

Amend, on page 1, line 7, after the word "bridge," by striking out the words "or bridges."

Amend, on page 2, in line 5, by striking out, after the word "six," "and all amendments thereof."

Amend, on page 1, in line 3, by striking out, after the word "a," the word "consolidated."

Amend, on line 6, by striking out the words "they are" and substitute in lieu thereof the word "is."

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I have not objected to unanimous consent for the consideration of these bridge bills, which have been accumulating for months, so far as the necessity for them was concerned, and I shall not object to the consideration of this bill at this time. But hereafter, unless matters come up for unanimous consent which are actually an emergency, I shall object unless they come up on unanimous-consent day.

Mr. LANGLEY. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not object to the next one.

Mr. MANN. I will. It can go over until the next unanimous-consent day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to state to all Members that there is a Unanimous Consent Calendar, and it comes up next Monday. These recognitions for unanimous consent are in contravention of the rule that made that calendar, and gentlemen who have these bridge bills had best get busy this morning and put them on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask my colleague from Georgia, merely in the interests of navigation, whether this bridge is above or below the city of Savannah?

Mr. EDWARDS. You might say that it is opposite. It is across Back River. It does not cross the navigable channel, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is a large development going on there now. This will not affect the navigation?

Mr. EDWARDS. Not at all. This is not across the main river. This is across a branch, or slough, that can not be used for navigation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it is satisfactory to the department?

Mr. EDWARDS. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. And there is no objection there?

Mr. EDWARDS. Not at all. The local people there want it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed House bills of the following titles without amendment:

H. R. 320. An act to authorize the county of Bonner, Idaho, to construct a bridge across Pend Oreille River; and

H. R. 775. An act granting the consent of Congress to J. P. Jones and others to construct one or more bridges across the Chattahoochee River between the counties of Coweta and Carroll, in the State of Georgia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 2521. An act legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Central Pacific Railroad Co. and others within the State of Nevada.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILL.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV the following Senate bill was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

S. 2521. An act legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Central Pacific Railroad Co. and others within the State of Nevada.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had, on the following dates, approved and signed bill and joint resolutions of the following titles:

December 17, 1915:

S. J. Res. 38. Joint resolution to transfer the Government exhibit from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to the Panama-California Exposition, and for other purposes.

December 18, 1915:

S. J. Res. 56. Joint resolution extending the time for filing the report of the Joint Committee of Congress on the Fiscal Relations between the District of Columbia and the United States; and

S. 696. An act authorizing the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River at Oil City, Venango County, Pa.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes in order to answer what I consider to be an attack against me that was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on the 7th of January.

Mr. FERRIS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, would not the gentleman from the Philippines just as soon have the time yielded to him after we get into committee?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes. I would not have any objection to that, Mr. Speaker, but I suppose the gentleman who is credited with having written this article will want to answer me immediately, and I do not know whether he would be able to get the time as soon as I am through speaking.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will get time if you get time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state for the benefit of all concerned that the matter that the gentleman from the Philippines has is in the nature of a question of personal privilege. Of course, not being a Member of the House, he can not get it. He has asked unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the other day when we were fixing time for general debate on the water-power bill we took into consideration time for the gentleman from the Philippines. I think that ought to be sufficient.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say, in answer to the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that they took into consideration the time that the gentleman from the Philippines [Mr. QUEZON] desires to use in addressing the House; they took into consideration also the fact that I perhaps would want an opportunity to answer the gentleman, did they not?

Mr. MANN. We did.

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I could not hear the remark made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. SLAYDEN. I could not hear the gentleman from Illinois, and I do not know how it might affect a request that I am going to make to be allowed 10 or 12 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the gentleman will have any trouble in getting the time from the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers to give to the gentleman from the Philippines any time he wants.

Mr. MANN. We have reached that stage in the proceedings where we have business on hand, and gentlemen will have to take the opportunity of addressing the House, in the main, in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection, or does the gentleman withdraw his request?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Minnesota rise?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I rise to reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objected.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Minnesota objecting?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. He is not. He is reserving the right to object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Did the gentleman from Illinois object?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the gentleman from Illinois has already objected. He exercised his right.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 406.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LOFT, by unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. CONRY, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

COAL AND OIL LEASES.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 406. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 406, known as the coal and oil leasing bill, with Mr. CULLOP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 406, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 406) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is recognized for 40 minutes.

RIGHTS OF NEUTRAL NATIONS TO EXPORT ARMS AND MUNITIONS OF WAR TO BELLIGERENTS.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, during the last few days there has been much discussion on the floor of the House touching the policy of this country in allowing arms and munitions of war to be exported to belligerent nations. In the discussion of that question, as well as other questions concerning our foreign policy, some gentlemen in the heat of debate have said some things which to some of us it seems would have been better if left unsaid. My good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], able, courteous, and courageous, an adept at all times in "starting something," by his remarks of last week so aroused many Representatives to a defense of their constituents that this Chamber has resounded with oratory and eloquence has poured forth as streams run down the mountain side, extolling the character and patriotism of their respective constituencies.

You will pardon me if at this particular time, when our international situation is strained and delicate, I venture the suggestion that it is the part of wisdom not to transform private opinions into public utterances. I have no doubt that each Representative here is equally as zealous as every other Representative of the rights of their constituents and as sincere in their admiration of the good qualities and good intentions of them.

I am quite sure that gentlemen on this floor representing in part German constituences are as much in love with the patriotic Germans in their districts as is the gentleman from Massachusetts with those sturdy New Englanders who live in his district and have seen fit to return him to this House term after term. Mr. Chairman, I think cases are quite rare when one American citizen, be he of German or French or English extraction, has any feeling or prejudice against American citizens of different extraction; and while possibly some constituents of foreign birth or parentage have their own preference among the nations at war in Europe, I believe, like the President of the United States, that they are few indeed who, in case of war between this country and a foreign country, would fail to put America first.

But, sirs, views expressed by Representatives on this floor, as well as in the other end of the Capitol, are ofttimes exaggerated by the press, and very likely interpreted wrongly by people of other countries. Speeches made upon this floor, criticizing the foreign policy of this Government, are very likely to create in the public mind of foreign nations a very erroneous idea as to the true sentiment and attitude of the American people. And, sirs, may I be permitted to say to those who are prone to attack the foreign policy of this Government, while you may tickle the fancy and win the applause of your respective constituents by taking issue with the men who are directing the foreign affairs of this country, and criticizing their action, you at the same time are clogging the diplomatic wheels of this administration and embarrassing those officials in carrying out and making successful our foreign policy.

No fact connected with the war across the waters is more manifest than that the dissension and discord among the people of England and the criticism directed at the officials in charge of that Government has materially affected the success of English arms. It has been food for the central powers and a tonic to solidify and encourage and enthuse their soldiers in the trenches.

No nation in times of war can obtain success without harmonious, united action upon the part of all the people. Harmonious and united action is likewise conducive to diplomatic success.

This Government has laid down in a most admirable document its policy respecting the exportation of arms and munitions of war to belligerent nations, and speeches on this floor criticizing that policy and accepting the views of foreign nations opposed to it are but giving encouragement to those foreign nations and crippling the sincere and impartial efforts of this Government in maintaining a most just and fair and correct neutral policy.

Because the policy of this Government in refusing to prohibit the exportation of arms and munitions of war to belligerents has been assailed by gentlemen on this floor, I desire to address myself particularly to that subject.

I lay it down as an incontrovertible proposition that with hardly an exception neutral countries which have prohibited free trade in arms and munitions of war with belligerents have done so for one or the other of four reasons: First, in order to discourage insurrections and rebellions, and assist in the maintenance of law and order and stable government. Secondly, in order to prevent a future enemy from acquiring munitions of war or resources to carry on a war against the nation invoking the order. Thirdly, to conserve the military strength of the country. Fourthly, to comply with treaty stipulations.

In the first class I might cite the case of Prussia in prohibiting arms and munitions of war being exported into Poland that revolutions and insurrections might be put down in that country, or I might cite the action of this Government during the administration of Mr. Taft and Mr. Wilson respecting the insurrection in Mexico. Under the second class I refer to the fact that the Christians in olden times enjoined the enemies of all christendom from obtaining arms and implements of war. The Romans in the early ages prevented in times of peace the sale of war materials to barbarians as eventual and future enemies of Rome.

Under the third class I might cite the case of Austria and Belgium, as well as other nations, which during the Franco-Prussian War prohibited the exportation of horses to the belligerent nations, this object being to conserve the horses of their own country. Why, sirs, in 1862 in our own United States President Lincoln issued this order: "Ordered that no arms, ammunition, or munitions of war be allowed to be exported from the United States until further ordered," and so forth. This action was to conserve the strength of the Union armies and the resources of the North.

Under the fourth class I might cite the fact that as far back as the beginning of the fourteenth century, when commercial relations between individuals began to be developed and the princes, seeing that they had greatly benefited from the commercial enterprises of their subjects, began to negotiate with foreign princes and enter into treaty agreements that in the event of war a contracting nation would not aid nor succor the enemy of the other contracting nation. It was an unfair custom, because it operated to strengthen larger nations at the expense of smaller nations.

England in 1353 bound up by a treaty the Iberian seacoast cities that in the event of war between England and one of the nations of the world these Iberian seacoast cities were prevented from selling anything to the enemies of England that might aid them in the war.

Such unfair propositions were found, too, in the Spanish-England treaty of 1604, the English-Dutch treaty of 1654, the Franco-Danish treaty of 1663, the English-Danish treaty of 1670, the Franco-Hamburg treaty of 1769, and the Franco-Mecklenburg treaty of 1779.

These positions were so palpably unfair and partial and unjust that the practice has long since been abandoned and discarded by the nations of the world.

It has been the policy of nations and the recognized rule of international law that the subjects of neutral countries have the right to export arms and munitions of war to belligerent nations. In the war for American independence France refused to comply with the request of England to prohibit the exportation of arms to America. In 1793 the United States refused to comply with the wish of England that the former prohibit her citizens from selling arms to French agents; and in that controversy it is interesting to note the note of the then Secretary of State, Thomas Jefferson, who declared:

> Our citizens have always been free to make, vend, and export arms; it is the constant occupation and livelihood of some of them. To suppress their callings—the only means perhaps of their subsistence—because a war exists in foreign and distant country in which we have no concern would scarcely be expected. It would be hard in principle and impossible in practice.

Mr. Charles Lee, as Attorney General of the United States, in January, 1796, in giving an opinion on this question, said:

> If the individual citizens of the United States carry on a contraband commerce with either of the belligerent powers, neither can charge it upon the government of the neutral nation as a departure from neutrality, and it is not considered as a duty imposed upon a nation by a state of neutrality to prevent its seamen from employing themselves in contraband trade, nor are there to be shown any instances where a neutral nation has exercised or attempted to exercise its authority in restraining practices or employments of this kind.

The same position was taken shortly afterwards by the English Government, when, owing to the Greco-Turkish War of 1826, the Duke of Wellington demanded the prohibition of the exportation of contraband, and Mr. Canning officially said that the shipment of arms to belligerents was not against the law and that it could not be prohibited at all by the English Government.

In 1842 Daniel Webster, as Secretary of State, in a diplomatic controversy between this Government and Mexico, said:

> Trade in articles contraband of war is carried on at the risk of those engaged in it, under the liabilities and penalties prescribed by the law of nations or particular treaties. If it be true, therefore, that citizens of the United States have been engaged in commerce by which Texas, an enemy of Mexico, has been supplied with arms and munitions of war, the Government of the United States nevertheless was not bound to prevent it, could not have prevented it without a manifest departure from the principles of neutrality, and is in nowise answerable for the consequences.

In December, 1855, President Pierce, in his message to Congress, said:

> The laws of the United States do not forbid their citizens to sell to either of the belligerent powers articles contraband of war; and although in so doing the individual citizen exposes his property or person to some of the hazards of war, his acts do not involve any breach of national neutrality nor of themselves implicate the Government.

And again, at the beginning of the Franco-Prussian War, U. S. Grant, as President of the United States, declared in his proclamation of August 22, 1870, that the laws of the United States did not interfere with trade in arms and munitions with belligerent nations.

Let me cite you, sirs, to the further fact that Prussia during the Civil War refused to prohibit her citizens from exporting arms and munitions of war to the North or the South, because at that time the representative of the Prussian Government said it would interfere with their trade and commerce. It was during this war that a most flourishing trade in arms with Germany was carried on, because Germany at that time was well supplied with breech-loading guns, which had become superfluous in Germany owing to the introduction of a new make of gun, and they found their way into parts of the North in exchange for the gold of this country.

In 1868 the English Admiralty judge, Lushington, in his official capacity said:

> A belligerent has no right to say to a neutral, "You shall help me to strengthen my rights as a belligerent by restricting your own freedom and by making unlawful your own law which was not unlawful before."

And in this connection, Mr. Chairman, it is quite interesting to note the controversy over this question between England and Germany. Germany requested England, through her ambassador, to cease the sale and shipment of munitions of war into France and stated in support of her contention, as shown in the memorandum of September 1, 1870, "that France had maliciously violated the peace between the two countries without any good reason, while Germany was fighting for a good cause," and further stated, "although the shipment of arms to belligerents was in strict form of neutrality, yet the German nation had a right to expect of England under the circumstances at least a favoring attitude," insisting, as revealed by the note, "that it was beyond human comprehension that she would not take sides with one party or the other in a struggle like the present one." "What is the use of fighting, right or wrong, in the eyes of the world," says the German memorandum, "if the world remains indifferent to the justice of the cause?" To this note the English ambassador replied that Germany was asking her to do something that she (Germany) had failed to do in the Crimean War, namely, failed to prohibit the exportation of arms and munitions of war from Germany to Russia.

The German ambassador replied that a different political situation was then involved, saying that—

> Then there was not a struggle of life and death between two powers of equal importance, but a war in a distant territory and for remote interests, a war of four against one, in which the material existence of England was not jeopardized.

England refused at that time to place an embargo on shipments of arms and munitions of war into France; but it is indeed interesting to note the arguments then advanced by the ambassador of Germany in support of Germany's right to export arms and munitions of war into Russia and the contention now advanced by some in this country as well as some foreign Governments that this country should change its policy at this time in the exportation of arms and munitions of war to the belligerents.

Mr. STERLING. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. What did Germany do in the Spanish-American War? Did Germany sell munitions of war to Spain?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; Germany in the Spanish-American War did traffic in arms and munitions of war, even though at that time she was a neutral power.

Mr. STERLING. Did this country request them not to do so?

Mr. HARRISON. It did not.

And in following the practices of neutral nations in the exportation of arms and munitions of war to belligerents down to the present day we find that Germany and Austria and England, as well as many other of the European nations, during the Russo-Turkish War exported to a more or less extent arms and munitions of war to one or the other of the belligerents.

In the Russo-Japanese War, as well as in the war between Italy and Turkey, again Germany and Austria and England sold to either one or the other of the warring nations. In the Balkan War no industries flourished quite as much nor greater wealth from any other source came to Germany as through the manufacture and sale of arms and munitions of war to one or the other of the Balkan States. And again, sirs, in the Boer War, while England, the proud and strong, patrolled the coasts of southern Africa, preventing the heroic Boers from obtaining munitions of war from any nation, Germany as well as other neutral powers exported arms and munitions of war to this mighty mistress of the seas.

And so it has been, Mr. Chairman, that throughout the history of nations, by precedent on precedent, the very correct policy now being pursued by this Government respecting the exportation of arms and munitions of war to belligerents has been upheld, and it seems to me, in view of this array of precedents showing the unbroken custom of neutral nations, that it is going very far indeed for citizens of America to criticize and find fault with this, the established policy of the Government.

I shall not devote any time in this presentation to a discussion of a change of our established policy being construed by any nation now at war as an unneutral act, but I am very clearly of the opinion that where nations have relied on the custom of neutral nations to practice freedom of trade in arms and munitions of war with belligerents, if that custom should be changed in time of war—during a war—it could be construed, and with more justification, as an unneutral act than for a belligerent to construe our present policy as one of unneutrality.

Neither shall I devote in this presentation any time to a discussion of the question whether a change from our present policy would necessitate a constant preparedness for war on our part. Suffice it to say that I am quite sure if we as a Nation knew that in case of war we would be prevented from buying arms and munitions of war from the neutral nations of the world, that the people of America would demand from us an adequate supply of war material, to be continually manufactured and constantly kept on hand. The question of preparedness would then, in my opinion, be a livelier and greater question before the American people than is now dreamed of by the most radical militarists.

But, Mr. Chairman, there are other reasons than those I have already stated why a change in our policy on this important question would be embarrassing and confusing. In the first place, the question would be asked, What would you include in the term "contraband of war"? The nations of the world have never been able to agree on what is contraband of war. The nearest approach to it was embodied in the declaration of London; but that declaration was never ratified by all of the great nations of the world, and could not be applied in this immediate case.

What a gentleman from Missouri might desire to include in the list as contraband articles might not meet the approval of other Representatives here. He would doubtless feel that horses and mules from Missouri, for instance, which are necessary in the conduct of a war, should not be included in the list of things contraband of war. He would certainly feel the same interest relative to protecting, in so far as his constituents sell at a profit, that which they are most interested in, as I would be desirous—or any other Member on the floor of this House would be desirous—of preventing an embargo on some things raised or articles made in my district which are used in modern warfare.

There is hardly anything now raised or made that does not enter more or less into modern warfare. Things which to-day are innocent may become to-morrow indispensable for war purposes. The marvelous development of chemistry and mechanics make necessary the greatest revolutions in the technique of war in the shortest time.

One of the important questions with which we have had to contend since the war has been the British order in council placing cotton on the contraband list. Due to that action alone, the section from which I hail has lost on its cotton crop alone hundreds of millions of dollars. I am quite sure, therefore, that the people of my section are more interested in having the embargo lifted from cotton, so that it can move into all the ports of the world, than they are in seeing legislation enacted that would further hamper its sale and cripple the industry.

And what applies to cotton in my section applies with equal force to those sections which produce copper and coal and iron ore and foodstuffs, or from those sections that raise horses and mules and cattle, or those that manufacture aeroplanes, automobiles, cannon and other arms and munitions of war.

But, Mr. Chairman, greater confusion than this would arise if, because of the strength of the allies' navy, this embargo should be ordered to insure equality among the warring nations; then, as very aptly stated by the Secretary of State in his note to Austria-Hungary on August 22, 1915, it could be contended with equal fairness that—

> A belligerent who lacks the necessary munitions to contend successfully on land ought to be permitted to purchase them from neutrals, while a belligerent with an abundance of war stores or with the power to produce them should be debarred from such traffic.

It would, sirs, compel this country to sit in judgment and study and watch every movement of every army of the belligerents to keep accurately the number of men enlisted, furloughed, killed, captured, or wounded; the amount of arms and ammunition manufactured, imported, used, captured, or destroyed; to ascertain the condition of crops, the amount of land tilled, products raised, and goods manufactured or imported; in short, to keep informed about everything and every incident that might weaken or strengthen one or the other of the contending forces, so that this country, then, in order to show perfect fairness and equality of action might make or rescind orders that would either strengthen or weaken the resources of the belligerent nations.

It would—

As very pertinently stated by Secretary Lansing—> involve this Nation in a mass of perplexities which would obscure the whole field of international obligation, produce economic confusion, and deprive all commerce and industry of legitimate fields of enterprise.

Sirs, the best course for this Nation as a neutral power to pursue is the course which it has pursued, namely, respecting all the rights of belligerents, but demanding under established international law the observance of every neutral right. [Applause.]

Sirs, speaking not as a partisan but as an American, I have faith and confidence in the judgment and wisdom and patriotism of President Wilson and Secretary of State Lansing, and as one member of the Foreign Affairs Committee of this House I shall never vote for, but shall persistently oppose, the enactment of any law that would prohibit the freedom of this a neutral Nation in the exportation of arms and munitions of war to the belligerent nations of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] not more than 15 minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, because I do not like the society of powder magazines, nor association with dynamite bombs, it has been with great reluctance that I have got my own consent to say a few words about conditions in Mexico, conditions which I am convinced are loaded to overflowing with danger and trouble.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the depressing influence which I feel to-day, and which reminds me of those days just preceding the Spanish War, when there was the same nervous, tense anxiety in this House that there is to-day, is not well founded. It is because I do not like to handle such dangerous subjects, Mr. Chairman, and, further, because I always try to compress to an irreducible minimum whatever I have to say in this House that I have reduced my few remarks, which will take but a few minutes, to writing.

I think the conference between the Secretary of State and the diplomatic representatives of six Spanish-American Governments did well to advise the recognition of Venustiano Carranza as the head of whatever government exists in Mexico and that the President did the proper—and at the time the only possible thing—in adopting the suggestion.

Since the enforced retirement of Huerta Mexico has been the bloody theater of contending factions, doing all sorts of crimes, from assaults on women and murder to the looting of banks, all in the name of liberty. It was an intolerable condition, and some one had to be recognized. Somewhere and on some one the responsibilities of government had to lodge. The choice lay between Carranza and Villa, the unspeakable.

Since these troubles began, Mr. Chairman, I have tried to do my duty as a citizen and a Representative in Congress by keeping quiet and leaving the whole matter in the hands of the President and the Secretary of State. I have been silent even when I thought serious mistakes were being made, and have not hesitated to express my approval after the fact when I thought the right thing had been done. I am not on my feet to-day for the purpose of criticizing anyone. I am venturing to speak a few words to-day because I feel that it is a duty I owe my State, my section of the State, the people of the border, and my conscience. In a broader way, sir, it is a duty I owe the whole country, for I shall venture a warning, which, if heeded, may avoid trouble for the people of Maine as well as the people of Texas, Arizona, and California.

Horrors in Mexico are cumulative. Who has forgotten the outrages at Durango, when a city was destroyed; the murders in the Cumbre Tunnel, when innocent men, women, and children were shot, burned, and suffocated by a bandit who, on the border, was known to be a confederate in crime of Doroteo Arango, otherwise and worse known as Pancho Villa? Some of you may have forgotten that the particular thief and murderer who executed this horror fled to the United States, where he was arrested and confined in a stockade at Fort Bliss, which is near El Paso. In this so-called imprisonment he was better fed and cared for than ever in his whole worthless and criminal life, and after a few months was released.

Americans have been murdered singly and in squads. They have been shot when going peacefully about their business in Mexico and even on their own territory. They have mysteriously disappeared and never been heard of again. Those of us who live on or near the border have a distinct idea of their fate.

They have even invaded our territory under military command, and with a semblance of organization, killing Americans and stealing their property.

Mr. Chairman, the people of the border have been patient under an unparalleled series of outrages. They do not want war with Mexico, but they do want security for their lives and property. Their patience is nearly exhausted, and if some relief, absolute, reliable, and continued, is not quickly given them they may not always remain patient. Their anger is great and growing. I deplore any rash action on their part, and I sincerely, fervently hope there will be none, but he must be blind who can not see the danger.

I believe in Pan Americanism. I have pleaded for it for years. I believe that it will, when properly developed and faithfully lived up to, bring a better understanding and more cordial relations. I believe that a corollary of it will be an effective means of preventing the recurrence of such conditions as those that have disgraced and ruined Mexico. When the internal affairs of any Republic in either of the Americas become a scandal and a nuisance, when the offensive odors of them cross international lines, and the cries of the victims fall on the ears of neighbors, threatening the peace of other countries, a Pan-American union could and should end them.

The Pan-American spirit is new. As yet it is a sentiment. But it can be quickly translated into international law, which so often has been born of circumstances and the necessities of humanity. It has come much earlier than expected, but has not the time actually arrived when, if peace is to be maintained, it should be invoked and vigorously applied?

Again I say that horror piled on horror, crime treading on the heels of crime, have exhausted the patience of the people of the border States, and they will be satisfied with nothing short of the capture and execution of the murderers of the 16 Americans who are the latest victims of anarchy which has gone on for five years. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, there is an ugly story, in connection with this crime, to the effect that these Americans, who were going back to Mexico to their regular work and who relied on the de facto government for protection, asked for and were refused a military escort. I hope it is not true. If it is, it will show that the Government of Mexico is indifferent to its obligations, unfaithful to the trust we gave them with recognition.

There is also a story, and this I believe, that Villa gave an order a few weeks ago to his bandit followers "to kill all Americans, burn and loot." Whether he gave the order or not it has been done.

Again I venture to say that the rising anger of Americans on the border is dangerous and can not be trifled with. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from the Philippine Islands [Mr. QUEZON].

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Chairman, on January 7 there was inserted in the Senate proceedings in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article alleged to have been written by a Member of this House, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN]. On the following day the distinguished Senator who had had this article inserted requested—and the request was granted by the Senate—that the paragraph of this article which refers to me be stricken from the permanent RECORD. To this paragraph I wish to call the attention of the House. The paragraph says:

> The Governor General, the other part of the lawmaking and appointing machine, has publicly proclaimed his indebtedness to MANUEL QUEZON for his appointment, and QUEZON is the leader of the movement to throw off so-called American "oppression and tryanny," and is the accredited custodian of the Philippine campaign fund, said to reach many thousands of dollars, collected in the Islands for some time from the servants, clerks, officeholders, merchants, and others to "influence Congress" to pass the Jones or any other old bill providing for "independence." Money can not put legislation through Congress, and any statement that it is used to control Senators or Members is a slander to our national lawmakers and an imposition upon the innocent and confiding ones who give up their hard-earned money for said purpose. The Congress would render a public service, vindicate its Members, and protect hundreds of poor, needy, and innocent people by putting an end to the collection of this fund to "influence Congress." An investigation should be made to ascertain all the facts, who originated the scheme, the names and occupations of all subscribers, whether voluntary or forced contributions, the amounts, method of collection, how the funds are distributed, and names of persons to whom paid, etc.

Mr. Chairman, I confess that what I have read sounds rather ugly to me; but, being conscious of my limited knowledge of the intricacies of the English language, I am withholding judgment until I am positive that I know the impression that was intended to be conveyed to the reader by the author of these statements. Is it alleged or suggested that I or any other person authorized by me or any other person, with my knowledge, was engaged in collecting money in the Philippine Islands avowedly for the purpose of using this money to control Senators and Representatives? Is it alleged or suggested that any person in the Philippine Islands, under my authority or with my knowledge, has been collecting funds, informing the people from whom this money was collected that such funds were to be used in the United States for the purpose of controlling Senators and Representatives, and that I, knowing that this money has been so collected, have taken that money, kept it in my possession, used it for that purpose, or for my own personal ends, or have not used it at all?

Mr. Chairman, I have been holding the position of Resident Commissioner for the last five years, and I can say before God and man that my hand and my conscience are not only clean of any stain of improper conduct in the performance of my duties, but that I have done everything that I could to promote the interest that I was called upon to defend as I saw the path indicated by my duty. [Applause.] I want to know if now or ever I have done anything with Members of either House of this Congress that would indicate that I was attempting unduly to influence their minds in favor of the cause that I am representing here? If it is an improper action to argue with Members of Congress my views on the Philippine question, if it is illegitimate for me to act toward Members of Congress as one gentleman should act toward another, then I confess most willingly that I am guilty of improper action. If it is a crime to come here and advocate independence or any other policy that in my opinion should be advocated in the interest of my people, if it is a crime to propagate my views, if it is a crime to appeal to the hearts and minds of Members, then I am guilty. But, Mr. Chairman, if there is any suggestion that I have endeavored to promote the cause that I represent by attempting improperly to influence Members of Congress by the use of money or in any other way, if there be such suggestions, I want to say that it is a slander upon me without the slightest foundation in fact. [Applause.]

There is a committee in the Philippine Islands composed of men prominent in their professions, in business, and in the government service which for some time has been collecting money, and the treasurer of this committee is Mr. Thomas Earnshaw, a brother of my colleague, the other Resident Commissioner from the Philippine Islands, who is a wealthy and an honest man. Actually the amount of money collected monthly amounts to about the large sum of $500. This money was collected for the purpose of sending out literature to propagate the views of those who believed in Philippine independence. Is it improper to use money for the purpose of informing the American people as to conditions really existing in the Philippine Islands? The only thing wrong about it, I think, Mr. Chairman, is that the sum is so ridiculously small in amount that very little can be done with it. I wish that instead of $500 a month we had thousands of dollars a month. We then could and would be sending books to every household in this country, written by eminent and distinguished Filipinos, especially the books of Dr. Rizal, so that the American people might know that there are intelligent and able men in the Philippine Islands. We could and would have been sending photographs to every corner of this country, not of naked Igorots, which have been freely distributed in the past, leading the American people to believe that we are all naked, uncivilized men in the Philippine Islands, but photographs of our wonderful and old churches, that speak of our Christian civilization lasting 300 years; of our schools and colleges, both during the Spanish and the American régime, that would speak of our education; of our houses, that would speak of our social life. We should be using that money not to control Members of Congress but to inform the American people as to our state of civilization and as to our desires, so that the American public, which in the last resort has the final voice on the Philippine question, may intelligently pass upon that subject. Is there anything wrong about that?

Mr. Chairman, I wish it could be ascertained how much money has been expended to propagate views contrary to Philippine independence, how much money has been expended to issue literature describing conditions in the Philippine Islands that contain statements reflecting upon the Filipino people. And yet I do not criticize that campaign. Any man has a right to present his views before the American people.

A book written two years ago by Dean C. Worcester, who was secretary of the interior in the Philippine Islands, quite an expensive book, which has been distributed freely throughout this country, and Members of this House have received it, not knowing where it came from. This book is opposed to independence and some one paid the price for its free distribution. Is there anything wrong about that?

Mr. Chairman, not a cent of that so-called Philippine campaign fund is spent without the knowledge of my colleague [Mr. EARNSHAW], who is sitting here, and myself, and Mr. EARNSHAW knows as well as I do that not a cent of that money has been ever used or attempted to be used to control Members of Congress of either House. [Applause.] Surely it has not been used to enrich myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. How much more time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. QUEZON. Can I have 10 minutes more? There are more things I would like to call to the attention of the House.

Mr. FERRIS. See if you can not conclude in five minutes. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. QUEZON. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I rise to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], in view of the vast importance of this subject to the gentleman whose integrity has been impeached, or at least attacked, in the public prints repeatedly during this last summer, and in view of the importance of the subject to his countrymen, 8,000 miles away, if he can not yield 10 minutes additional at this time?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I will take five minutes away from the committee, and I will yield to the gentleman 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from the Philippines is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. QUEZON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have been in public life almost ever since I left college. I come from a very modest family in a very small town in the Philippines. There is not a human being in the town where I was born who does not know me and my people. I was elected as governor of my Province in 1905. It has been repeatedly stated, and it is suggested in another part of the article that I am commenting upon, that I am a politician; meaning, I suppose, that I am very much interested in a political machine which has been promoting my political career and whose interest I have been promoting. I can say right here and now, in answer to all those attacks, that I have never been elected to any public office by any political machine. I was elected governor of the Province of Tayabas as an independent candidate, and I was opposed by the two political parties in that Province, each of which had a candidate of its own.

After I was elected governor I entered the Nationalist Party. Why? It was my duty to promote the interests of my Province and I wanted to be associated with those people who thought as I did, whose counsels I desired, and in whose integrity and honesty I had confidence. After having served some time as governor I resigned this position to become a candidate for the assembly. Upon presenting my candidacy to the assembly I withdrew from the party once more, not wishing to be elected through the use of any political machinery. I presented my candidacy as an independent. And, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that while I had a hard fight to become governor, because I was not well known in my Province, I did not have to fight at all to be elected to the assembly. Having been governor of Tayabas for a year and a half and the people having had an opportunity to learn all about me and my public work, I was unanimously elected, by every voter in my district. [Applause.] I say unanimously because my opponent received only the votes of his immediate relatives, 20 or 30 persons.

Once in the assembly, I again joined the Nationalist Party—the party whose principles I believed in. I did it not because I wanted to advance my political career, but because I could not play a solo by myself. [Laughter.] If I was to write or help write legislation, I had to cooperate with and have the cooperation of those who thought as I did. After serving some time in the assembly I was elected floor leader, and two years later to the position I now hold. I have been twice unanimously reelected by both houses of our legislature. It is true that I am now and have been for some time one of the leaders of the Nationalist Party, but I have had very little to do with the purely local political campaigns of the party. Here is what the article I refer to says of me on this subject:

> QUEZON is one of the Commissioners from the Islands to the American Congress, is very much in politics, and naturally anxious to place as many of his partisans on the Government pay roll as possible.

It is suggested that I have been asking Gov. Gen. Harrison to appoint my political followers in the Philippine Islands. Had I done this, there would have been nothing wrong about it, but the truth is that I do not owe the governor a single appointment. It has been stated that Gov. Gen. Harrison publicly acknowledged his indebtedness to me for his appointment as Governor General. Nothing, Mr. Chairman, could please me more than to be able to tell my people that I am of such importance in this country that I can secure the appointment of a Governor General on my mere dictum. [Applause.] Unfortunately, I can not say that, because it is not true. To my knowledge Gov. Gen. Harrison has never made such a statement. I know he has not said it in my presence. True, he has stated that he was gratified to learn that I was in favor of his appointment. But, Mr. Chairman, if it is true that the opinion of the Resident Commissioner from the Philippine Islands is consulted by the President of the United States or by any other officer of this Government on any question of importance affecting the islands, nothing could be more proper than that they should do so. What are we supposed to be here for? Why do we represent the Philippines in the United States? [Applause.]

Are we supposed to come here and draw $7,500 a year, plus $2,000 for mileage, simply to sit around and look pretty? [Laughter.] The position of Resident Commissioner was created by an act of the Congress of the United States for the purpose of giving the Filipino people an opportunity to be represented before the departments of this Government, executive as well as legislative. If you read the language of the law you will see this is a fact. Is it a crime that our advice is sought? Is it a crime for use to volunteer our opinion on matters affecting the islands? Mr. Chairman, I will say right now that if I am supposed to be in the United States only to draw salary, and can not express what I believe to be the rights of my people; if I can not object to or indorse an appointment for the government of the Philippine Islands, then I want to resign my post, for I should be ashamed to receive my salary; I should want to go home, because I do not see what good I could do here. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from the Philippines has again expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Chairman, before I proceed any further I want to say this: If it is suggested that I have done something wrong, or authorized anyone to do something wrong, in connection wth my work in this country, I shall welcome an investigation. But I do not want to see it used to delay Philippine legislation, or to divert the minds of the American people from the real issue that is before them.

There is another statement in this article about which I want to say a few words, and I am going to read it as fast as I can. The gentleman from Tennessee says of me:

> Having served in the revolutionary army against the United States, we can imagine he is not shedding tears when the political guillotine decapitates former American soldiers in the interest of his political supporters—

And so on.

Mr. Chairman, there is a suggestion here that I want to refute. It is hinted at, that because I have served in the Philippine Army I am holding rancor in my heart toward American veterans. My best American friends in the Philippine Islands are men against whom I fought during the war. [Applause.] I have the greatest admiration for Americans who, in answer to the call of their country, have gone to the Philippine Islands and fought us, just as I believe—at least, I hope—that those Americans admire the Filipinos who had the courage to fight them. [Applause.] There is no rancor in my heart. These men were doing their duty as I knew I was doing my duty. They tried to kill me during the war, and I tried to kill them. [Laughter.] But men who have enough red blood in their veins to come out and fight for their country have big enough hearts to respect those against whom they are fighting. [Applause.]

I want to say this again: My best American friends in the islands are Judge Ross, who was a captain of Volunteers and a Democrat, and Maj. Hartigan, a Republican. I could recite a long list of others, but that would take up too much of the time of the House.

Mr. Chairman, my advocacy of independence is not inspired by rancor or ill will toward Americans, but by love of freedom. The day will yet come when it will be seen that I have been a good friend of the Americans in the Philippine Islands, that I have looked after their interests there as I am looking after the interests of my country here. The day will yet come when it will be demonstrated that in advocating the independence of my country I have been moved by high motives, just as I give credit for good motives to those who are taking an attitude opposed to mine.

> Good name in man and woman, dear my lord,
> Is the immediate jewel of their souls:
> Who steals my purse steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
> 'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
> But he that filches from me my good name
> Robs me of that which not enriches him
> And makes me poor indeed.

[Prolonged applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma has consumed all of his time.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I take full responsibility for the article or letter published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on the 7th day of the present month. I am responsible for every page of it, every line of it, and every word of it. When I penned it I knew I had back of it information which could not be challenged.

I have been exceedingly careful since I have been a Member of this House in being accurate and truthful in what I have said to my colleagues and to the country. I have no apologies to make for any statement in the letter or article, and when the opportunity comes for a discussion of the Philippine bill, then I will go more into detail.

I ask the Commissioner now who has just addressed the House if he knows Newton W. Gilbert, of Manila?

Mr. QUEZON. I do.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is he a truthful and honorable gentleman? Will the gentleman stand up and answer?

Mr. QUEZON. That is a question, Mr. Chairman, that I can not answer until a concrete question as to what Newton W. Gilbert has done or said is put to me.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is your answer, then?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes; that is my answer.

Mr. AUSTIN. He served in this House from the great State of Indiana, and he had a clean and an honorable record. He was afterwards appointed on account of his fitness and his character to a high judicial office in the Philippines by Theodore Roosevelt. Later he was made a commissioner and the vice governor of the Philippine Islands; and if the gentleman here representing the Philippine Islands [Mr. QUEZON] can not testify to his high standing and credibility, every honorable American in the Philippine Islands who knows him will testify to it, and his colleagues with whom he lately served in this House will certify to his truthfulness and his high character.

I based this statement, to which the gentleman takes exception, on a conversation with Newton W. Gilbert, in which conversation he said when he asked the Resident Commissioner [Mr. QUEZON] for what purpose he was using this money, collected according to the statements of Army officers, some of whom I have known for many years, from their servants, from merchants, officeholders, and employees of cigar factories, his reply was that he was using it to influence Congress in the passage of legislation looking to the independence of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Not now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. According to ex-Gov. Gilbert's statement, he asked the gentleman from the Philippine Islands [Mr. QUEZON] how he was influencing Congress, and the gentleman named one instance, namely, that he gave a banquet at the Metropolitan Club and issued 57 invitations to the Members of Congress, and every invitation was accepted, and according to this statement that was one of the methods by which the gentleman [Mr. QUEZON] was using this campaign fund to influence the Members of Congress.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. AUSTIN. Not in 10 minutes. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will get me more time——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I will yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman now permit a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. I will be very glad to if the gentleman will be as anxious to have me given time as he was to have time given to the gentleman who represents the Philippine Islands.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move that in some way we give the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee 10 minutes additional.

Mr. FERRIS. I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is already allotted and a motion of that kind will not be in order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he was at the banquet at the Metropolitan Club?

Mr. AUSTIN. I was not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I was there; and Gov. Gilbert, of whom the gentleman speaks, was there. Not only that, but a gentleman whose name I have forgotten, but I think his name was Martin, and who was at that time an official in the Philippine Islands, was the man in whose honor the banquet was given, and he occupied the seat of honor.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Martin is the present Vice Governor General, who comes from the State of Kansas?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It was in his honor that it was given.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, then, according to the statement which Gov. Gilbert says Mr. QUEZON made, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is one of the Members of Congress influenced by a dinner at the Metropolitan Club. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman——

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, no more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I know since that banquet the gentleman from Wisconsin has been very enthusiastic for Philippine independence [laughter], and he has been exceedingly desirous to have the gentleman from the Philippine Islands [Mr. QUEZON] talk all the morning. I think it was a good investment, as far as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] was concerned. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. AUSTIN. You must get me some more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] yield the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] some more time?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, in this article there is not an intimation, there is nothing upon which the talented gentleman from the Philippines could construe even indirectly a suggestion that he retained any of this money. There is no question but what the gentleman had a right to use this money in a campaign of publicity.

When this remark was repeated to me as coming from the gentleman [Mr. QUEZON], stated to a man whose credibility stands as high in the city of Manila as the gentleman who has just addressed the House, and the gentleman knows it, I thought it my duty, in writing my experiences and observations in the Philippine Islands—I thought it my duty to my colleagues in the House—to repeat that statement, and I did it in the letter or article published in the RECORD on January 7.

I am glad the gentleman has an opportunity to go before the American people with his campaign of publicity. I want him given every opportunity in this House, for freedom of speech is an American blessing; but the gentleman knows that when I attempted to exercise my right in the Philippine Islands to voice my judgment and my opinion he criticized me in an interview in the Manila papers for daring to discuss political questions in the Philippine Islands, questions affecting not only the Filipino people, but vitally affecting more than 5,000 Americans in the islands, Americans who have invested $100,000,000 to develop the gentleman's country, to bring it prosperity and blessings, and to give employment to the natives at increased wages.

Why, the gentleman objected to an interview I gave out and sent me a message requesting, in my future utterances, to tone them down to suit him. He carried our congressional party to a native banquet, and we listened in the public streets and in a banquet hall to seven or eight speeches, all delivered in Spanish, without an interpreter, and the gentleman delivered one of these speeches 25 minutes in Spanish and 5 minutes in the English language. A political discussion in a language unknown to three or four Members of this House, without an interpreter. The speeches were on the Jones bill and the independence of the Philippine Islands. The gentleman reserved to himself the exclusive right of discussing in our presence, in a foreign language, political questions in the Philippine Islands, and yet criticized and sought to prevent me, as an American citizen, from expressing my honest sentiments in the public press on this great question, involving the future welfare and happiness of 8,000,000 native people and more than 5,000 splendid Americans in the Philippine Islands, whose property would be destroyed as in Mexico, whose lives would be endangered as in Mexico, whenever the American Army and Navy leave the islands, and the fate of Americans there placed in the hands of the Filipino people, untrained and unfitted for civil government. Their leader proved to me he was opposed to freedom of speech unless the utterances were in accord with his views and his opinions.

He speaks of his election as governor of a Province. A governor in that Province afterwards appealed to the Philippine people that there was more American blood upon his sword, or bolo, than upon that of any of his rival candidates, and for that reason he was entitled to win, and he was elected.

Mr. QUEZON. Is the gentleman referring to me?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; not to you.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EVANS. In the discussion of this question it appears to me that the rules of the House ought to be strictly observed and that a Member ought not to be spoken to in the second person.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is right; it is improper to address any Member in the second person, and the Member should rise and first address the Chair.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, is it not a breach of the rules to talk back to the Chairman without obtaining permission from the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has said that it was against the rules to address any Member without first addressing the Chair.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, my colleagues, Messrs. MILLER, BRITTEN, EDWARDS, and BRUMBAUGH, were all in the Philippine Islands during the past summer. In the interest of fair play, in the interest of patriotism and just legislation, would that every Member of this House could visit the Philippine Islands. If they were to visit those islands, not under an escort of native politicians, but given an opportunity to go with the local American business men of standing and character, and study the conditions in the Philippine Islands—if they would do that, no American Member of Congress would ever return here and say that the Philippine people were prepared for self-government. If Members of Congress would do that, they would come back knowing that it would be a crime on the part of the American Government to turn them loose to be captured and controlled by Japan.

Mr. RUCKER. Why do not those Americans come home?

Mr. AUSTIN. We invited them to go there and spend a hundred million dollars, and now my colleague from Missouri sends them the same unpatriotic message that Mr. Wilson sent to Americans in Mexico. [Applause.]

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I deny that. The gentleman ought to be careful in his remarks.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understood the gentleman to say that they ought to come back.

Mr. RUCKER. I do if the conditions are as the gentleman describes them; why do they not come home? Why do they not get out?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is the same message which Mr. Wilson sent to Americans in Mexico.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from the Philippine Islands [Mr. QUEZON] one minute.

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Chairman, I want to make the statement that I have never said or intimated to Mr. Newton W. Gilbert that I try to influence Members of Congress by inviting them to dinner. The statement is so ridiculous that I do not think it needs an answer. I have invited Members of Congress to dinner and I have been invited to dinner by them. I was a guest of a Member of Congress yesterday who is against Philippine independence. Perhaps he was trying to influence me and make me change my attitude. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, my personal friend the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], who has just addressed the House, has been a Member of the House during the entire period that I have. I believe he is as well known to the membership of the House as any man in it, and every man here knows that he is fearless, strong, vigorous, and honest; that what he says he believes to be right and that what he does he believes to be the proper thing to do. I also know that among the predominant traits of his nature is the splendid characteristic of treating justly and fairly all questions and all persons, no matter what the situation, no matter where the place. He would not by implication or by the strained twist of any language he chanced to use ever be put in the position of doing an injustice or departing a hair's breadth from the exact truth. He has expressed his position this morning, and his earnestness testifies to his deep sincerity.

I now wish to join with him in that part of his remarks wherein he stated that his quoted words do not imply misappropriation of campaign funds on the part of the Philippine Resident Commissioner. I exceedingly regret that there has been given to the discussion at this time any suggestions of a somewhat personal nature. Responding to the same impulses that characterize my friend from Tennessee, I honestly feel that I ought to say a word in reference to the Resident Commissioner [Mr. QUEZON].

I have had an opportunity of knowing him well and intimately from the first day he set foot on Washington soil. His office was directly across the hall from my own for a period of three years. During that time and since I have been intimately associated and connected with investigations of Philippine affairs and with practically all the people who are interested in that subject. I have watched and studied with the utmost care the activities and movements calculated to further the cause of Philippine independence. I have carefully noted both in this country and in the Philippines the work of Commissioner QUEZON, and have specifically inquired into the things he stands for at home as well as here in America. I believe it is but fair to him to say, with full knowledge of the facts, that he has given the cause to which he has devoted himself the fullness of his heart's devotion, the utmost of his unusual talent, and every cent he could personally contribute or has ever received to be employed for that purpose. [Applause.]

In fact, from my standpoint, I think he has labored too hard and too successfully, in that he has created in this country a more favorable view of Philippine independence among many sincere people than circumstances really warrant. In this work he has been greatly aided by his courteous and gentlemanly manner, by his pleasing address, and by the power of the facile orator possessed by him in so eminent a degree.

At home in the Philippines he has great power among his people, partly because of these qualities I have mentioned, partly because he is their national representative in the propaganda for independence, and partly because they know that he is not only an able but also an honest man.

I thus speak of him, Mr. Chairman, because it is his due, and in order that there may be effectively removed any possible suspicion relative to the exact meaning of the words employed by my friend from Tennessee.

I know about this fund and have known about it for two or three years. I agree with my friend from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] that all political propaganda requires publicity, in the Philippine Islands as well as in the United States or elsewhere in the world, and legitimate collections and expenditures therefor no one can severely criticize. I am not in sympathy with some of the objects sought to be attained by this particular propaganda. The gentleman knows that full well; so does the membership of this House. I believe all agitations for immediate independence in the Philippine Islands, or at any time in the near future, is most injurious to the welfare and well-being of the Filipino people. Yet I feel it but fair to those Filipinos who do believe in early independence that they have the opportunity of expressing to the people of the United States the convictions and opinions that they entertain. But having in mind the activities of the gentleman from the Philippine Islands [Mr. QUEZON] during the last five years, both in America and in the Philippines, I am quite amazed that he has accomplished as much as he has even by combining with the funds contributed his own salary and mileage. To the cause of Philippine independence Señor QUEZON has devoted not only his heart but also every resource at his command. His service has been that of complete and honest devotion.

So I believe my friend from Tennessee was right when he said that neither the Resident Commissioner's hands nor his conscience are in the least tainted by any misapplication or misuse of any of the funds contributed by his countrymen. I believe firmly from the bottom of my heart they have all been utilized for the purpose for which they were dedicated, and in ways entirely legitimate. I attended the dinner at the Metropolitan Club that has been discussed. It was in honor of high officials of the insular government of the Philippines, and to it, as I understood, all members of the Insular Affairs Committees of both House and Senate were invited as a mark of courtesy and without any political consideration or purpose. I believe I know every Filipino of prominence now active in public or business life. I have visited every corner of the Philippine Islands, some places several times. I think I know and understand the Filipino people pretty well. I believe it is but fair to say that Mr. QUEZON——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can I not have another minute?

Mr. LENROOT. I regret that I have no more time to yield.

Mr. FERRIS. I yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I thank the gentleman. I believe it is but just to the gentleman to say that, in my honest judgment, he has accomplished more for the cause to which he is devoted by reason of his peculiar talents and capacity than could be accomplished by any other Filipino or group of Filipinos that could be named. He is par excellence the man for the work. The Filipino people are rapidly developing, and already comprise many splendid men and women. Señor QUEZON is one of the very best of them all. If all of his people to-day possessed his talents and capabilities, or those of his splendid colleague, Señor EARNSHAW, no man could look into their faces and deny their capacity to maintain a government of their own.

Señor QUEZON rose, a poor boy from a poor family, in a poor town, to become a leader of his race. For this splendid achievement he should be thankful to the God that gave him talents and grateful to the Stars and Stripes, the flag that shelters and protects free institutions, under whose folds alone can be found opportunity for such a career.

With one possible exception I believe Señor QUEZON is the most influential Filipino among the people of his race. He has attained to this degree of eminence by his ability and conduct, and especially by his courage. No other Filipino of my acquaintance has his courage to entertain and express opinions that may not be popular with his people. He has come to be a conservative, steadying factor among his people, and to my personal knowledge the American Government in the Philippines has been indebted to him for true loyalty and efficient support. While he was, of course, a soldier of the revolution, being a Tagalog, and living where the revolution was rampant, nevertheless, since the oath of allegiance was taken there has never been any faltering or wavering on his part in utmost devotion and allegiance to the sovereignty of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] or my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to give me a few minutes in which to reply to the statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. FERRIS. Will not two minutes be enough?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I trust that the gentleman can let me have five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Debate was closed by unanimous consent, and I have promised the time to other speakers. I can let the gentleman have three minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman at my right [Mr. LENROOT] says that he will give me two minutes if the gentleman from Oklahoma will give me three.

Mr. FERRIS. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, because of the statement by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] that ever since that dinner [laughter] I have been very strongly in favor of granting the Filipinos immediate independence, I desire to call his attention to the fact—although it is a fair inference from his remarks that he does not deem the facts to be material—that what I said when the Philippine bill was under consideration on October 2, 1914, shows that on the question of independence for the islands, my position is very different from what one would be led to think from his statement. I hold in my hand the RECORD of that date:

> Mr. Chairman, I would not to-day vote to give to the Philippines immediate, absolute independence. I do not know that 20 years from now I would be prepared to vote to grant them absolute independence. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Oklahoma declare in effect that we are never to give freedom to the Filipino people, and that we are forever to retain the Philippine Islands. This has raised an issue never before injected into the politics of this country, an issue of transcendent importance for us thoroughly to understand. In this connection I invite attention to the words of an acknowledged master of constitutional law, Judge Thomas M. Cooley:
> "The Constitution was made for the States, not for the Territories. It confers power to govern Territories, but in exercising this the United States is a sovereign dealing with dependent territory according as in its wisdom shall seem politic, wise, and just, having regard to its own interests as well as to those of the people of the Territories. * * *
> "In this dependence of the Territories upon the Central Government there is some outward resemblance to the condition of the American Colonies under the British Crown; but there are some differences which are important, and indeed vital. The first of these is that the Territorial condition is understood under the Constitution to be merely temporary and preparatory, and the people of the Territories while it continues are assured of the right to create and establish State institutions for themselves so soon as the population shall be sufficient and the local conditions suitable, while the British colonial system contained no promise or assurance of any but a dependent government indefinitely."

In this quotation from Judge Cooley we see that great master of constitutional law declaring that under the Constitution of the United States the territorial condition is merely "temporary and preparatory," and that the Constitution holds out to the people in the dependent Territories the promise that when population is sufficient and local conditions suitable they shall be granted statehood. Are we prepared to say that 8,000,000 of Filipinos, 8,000 miles across the ocean, shall be granted statehood, shall be permitted to send two representatives to the Senate of the United States, and 35 or more Representatives to vote on this floor? That was and is the question. And I voted for the preamble then before the House because I did not believe then, as I do not believe now, that the people of this Republic ever will make the Philippines a State in the great American Commonwealth. [Applause.] Therefore, I was in favor of saying that at some time in the future, a time not fixed, but when local conditions were such as to justify it, we would grant the Filipinos independence and allow them to go their way. I followed that expression of opinion with this:

Thus, according to this great jurist, our permanent retention of the Philippine Islands would mean our adoption of the British colonial system. And yet we are a Republic, and one of the cardinal tenets of our political faith is that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I entertained these views before I went to that dinner, and they were in nowise affected by it. Fortunately I am so constituted that the mere gratification of appetite does not change my convictions nor in the slightest degree influence my thought. In this respect I differ from some people of my acquaintance whose intellects and consciences are located in their stomachs. [Laughter and applause.] Mr. Chairman, among the other persons present on that occasion was the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], who has just spoken.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Oh, that is true. I was there.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He was there, and I observed particularly the ardor with which he partook of the edibles. [Laughter.]

Politics was not discussed that night at all, nor was the subject of Philippine independence even so much as mentioned. The time was passed in listening to speeches by Gov. Gilbert and Mr. Martin, the guest of honor, and by other gentlemen at the table, but not by myself nor by the gentleman from Minnesota. I did not think that anything like bribery was being attempted, nor when it was all over did I consider that I myself had been corrupted. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MAYS], a member of the committee.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, if it would not be out of order, I should like to hear a few words about the subject of this debate. This, I understand, is supposed to be a debate upon the leasing bill, but I think we have heard about every other subject discussed that has ever been discussed before this House except the leasing bill under consideration. I remember reading where Artemus Ward made a speech before an English audience, and he said that he had once seen a joke in Punch, and he did not think it was at all out of place that there should be found a joke in a comic paper. So in a debate upon a certain subject some reference should be made to the subject. Now, in this regard, we ought to have a little time to devote to this important measure. I had not intended making any remarks upon this proposition. The Members of the committee and the House understand it so much better than a new Member could possibly expect to understand it; but this series of bills that have been presented here and have been pressed before this House are of such far-reaching importance to the sparsely settled portions of the country from which some of us come that I risk a few comments upon the same.

Mr. Chairman, in this debate, referring back to the debate upon the bill, a great deal has been said to the effect that no rights are expected to be taken away from the States by this legislation, but I wish the gentleman to understand this one proposition, that throughout this debate, having listened intently to what has been said both in the committee and in the House, this point has been made, by those opposing these measures, that the rights of the States involved are taken away from them. That point has not been replied to so far in this debate.

It is admitted by the gentlemen making these speeches, it is admitted in the bill itself, that the waters of the State in the bill that we passed on last Saturday belong to the State. Nobody has replied to that, and when you undertake to grant a right by the Federal Government to use the waters of a State in order that the use of land belonging to the Government may be occupied, you are taking something away from the State in that particular. I wish the gentlemen would reply to that point. They do not dare to argue that question as to whether or not the waters of a State belong to the State, and it must be admitted that it is the flow of the water against the turbine wheels that generates the electricity or develops the power which the gentlemen here intend to sell for so much a horsepower year.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] in his speech said that if he owned a farm adjoining the farm of his neighbor, and the neighbor desired to use his farm, he could dictate the terms on which that neighbor used that farm. But suppose he owned a farm, entirely surrounding his neighbor's property, of value, could he charge so much for the right of way across that farm that it would confiscate his neighbor's property? Justice has demanded relief from such attempted acts of piracy as that, and the Government can not afford to do that which it would be quick to condemn in an individual.

Now, I do not state here that the Government should sell those power sites, for instance, for $20 an acre or for any other particular sum. But for the water belonging to the State the State should get its fair proportion of the money that is derived from these leases and from these sales. Any two people owning properties of that sort would get together and make an agreement to that effect; and I think there should be an understanding before this bill finally becomes a law that the States involved, in which these power sites are located, the States owning this water, should receive their proper compensation directly and not after a period of some 20 or 30 years.

Now, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHEELEY], the other day, commented quite at length upon State rights, but it is clear to any innocent bystander who observes the trend of his oratory that the particular kind of State rights he subscribed to were those that involved his own State. If the rights of his State would be usurped, he would not be adverse to the doctrine of State rights; but if it was a State that was weak in this body, and its rights were usurped, he would not be so particular to assert his doctrine of State rights.

If the Federal Government were reaching out its all-powerful arm to seize the waters of his State under such subterfuge and to withhold for all time the natural resources of his State, thus preventing them from contributing their proper share toward the expenses of government, the establishment of schools, the construction and maintenance of public roads, he would be quick to invoke the time-honored doctrine of States rights in all its ancient and honorable vigor.

I observe in looking at the RECORD that the gentleman's State has some things that the State of Utah does not have. And the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has also joined in the veiled threat that unless the State of Utah, for instance, appointed a utilities commission it would not get its proper share at any time of these proceeds, and would not have anything to do with the control of these receipts and the control of these properties. I remember being in Chicago not long ago and observing a great exodus from the hotels there to some town in Wisconsin. I asked what was the cause of this exodus, and they said that a great prize fight was to be pulled off in the State of Wisconsin and the people were going up there to see it. We would not allow a prize fight to take place in the State of Utah. When they wanted the Jeffries-Johnson prize fight, and offered quite a number of thousands of dollars to that State, we would not allow it to take place. What would the gentleman from Wisconsin say to our getting up and recommending that the Federal Government appoint a commission to control such things as that in the State of Wisconsin?

Mr. Chairman, I favor utility commissions, but I object to the State of Wisconsin or the State of Oklahoma or any other State dictating to the people of Utah on the subject of utility commissions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this particular bill that is before us today is worthy of some attention on the part of this House. The chairman of this committee has told us that 450,000,000,000 tons of coal have already been exploited upon the public domain—450,000,000,000 tons—and there are a great many other acres to be measured. Perhaps there will be some several hundred other billions of tons of coal. And, yet, in the committee hearings upon this question I have not seen the record that a single operator, that a single man interested in the production of coal, has ever been called before the committee. And the time of this House is occupied in the discussion of every other question when you are disposing of 450,000,000,000 tons of coal as if it were mere pocket change.

Did any prospective investor appear before the committee? Was any governor of any State, so vitally affected, invited to appear? Did any banker say he would invest money upon such a leashold interest, encumbered and jeopardized by such restrictions, and controlled by a bureau 2,000 miles away?

There were books upon the hearings and the water-power bill, like these books upon the grazing bill of similar size, but what operator has ever appeared before the committee here or before the House to discuss the question of these 450,000,000,000 tons of coal? We are using to-day about 450,000,000 tons of coal per year, not quite 500,000,000. A little less in 1915 than in 1914. Other resources are being rapidly developed to take the place of coal.

At the present rate of consumption, according to the gentleman's statement, there are enough tons of coal already measured on the public lands, to say nothing of those owned in private, to last this country 900 years if that coal were mined and used as nature most emphatically intended it to be used. Scientists tell us that at the end of 900 years coal will probably be more or less of a natural curiosity outside of the ground. It will be seen, perhaps, in the museums as a natural curiosity, and other things will take its place, such as electricity, and the like, and we should use this coal in this generation and in future generations as it is needed.

Now, I am opposed to this bill, because I believe it is an injustice to the States that we represent; that it does not do the fair thing in the distribution of whatever proceeds there will be arising from it.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] said that no right of taxation was taken away from the States, because the improvements could be taxed. The gentleman must admit the States involved very sorely need the taxes. He enjoys better schools to which to send his children, better roads over which to travel for half the burden. In the State of Wisconsin the improvements on land can be taxed, and the land also, but there is a question even as to whether or not the improvements in this case can be taxed. The chief counsel of the Reclamation Service has recently rendered an opinion to the effect that the improvements in such cases can not be taxed. Whether we agree with the chief counsel or not is not the question at this time, but the land of course can never be taxed withheld as this bill will withhold it. But whether or not we agree with the Reclamation Service, it is the most important question whether or not there will ever be any improvements under this bill to be taxed.

I do not believe that any Member of this House would invest his money on an indeterminate lease, subject to the whim of any Federal official, and put in the money necessary to equip a coal mine. Having had some experience in the last 10 years in trying to induce capital to come out into our country and invest money in coal properties of that State, I believe this bill will not be workable, because the lease is for an indeterminate period and under bureaucratic control. The bill has other provisions in it that would discourage capital from investing money. For instance, it allows all municipalities and domestic users to have the coal without charge.

Now, I am in favor of allowing all municipalities to have coal without charge. That is all right. I believe it is more important that municipalities and communities get coal without charge, if possible, than that this bill should work. But who would invest his money if everybody can have coal without charge? And who would try to build up those great industries out there? If we want to make this bill workable, we should give some kind of a term here, such as we have put in the water-power bill, and make it something more definite.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Utah yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MAYS. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman objects, as I understand, to the Federal Government deriving revenue from these leases?

Mr. MAYS. Oh, no. In speaking of the water-power bill I made the point that while the Federal Government owned the land—and we in the West never disputed that—we make the point, and it is admitted in the bill, that the State owns the water.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MAYS. My point is that it is all right for the two owners to get together and divide the proceeds on an equitable basis, the same as this gentleman and another gentleman would do who owns such property.

Mr. BORLAND. That, of course, would reduce the amount of revenue that the Federal Government would get out of the water-power bill and give part of it to the State.

Mr. MAYS. It would not necessarily reduce it. I want to say this—and the gentleman ought to know it—that when you are legislating for 17 great States of this Union you want the sympathy of the people of those States, and if you did the fair and proper thing by those people you would perhaps have their cooperation to such an extent that 50 per cent of the proceeds, under proper terms, would amount to more than 100 per cent under the present terms.

Mr. BORLAND. I want the gentleman to understand me. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the development of the West; in fact, I am a western man. But the gentleman's State has asked, or is going to ask, as I understand, for additional reclamation projects in Utah, and I would like to inquire where the gentleman expects the Federal Government is going to get the money to conduct reclamation projects if no revenue is to be derived from the public lands or from the incidental use of the public lands?

Mr. MAYS. I have not made any statement to the effect that no revenue should be derived. I have stated that there are 450,000,000,000 tons of coal that you undertake to sell at a minimum of 2 cents a ton. If you sell those 450,000,000,000 tons of coal at 2 cents a ton, you will receive the colossal figure of $9,000,000,000. Where will you spend it, I will ask the gentleman?

Mr. BORLAND. Of course from the gentleman's own statement it will not all be received at once.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman one more minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. MAYS] objects to the indeterminate term provided for in the bill. Is not the gentleman aware that an indeterminate lease is a perpetual lease, and runs and is valid so long as the conditions are preserved, and that every operator and utility prefers an indeterminate lease rather than a fixed term?

Mr. MAYS. Where do you find any operator who appeared and said that?

Mr. LENROOT. I did not say that any did appear, but I supposed the gentleman knew it.

Mr. MAYS. Is the gentleman an operator?

Mr. LENROOT. An indeterminate lease runs on forever.

Mr. MAYS. I ask the gentleman if he is an operator?

Mr. LENROOT. No; I am not an operator, but I know the legal definition of the term "indeterminate."

Mr. MAYS. Let me read:

Leases shall be made for indeterminate periods, on condition of diligent development and continuous operation of the mines—

And a great many more conditions, including one relative to eight hours a day for labor, particular conditions to which I would subscribe. But the bill provides that the execution of all these conditions shall be under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has again expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I have an understanding with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] to yield me 30 minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman now 30 minutes, so that he will not be interrupted.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Chairman, the speech I have prepared is of such length that I may not be able to finish it in one hour. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that I may extend it in the RECORD if necessary.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCGILLICUDDY). The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAYS. I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT MAPS OF ARCTIC REGIONS CORRECTED.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Chairman, my subject is one in which all civilized nations of the world are interested, namely, exploration, discovery, the study of the physical features of the globe upon which we live, and the accurate presentation of the results of such explorations, discoveries, and study on our Government maps and charts.

Scientists, historians, geographers, and educators assure me that they are deeply interested in a movement which will result in official national action on this subject of accurate Government maps, charts, and historical and geographic statistics. This is a matter of vital interest, especially to our educators, who represent the millions of children in our schools, as our Government maps and charts are quoted as the highest authority by map makers; it is of interest to historians, for the reason that their records should present truths and not fables. It is a matter of concern to the navigators of the world, not only those who hold the precious lives of travelers in their charge, but those who sail the seas in the interests of commerce, as one and all are dependent on the accuracy of the maps and charts supplied them.

Our Government should therefore use every resource at its command and every means in its power to make our own official maps and charts as accurate as is humanly possible.

With this end in view, I shall discuss briefly a few of the discoveries and reported discoveries north of the Arctic Circle.

Mr. Chairman, in the last session of Congress I introduced a resolution in this House asking for the correction of our Government maps and charts of the Arctic regions. That resolution read as follows:

Whereas the maps of the Arctic regions issued by the United States Navy Department erroneously show waterways that do not exist and lands that are really deep sea, while lands that do exist are omitted altogether; and

Whereas such false chartings on the United States maps, especially those numbered 2142 and 2560, issued by the Hydrographic Office, are a menace to navigation and exploration, and should not be distributed; and

Whereas the taxpayers of this country should not be compelled to pay for maps with erroneous chartings; and

Whereas these maps issued by the Navy Department are the authority on which the geography of the Arctic regions is taught in our schools, as they bear the official stamp of the Government: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy report to Congress the reason why the distribution of these erroneous maps is not discontinued and why corrected maps of the Arctic regions are not issued by the Navy Department.

This resolution was introduced by me on February 25, 1915. As the Congress adjourned on March 4, 1915, the remainder of the last session was too short to permit of action on a matter of such far-reaching import as that embodied in the resolution. I therefore took the subject in hand with the interested departments of our Government, namely, the Navy Department and the Coast and Geodetic Survey, with the result that I am informed by the Secretary of the Navy, the Hon. Josephus Daniels, in correspondence which I shall quote later, that Hydrographic Office (Navy Department) chart No. 2142 has been officially canceled and withdrawn from issue, and that Hydrographic Office (Navy Department) chart No. 2560 is in the hands of the engravers for necessary corrections.

To illustrate the importance of this action by the Navy Department and to demonstrate the fact that this cancellation and these corrections are not matters of small moment, but practically revolutionize the history of modern exploration and discovery, as depicted on our maps and charts, I shall explain more fully the two charts mentioned in my resolution of February 25, 1915:

Chart No. 2142 bears the title, "North America Polar Regions, Baffin Bay to Lincoln Sea, showing the recent discoveries by Civil Engineer R. E. Peary, United States Navy," and so forth.

A prominent feature of this chart is a broad channel extending from Nordenskiold Inlet on the northwest coast of Greenland to a point called Independence Bay, depicted on this chart as opening into a body of water called East Greenland Sea, at about 32° west longitude. This channel is represented on the chart as separating the northern portion of Greenland from the mainland, and is shown on the chart as Peary Channel.

This Peary Channel and East Greenland Sea are among the earliest of Mr. Peary's claimed discoveries; and are rated among the most important of modern explorations, as by the discovery of the "channel" Peary claimed to have established the insularity of Greenland.

The alleged discovery of this channel was made by Peary on his Arctic expedition of 1891–92. With one companion, Eivind Astrup (since deceased), Peary traveled eastward across the Greenland ice cap to the point he called "Navy Cliff." In his book, "Northward Over the Great Ice," pages 334, 335, 336, Peary says:

Our observation point was a giant cliff, almost vertical, overlooking the bay, and a great glacier that entered the bay on our right. Some 15 miles northeast of where we stood the cliffs ended in a bold cape, which I named Glacier Cape. Dark clouds seen over and beyond the ice cap seemed to indicate that the shore line trended rapidly away to the east or southeast. Looking to the west we saw the opening of the fiord that had barred our northern advance. It was this fiord whose western entrance we had descried afar off days before. Now we knew that we had paralleled its course across the northern end of the mainland from Robeson Channel clear to the Arctic Ocean off the shores of northeast Greenland. * * * It was evident that this channel (Peary Channel) marked the northern boundary of the mainland of Greenland.

As Peary stated that this channel "marked the northern boundary of the mainland of Greenland," it was supposed to prove the insularity of Greenland, although this question had been practically decided 10 years earlier by Lockwood and Brainard of the Lady Franklin Bay expedition under Gen. Greely in their explorations of the true northern coast of Greenland.

For 20 years Mr. Peary posed as the discoverer of the Peary Channel, the discoverer of the East Greenland Sea, and the discoverer of the insularity of Greenland.

But in 1906–1908 an expedition was organized and equipped by the Danish Government to explore the unknown portion of the east coast of Greenland. This expedition was led by L. Mylius-Erichsen, a successful and daring explorer, who in 1902–1904 led the Danish Literary Greenland Expedition. Erichsen planned to explore the east coast of Greenland as far north as Independence Bay and then follow Peary Channel through to the west coast. While the main scientific objects of the expedition were attained, Mylius-Erichsen, First Lieutenant Niels Peter Hoeg-Hagen, and Jorgen Brönlund lost their lives on the northern sledge trip. The body of Brönlund was found by other members of the expedition before their return to Denmark, and Brönlund's diary told of the death of his companions several days earlier, but although careful search was made no trace of the bodies of Mylius-Erichsen and Hoeg-Hagen was found at that time. In 1909, however, an expedition was sent out by the Danish Government to search for the bodies of Mylius-Erichsen and Hoeg-Hagen, as well as their diaries, observation books, and other records. This expedition was led by Capt. Ejnar Mikkelsen, who returned to Denmark in 1912 with the records of the ill-fated party. A summary of Mikkelsen's report is embodied in volume 41 of Meddelelser Om Gronland, 1913, which also contains the Report on the Denmark Expedition to the Northeast Coast of Greenland, 1906–1908, under Mylius-Erichsen. I quote from pages 472–474:

The second report (of Mylius-Erichsen) was found on the summer camp and read as follows:

"We drove westward with 23 dogs until the 1st of June, and reached Peary's Cape Glacier; discovered that the Peary Channel does not exist; Navy Cliff is connected by fast land with Heilprin Land. We renamed Independence Bay Independence Fjord and built a cairn (with report) on a low point near Cape Glacier.

"(Signed) MYLIUS-ERICHSEN.

"AUGUST 8, 1907."

It will be seen from the foregoing that the honor of discovering that the Peary Channel does not exist belongs to Mylius-Erichsen, and that the honor of making the discovery known to the world falls to Ejnar Mikkelsen.

The nonexistence of Peary Channel was not all that was learned of Peary's explorations by the Denmark expedition. On page 214 of the above-mentioned volume we read:

To understand why Mylius-Erichsen first took Danmarks Fjord and then Hagens Fjord to be Independence Bay, it must be remembered that on all his charts from these regions around here Peary states that from Academy Glacier the coast bends almost in the direction southeast, whereas according to what has been found out by the Danish expedition, it turns on the contrary almost in the direction northeast. This mistake on Peary's part thus became of extremely fateful importance to Mylius-Erichsen and his companions. For it was owing to this long journey into Danmarks Fjord and Hagens Fjord that their retreat was begun too late and had to be given up on account of the comparatively sudden melting of the snow. And we know that their inforced summer in the north led to their death.

As stated in the above-quoted paragraph, chart No. 2142, based on Peary's reports, shows the coast of Greenland bending away sharply to the southeast. To my mind, the fact that three explorers had lost their lives owing to the incorrectness of this chart, was more than sufficient reason for its cancellation.

But, some one may object, we have only the uncorroborated word of these men against Mr. Peary's, that the Peary Channel does not exist, and that the charting of the east coast of Greenland was not correctly given by him. Let me quote from the International Yearbook for 1913, published by Dodd, Mead & Co., of New York:

An important advance in the exploration of the vast interior of Greenland had been made by three traverses of the inland ice sheet. Knud Rasmussen, with the Dane, Freuchen, and two Eskimos of Smith Sound, started on April 6, 1912, across the inland ice from Inglefield Gulf, West Greenland, to Danmark Fjord and Independence Bay on the east coast. * * * Just to the north of Peary's Navy Cliff, the party looked in vain for the Peary Channel, which was supposed to form the northern boundary of Greenland. Instead of the channel they found an ice-free upland, abounding in game.

The nonexistence of Peary Channel from sea to sea has been proven, for the ill-fated Mylius-Erichsen discovered this fact, which was later verified by Rasmussen.

The indisputable proof of the nonexistence of the Peary Channel automatically deprives Mr. Peary of the honor of two other of his claimed discoveries, namely, the insularity of Greenland and the East Greenland Sea. As Greenland is not bounded on the north by Peary Channel, the claimed discovery of a channel which does not exist could not prove the insularity of Greenland, which had already been satisfactorily determined by the explorations of the members of the Greely expedition in 1882.

The discovery of the East Greenland Sea by Mr. Peary was another claimed result of his 1891–92 expedition. The area extending from about 82° 10′ north latitude and 31° west longitude to about 12° west longitude was mapped by Mr. Peary as the East Greenland Sea. This area was discovered by Lieut. J. P. Koch, of the Mylius-Erichsen expedition, to be dry land. Koch's discovery was confirmed by the later expeditions of Mikkelsen and Rasmussen, and the territory named by Mr. Peary "East Greenland Sea" is shown on the latest map published by the National Geographic Society as "Amdrup Land," "Erichsen Land," and so forth.

Another of the Peary "discoveries" shown on Hydrographic Office chart No. 2142 is "Jesup Land." This is the large island southwest of Grant Land and separated from it by Nansen Sound, and from Raanes Peninsula and Fosheim Peninsula by Eureka Sound. This land was discovered by Capt. Otto Sverdrup in 1900 and was mapped and explored by members of his expedition. The island was named by Sverdrup "Axel Heiberg Land" and the extreme northern portion of the island was christened "Svartevaeg" by him.

Capt. Sverdrup returned to Norway in September, 1902, and his official report of that year places "Axel Heiberg Land" on the maps of the world to Norway's credit, while its coast lines, sounds, fjords, mountains, and other topographical and geographical features were mapped by him with thoroughness and accuracy. Hydrographic Office chart No. 2142, published by our Navy Department in 1903, the year after Sverdrup's report was made, shows a vague mass, without distinct outline or detail of any kind, across which is printed "Jesup Land." This vague outline on chart No. 2142 is the only hint Peary gives of his alleged discovery of this land until 1907, when his book, Nearest the Pole, was published. On page 202 of that book he says:

> From the summit 2,000 feet above the sea level (on Grant Land) and of a more truly Alpine character than any that I have seen in northern Greenland, or Grant Land, the view was more than interesting. * * * East lay the wide white zone of the ice foot; west the unbroken surface of Nansen's Strait, and beyond it the northern part of that western land which I saw from the heights of the Ellesmere Land ice cap, in July, 1898, and named "Jesup Land," although Sverdrup has later given it the name of "Heiberg Land."

Note carefully the date on which Mr. Peary claims to have first seen "Jesup Land"—July, 1898—"from the heights of Ellesmere Land." Note carefully, also, the following quotation from Peary's report to President Jesup and members of the Peary Arctic Club on his work done in the Arctic in 1898–1902. I quote from his report, as printed in his book, Nearest the Pole, pages 296 and 297:

> In the spring of 1898 the Peary Arctic Club was organized, Morris K. Jesup, Henry W. Cannon, H. L. Bridgman, all personal friends of mine, forming the nucleus about which the rest of you assembled, and in May the Windward (loaned by Alfred Harmsworth, of London) arrived; but to my regret and disappointment, the machinists' strike in England having prevented the installation of new engines, she was practically nothing but a sailing craft.
> The lateness of the season was such that I had to make the most of the Windward as she was. But her extreme slowness (3½ knots under favorable circumstances) and the introduction of a disturbing factor in the appropriation by another of my plan and field of work necessitated the charter of an auxiliary ship if I did not wish to be distanced. The Windward sailed from New York on the 4th of July, 1898, and on the 7th I went on board the Hope at Sydney, Cape Briton.
>
> Pushing rapidly northward and omitting the usual calls at the Danish Greenland ports, Cape York was reached after a voyage uneventful except for a nip in the ice of Melville Bay.
> The work of hunting walrus and assembling my party of natives commenced at once; the Windward soon joined us, after which the hunting was prosecuted by both ships until the final rendezvous at Etah, whence both ships steamed out on Saturday, August 13, the Windward to continue northward, the Hope bound for home.

From Peary's own statements, therefore, we must conclude that he has solved the hitherto unsolvable problem of how to occupy two widely separated points at one and the same time, since, according to his own report, he was occupied from the time of his departure from New York on July 4, 1898, until August 13, 1898, with his journey to Cape York and his arduous work of hunting walrus and assembling his party of natives, while through some highly developed psychologfeal and physiological ability he was, according to his own report, in July, 1898, viewing from the heights of the Ellesmere Land ice cap—nearly 300 miles distant—that western land which he claims to have seen and named "Jesup Land."

It is also a geographic fact that this same western land is so situated that even were Mr. Peary gifted with supernatural vision he could not possibly have seen it at the place where he located it, since it is not there, but much farther south and a great deal farther west. On Hydrographic Office chart No. 2142 "Jesup Land" is shown directly north of Arthur Land, while in reality this land which Capt. Sverdrup named "Axel Heiberg Land" is not north of Arthur Land but far to the west of it. The National Geographic Society on its latest maps has removed Mr. Peary's "Jesup Land," and gives Capt. Sverdrup credit for the discovery and naming of the land which Mr. Peary called "Jesup Land." Therefore, by reason of Capt. Sverdrup's priority of discovery and correct charting of Axel Heiberg Land, Peary can not claim the honor of the discovery of the land shown as "Jesup Land" on Hydrographic Office chart No. 2142.

Let us now examine Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560, mentioned in my resolution of February 25, 1915, as one of the charts requiring cancellation or correction. On this chart, corrected to January 22, 1915, we find "Jesup Land" changed to "Axel Heiberg Land" and moved to its proper position. We also find the "East Greenland Sea" occupied by "Amdrup Land" and "Erichsen Land," while the northeastern boundary of Greenland has been moved eastward some 20 degrees of longitude, but the fictitious "Peary Channel" is still shown on chart No. 2560 as the northern boundary of the mainland of Greenland.

On this same chart, northwest of Grant Land, in latitude about 82° N. and longitude about 102° W., is an undefined body of land marked "Crocker Land," which Robert E. Peary claimed that he discovered in 1906.

Peary's first mention of "Crocker Land" is found on page 202 of his book Nearest the Pole, when, quoting from his diary of June 24, 1906, he says:

> From the summit, 2,000 feet above the sea level, the view was more than interesting. * * * North stretched the well-known ragged surface of the polar pack, and northwest it was with a thrill that my glasses revealed the faint white summits of a distant land, which my Eskimos claimed to have seen as we came along from the last camp.

Four days later, after four days of travel westward, Peary writes in his diary, while at his camp at the northernmost point of Axel Heiberg Land (p. 207 of Nearest the Pole):

> The clear day greatly favored my work in taking a round of angles, and with the glasses I could make out apparently a little more distinctly the snow-clad summits of the distant land in the northwest above the ice horizon.
> My heart leaped the intervening miles of ice as I looked longingly at this land, and in fancy I trod its shores and climbed its summits, even though I knew that that pleasure could only be for another in another season.

But that pleasure was neither for Peary nor for "another in another season"! In 1913 the "Crocker land expedition" was sent out by the American Museum of Natural History, in New York, and the American Geographical Society, under the leadership of Donald B. McMillan (a member of the last Peary expedition), to explore and chart Crocker Land. In November, 1914, advices were received from McMillan by the museum stating that Crocker Land does not exist. McMillan's own story is published in Harper's Monthly Magazine for October and November, 1915. I quote from the November number, pages 925–26:

> On the morning of the 22d (of April, 1914) Green got a latitude of 81° 52′ and a longitude of 103° 32′. To increase our latitude we set a more northerly course on the 23d and 24th, with a variation of 175 degrees westerly. Observations on these two days put us in latitude 82° 30′, longitude 108° 22′. We had not only reached the brown spot on the map (Crocker Land), but were 30 miles inland! You can imagine how earnestly we scanned every foot of that horizon—not a thing in sight. We were convinced that we were in pursuit of a will-o'-the-wisp. * * * Our dreams of the last four years were merely dreams; our hopes had ended in bitter disappointment.

In June, 1906, Peary stood on the summit of a peak 2,000 feet high on the northern coast of Grant Land and made his claimed discovery of this land, which he named Crocker Land. But the location of this land had already been conveniently fixed for Mr. Peary. It had long been a favorite theory of some scientists that land might exist in that portion of the polar sea. The report of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for 1904 contains a chart on which this hypothetical land is located at about 82° north latitude and about 100° west longitude. This chart appeared in 1904, while Mr. Peary did not start on the trip on which he "discovered" this land until one year later, in 1905. Thus this land, which was shown by the Coast and Geodetic Survey as a possibility, was accepted by Peary as an actuality and discovered as such, while Prof. McMillan now proves it to have been only an imaginary dream.

Another feature of Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560 deserving careful consideration is the presentation of a line of deep-sea soundings extending along the line of the seventieth meridian west of Greenwich from 83° 7′ north latitude to 89° 55′ north latitude. These soundings Peary claims to have made on his last Arctic expedition.

As this is the only line of soundings ever claimed to have been made in an approximately straight line to a latitude as far north as 89° 55′, the results are of peculiar interest. Let us consider the conditions under which the soundings were made.

It is a well-known fact, proven by Arctic explorers from the time of John Davis in 1588 up to the present time, that three sets of observations are necessary in the Arctic regions to establish a navigator's or traveler's position, namely, observations for latitude, observations for longitude, and observations for compass or magnetic variation, for there, as elsewhere, the compass needle points neither to the geographic North Pole nor to the magnetic North Pole, but varies its direction to a greater or less degree with every change of the traveler's position. Therefore frequent and careful observations are absolutely necessary in order to determine one's position.

Another well-known fact, proven by many Arctic explorers and disputed by none, is that the ice of the polar sea is not stationary, but is continually in motion, the average drift being not less than 3 miles per day, and often more, according to the force of the wind and the influence of various other conditions. This is another reason why frequent and accurate observations for latitude, for longitude, and for compass variations are absolutely necessary to determine an explorer's position as soon as he leaves the land.

At a hearing before the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives in 1911 Mr. Peary testified that at no time on the Arctic expedition on which these soundings were made did he or any member of his party attempt to make any observations for longitude; at no time during the expedition on which this line of soundings was made did Mr. Peary or any member of his party make any observations for compass variation; nor did Peary have with him on that expedition any chart showing variations already determined by other explorers in the Arctic regions. Mr. Peary also stated to the congressional committee that throughout a journey of 410 miles over the trackless expanse of the Arctic Ocean he made only three observations for latitude, and these were made while the sun was at no time higher than 7° above the horizon, while an altitude of 10° above the horizon is the lowest altitude at which our Navy Department declares approximately accurate observations for latitude can be made. The three observations made by Mr. Peary for latitude were, of course, valueless without the correlative observations for longitude and for compass variation. The fact is indisputable, therefore, that at no time after he left the sight of land could Mr. Peary have known his position, since he claims to have traveled by compass, yet did not know the direction in which his compass needle pointed, neither did he know whether he was traveling on the 70th or any other meridian, or at right angles to both.

In marked contrast with Peary's lack of observations on his so-called polar trip is Dr. Nansen's report of his Arctic expedition across the Polar Sea in the Fram, and Nansen's sledge expedition toward the pole. Dr. Nansen's scientific observations on this polar expedition fill six large volumes and comprise data of the greatest scientific interest and value. On his sledge trip toward the pole he averaged five daily observations for latitude, longitude, and compass variation, while in 37 days Peary made three observations for latitude only.

The observations of the astronomer on board the Fram, in relation to the variation of the magnetic needle, show the utter impossibility of traveling in a straight line by compass only. I quote from volume 2, pages 33, 34, and 35, "Scientific Results of the Norwegian North Polar Expedition, 1893–1896, by Fridtjof Nansen":

June 12, 1894. The needle in motion eastward. The needle more disturbed in the afternoon than in the morning. The needle much disturbed—danced up and down.

June 13, 1894 (4 miles farther north). The needle oscillated rapidly backward and forward. The needle returning from a westerly movement. Eastward motion—

And so forth.

Pursuant to my resolution of February 25, 1915, I wrote the Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Josephus Daniels, a letter under date of October 5, 1915, as follows:

OCTOBER 5, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. DANIELS: Will you kindly inform me upon just what data the sounding of 1,500 fathoms, 5 miles from the North Pole, was placed on Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560, covering the Arctic regions? Also please state who furnished the data.

Under date of October 19, 1915, Secretary Daniels replied to my letter in the following communication:

OCTOBER 19, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. HELGESEN: In reply to your letter of the 5th instant, No. 216, requesting to be informed "upon just what data the sounding of 1,500 fathoms 5 miles from the North Pole was placed on Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560, covering the Arctic regions," and also "who furnished the data," I have to state that the soundings shown on chart No. 2560 along the general line of the meridian between Cape Columbia and the North Pole, one of which is the 1,500-fathom sounding referred to by you, were obtained from data supplied the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey by Civil Engineer R. E. Peary, United States Navy, and that said soundings were afterwards furnished the Hydrographic Office by the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I note that the gentleman attacks the claimed discovery of the North Pole by Commander Peary. Does he give countenance to the alleged discovery of the same place by a rival explorer?

Mr. HELGESEN. In these remarks I am dealing wholly with the correction of our maps in so far as the Government has put anything upon them that an American discoverer claims to have discovered, and there is no other discoverer that I know of who has got anything on our maps that does not deserve to be there. I will come to that a little later.

Mr. SLOAN. I notice the gentleman speaks of this in relation to his resolution of February 25, 1915.

Mr. HELGESEN. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Has the gentleman reintroduced that resolution in this Congress?

Mr. HELGESEN. I have not, because——

Mr. SLOAN. Does the gentleman intend to press this to a hearing, so that the whole matter of the North Pole discovery may be opened up by congressional investigation?

Mr. HELGESEN. I do not, because this has already been settled officially by the Government. So far as Peary is concerned, he is officially off our Government maps to-day. For that reason I do not intend to press for any hearing on something that is already settled.

As this letter from the Secretary of the Navy showed that the data for the soundings on chart No. 2560 was furnished by the Coast and Geodetic Survey, I then communicated with Dr. E. Lester Jones, Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, in a letter dated November 26, 1915, in which I said:

NOVEMBER 26, 1915.

MY DEAR DR. JONES: On Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560, a sounding of 1,500 fathoms is indicated at a distance of 5 miles from the North Pole (89° 55').

The Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, has informed me, under date of October 19, 1915, that the Coast and Geodetic Survey furnished the Hydrographic Office with the data which placed this sounding of 1,500 fathoms at 5 miles from the North Pole upon Hydrographic Office Chart No. 2560.

Will you please inform me who furnished the Coast and Geodetic Survey with the data, and the exact nature of that data which resulted in placing a 1,500-fathom sounding as above stated, and which is shown on page 56 of the report of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, 1910?

Kindly furnish me with copy of report giving said data and the method or system employed to check the data; also state by what department of the Coast and Geodetic Survey said checking was done.

Sincerely, yours,

H. T. HELGESEN.

On December 1, 1915, I received a letter from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, which reads:

DECEMBER 1, 1915.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of the 26th instant, I inclose herewith photo copies of two letters referring to the profile of soundings taken by the Peary expedition, and a photo copy of the profile which was furnished the Hydrographic Office October 30, 1909.

It is assumed that this profile is the data mentioned by the Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, as having been furnished by this bureau to the Hydrographic Office for indicating depths in the vicinity of the North Pole on Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560. The letters recite the circumstances under which these data were furnished.

Yours, respectfully,

R. L. FARIS,
Acting Superintendent.

As this letter did not mention the manner in which the data furnished the Coast and Geodetic Survey by the Peary expedition were checked, I again wrote Dr. Jones, under date of December 2, 1915, as follows:

DECEMBER 2, 1915.

MY DEAR DR. JONES: A letter from your office signed by R. L. Faris, Acting Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, with inclosures, just received, in reply to my letter of November 26.

Mr. Faris's letter does not contain quite all of the information which I desire. Permit me to call your attention to the last paragraph of my letter, which remains unanswered. I will therefore ask you to reply specifically to the following:

Just what method or system was employed to check the data of which you have sent me photostat copies. Also, please state what department of the Coast and Geodetic Survey checked these data.

As I am particularly interested in the sounding of 1,500 fathoms, located on the "Profile of Soundings" at 89° 55' north latitude, I wish you would inform me if any attempt was made to verify the point at which that sounding was made, and if so, what verification of said position is in the possession of your department?

Sincerely, yours,

H. T. HELGESEN.

Acting Superintendent R. L. Faris promptly and courteously replied to the above letter on December 4, 1915:

DECEMBER 4, 1915.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of the 2d instant, I have to state that in so far as can be learned from the files of this office, the letters, photograph copies of which were forwarded you, and a photograph copy of the profile of soundings taken by the Peary Expedition included all the data furnished the Hydrographic Office October 30, 1909, for indicating depths in the vicinity of the North Pole on Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560.

Under the circumstances the depths of the soundings are not susceptible to a check like those obtained in a detailed hydrographic survey. At the time the profile of soundings was furnished the Hydrographic Office there is no record of this bureau having data available for checking the geographical position of the soundings.

I trust the above will meet your requirements and shall be glad if you will call upon us whenever we can be of any assistance to you.

Yours, respectfully,

R. L. FARIS,
Acting Superintendent.

This letter of Mr. Faris's left me somewhat in doubt as to whether or not any data had been furnished the Coast and Geodetic Survey at any time since October 30, 1909, which would throw further light on these soundings. I therefore wrote Dr. Jones again on December 7, 1915, a letter, which I quote:

DECEMBER 7, 1915.

DEAR DR. JONES: A reply to my letter of December 2 is just received, signed by Acting Superintendent R. L. Faris.

This letter states that you have already sent me "all the data furnished the Hydrographic Office October 30, 1909, for indicating depths in the vicinity of the North Pole on Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560."

The letter also states that:

"At the time the profile of soundings was furnished the Hydrographic Office there is no record of this bureau having data available for checking the geographical position of the soundings."

I regret the necessity of troubling you further in the matter, but I desire a little further information; and therefore ask you to kindly inform me if at any time since October 30, 1909, up to the present time, the Coast and Geodetic Survey has been furnished with data or information by any member of the Peary expedition which would enable a checking or verification of the geographical positions of these soundings to be made.

Thanking you for your courtesy and prompt replies to my various inquiries, I am,

Very sincerely, yours, H. T. HELGESEN.

Superintendent Jones's ultimate reply to my inquiry read as follows:

UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY,
Washington, December 18, 1915.

Hon. HENRY T. HELGESEN.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of December 10, and subsequent verbal conversation and requests up to the present date, in which you ask if the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey has been furnished with data or information by any member of the Peary expedition which will enable a checking or verification of the geographical positions of the soundings to be made:

This bureau has never at any time received any data from any member of the Peary expedition of 1908–9 which would enable a determination or verification of the geographical position of the soundings referred to in the profile of soundings furnished by Mr. Peary as a result of his 1908–9 expedition, to be made.

The geographical positions of these soundings therefore can not be verified by the survey, and each and every one of them can be accepted only as submitted.

I am, respectfully, yours,

E. LESTER JONES,
Superintendent Coast and Geodetic Survey.

I have therefore, as the result of my investigation into this line of soundings shown on Hydrographic Office chart 2560, the official word of the Secretary of the Navy, in whose department of the Government Mr. Peary was employed at the time of and during his last Arctic expedition, and the official statement of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, under whose department of the Government these soundings were undertaken, that they are not susceptible of checking, and therefore are not susceptible of proof.

But if not susceptible of proof, this profile of soundings furnished the Coast and Geodetic Survey by Mr. Peary as the most valuable scientific result of his last Arctic expedition is certainly susceptible of disproof, and should therefore be removed from our charts and maps. I shall illustrate by a few examples of the soundings as given by Peary; and in this connection I would say that in quoting from Peary's narrative or book of his last Arctic expedition I am making use only of material offered by Peary himself as official evidence of his journey to the North Pole, for at the congressional hearing in 1911 he presented his book as testimony, and at that same hearing Peary stated:

If that is in my book, I will stand by it. (See p. 122 of the hearing.)

We note on Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560 and on the "profile of soundings" furnished the Coast and Geodetic Survey by Peary—a photographic copy of which is in my possession—a sounding of 310 fathoms claimed to have been made by Prof. Marvin at 85° 23′ north latitude, and another sounding of 700 fathoms, with no bottom reached, claimed to have been made by Marvin at 85° 33′.

On page 243 of Peary's book relating the story of his last Arctic expedition he says:

The end of this march put us between 85° 7′ and 85° 30′. The actual position, as figured later, was 85° 23′.

On page 246 of the same book Peary says:

At the next camp Marvin made a sounding and, to our surprise, reached bottom at only 310 fathoms—

Thus locating his sounding of 310 fathoms one camp beyond 85° 23′, although it is shown at 85° 23′ on chart No. 2560 and on the profile of soundings. Peary states in the book that the "next camp" beyond 85° 23′ was at 85° 33′, so that, in order to be consistent, he should have located the sounding of 310 fathoms at 85° 33′ instead of at 85° 23′. But at his claimed latitude of 85° 33′ he shows a sounding of 700 fathoms, with no bottom reached, instead of the sounding of 310 fathoms which he says he took at this point. It is plainly evident, therefore, that neither of these soundings was taken at the points indicated on chart No. 2560 and on the "profile of soundings"; and as there is no possible method of determining where they were taken, or if they were taken at all, they should be removed from Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560 and any other of our Government maps and charts whereon they may appear.

The next sounding shown on the chart and on the profile is claimed by Peary to have been made by Robert Bartlett at 87° 15′ north latitude, and is so indicated on chart No. 2560 and on the profile of soundings. But neither does this position correspond with other statements made by Peary. On page 262 of Peary's book he says:

Bartlett made a sounding of 1,260 fathoms, but found no bottom.

On the profile of soundings this sounding of 1,260 fathoms is shown at 87° 15′. On page 264 of the book, Peary tells us that the day after Bartlett made the sounding of 1,260 fathoms they traveled "a good 20 miles." The following day he says they again traveled 20 miles (p. 266). This brought them to the point where Bartlett left the expedition and returned to the ship, which point Peary assures us was 87° 46′ 49″, or a scant 87° 47′. As Bartlett traveled 40 miles after making the 1,260-fathom sounding, and we are told by Peary that he reached 87° 47′ north latitude, the place where he took the sounding must have been 40 miles south of 87° 47′, or 87° 7′, instead of 87° 15′ as shown by Peary on the profile of soundings. Therefore, while this discrepancy proves absolutely that Bartlett's sounding of 1,260 fathoms was not made at 87° 15′, as indicated by Peary, we have no method to determine where it really was taken, if at all; and I insist that this sounding also should be removed from all of our charts and maps where it may appear.

The profile of soundings and chart No. 2560 also show a sounding which Mr. Peary claims to have personally made at 89° 55′ north latitude.

At the hearing before the Naval Committee in 1911 Peary described his most northern camp as located at 89° 57′ north latitude. Again, at the same hearing, he located it at 89° 55′, and yet again at 89° 52′, thus giving three different locations for this camp. (See pp. 31, 40, and 128 of hearing.) In the published hearing a quotation is made from Peary's diary, reading as follows:

Impossible to find place to sound; 5 miles south from camp, 1,500 fathoms, no bottom (p. 40).

On page 304 of Peary's book we find this paragraph:

We crowded on all speed for the first 5 miles of our return journey. Then we came to a narrow crack, which was filled with recent ice, which furnished a chance to try for a sounding. Our sounding apparatus gave us 1,500 fathoms of water, with no bottom.

We have therefore Peary's own statement in his book and his official statement made to the Committee on Naval Affairs in 1911 that this sounding of 1,500 fathoms and no bottom was made at a point some 5 miles distant from his northernmost camp. As he locates his northernmost camp variously at 89° 57′, 89° 55′, and 89° 52′, it is evident that this sounding of 1,500 fathoms was not made at 89° 55′. Where it was really made no one, not even Mr. Peary, is in a position to say.

The soundings claimed to have been made by Peary near the coast of Grant Land are not new to science, since in 1876 Commander Markham made soundings as far north as 83° 20′, thus antedating Mr. Peary in this region by 30 years.

This alleged "profile of soundings" is of interest in its bearing on another matter, of which I shall speak briefly. At a hearing before the House Committee on Naval Affairs, on March 4, 1910, Prof. O. H. Tittmann, then Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, made the following official statement:

When Mr. Peary returned from the Arctic he sent us (the Coast and Geodetic Survey) the volumes of the tidal observations that he had made. Mr. Peary also forwarded to us a line of soundings which he had made extending from Cape Columbia to within about 5 miles of the pole. So he forwarded those to me officially, and that is the official record we have of his having been at the North Pole.

Supt. Tittmann was then asked by Congressman Dawson, a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs:

What official evidence is there of the fact you have just stated—that this party, consisting of Peary and the others, reached that point—that is, within striking distance of the pole? Is there any official record?

To which question Supt. Tittmann replied:

I have no official evidence of that except, as I said, the line of soundings under Peary's signature.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, since these fictitious soundings reported by Peary, which do not correspond in any way with other stories related by him, are the only official evidence presented by Peary that he reached the North Pole, I make the unqualified assertion that Robert E. Peary never did reach the North Pole nor any place approximately near to that geographic point. Mr. Peary thus far has furnished no reasonable evidence that he has reached the North Pole, and as he testified before the Navy Committee that he had produced all the evidence he possessed it is quite evident that he never can establish his claim to its discovery.

At the time of the congressional hearings on Peary's alleged discovery of the North Pole an effort was made to becloud the issue by the introduction as evidence of 21 volumes of so-called scientific data procured by the expedition. These 21 volumes contained the tidal observations referred to by Supt. Tittmann in his testimony, every one of which tidal observations was made at a coastwise point, and the greater number of them before the so-called polar expedition left the ship. Not one of these tidal observations was made, or is claimed to have been made, en route to or returning from or at the place which Peary named the North Pole.

A second attempt was made to becloud the issue by statements made to the congressional committee that the Coast and Geodetic Survey had received two additional volumes of meteorological observations made and signed by Prof. Ross G. Marvin, who accompanied Peary a short distance on his alleged polar journey; but a letter dated July 26, 1915, signed by Dr. E. Lester Jones, Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, shows that these observations were all made in 1908, while Peary's sledge expedition did not leave land until February, 1909. In other words, these meteorological observations were all made prior to Peary's departure from land. I quote Dr. Jones's letter:

JULY 26, 1915.

HON. HENRY T. HELGESEN.

MY DEAR SIR: Complying with your request in reference to a letter to Mr. Tittmann, former Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, dated June 14, 1910, written by Commander R. E. Peary, advising that he was sending to this bureau two books of additional meteorological observations and chronometer comparisons made by Prof. Marvin, I wish to say that these volumes only refer to observations made during the year 1908 and make no reference whatsoever to the year 1909.

I am, respectfully, yours, E. LESTER JONES,
Superintendent.

A third attempt was made to becloud the issue when the congressional committee was informed that Prof. Donald B. McMillan had made certain scientific observations which established Mr. Peary's claim to the attainment of the North Pole. I have in my possession the photographic reproduction of a letter written by Prof. McMillan to Mr. Peary, from which I shall quote. Note particularly the date of the letter:

ROOSEVELT, January 9, 1909.

R. E. PEARY, United States Navy.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to submit supplementary report on my tidal observations at Cape Columbia.

Respectfully, yours, D. B. MCMILLAN.

The report accompanying this letter is dated January 4, 1909, showing that the observations contained therein must have been made before Mr. Peary's sledge expedition left the ship in February, 1909.

The assertion is sometimes made that any denial of the authenticity of Mr. Peary's claims is an attempt to pervert history. Mr. Chairman, it is this very perversion of history that I desire to prevent. Is it a perversion of history to deny Peary's claims when they are repudiated and canceled not only by the laymen but by the expert scientists of those two departments, namely, the Navy Department and the Coast and Geodetic Survey? The Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Navy Department (Hydrographic Office) have repudiated and canceled Mr. Peary's "Peary Channel," thereby denying his claim also to the discovery of the insularity of Greenland. The Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Navy Department (Hydrographic Office) have repudiated and canceled Mr. Peary's "East Greenland Sea," where high land has been found to exist. The Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Navy Department (Hydrographic Office) have repudiated and canceled Mr. Peary's claimed discovery of "Crocker Land," which has been found to be only a broad expanse of the Polar Sea. The Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Navy Department (Hydrographic Office) have repudiated Mr. Peary's claimed discovery of "Jesup Land," and on our charts have placed "Axel Heiberg Land" in its stead, which land is shown where it actually exists, and not where the fictitious "Jesup Land" was placed by Mr. Peary.

My resolution requesting the correction of our Government charts and maps of the Arctic region led to careful investigations by the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Navy Department, which investigations have resulted in the cancellation of Hydrographic Office chart No. 2142 and the correction of Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560, as witness correspondence between Secretary of the Navy Daniels and myself, from which I shall quote.

The first letter from the Hydrographic Office read in part, as follows:

MARCH 29, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. HELGESEN: I have received a copy of House joint resolution 431, introduced in the House by you on the 25th ultimo, relative to certain charts issued by this office, with particular reference to Hydrographic Office charts Nos. 2142 and 2560, and I note that you find objections to the same in that they are supposed not to be correct.

If you will kindly inform me what faults you find or objections you have to the two charts above mentioned, and any other charts, I assure you the information will be carefully considered and every weight given it.

Very sincerely, THOS. WASHINGTON,
Captain, United States Navy, Hydrographer.

I replied to this letter, giving my objections to charts Nos. 2560 and 2142, as I have stated them in this speech, together with other information too voluminous to quote now, and on April 28, 1915, I received a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, which reads:

APRIL 28, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. HELGESEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 216 of the 14th instant, addressed to the hydrographer, and certain information relative to Hydrographic Office charts Nos. 2142 and 2560 covering portions of the Arctic regions.

Relative to Hydrographic Office chart No. 2142, I have to state that * * * the chart has been withdrawn from issue and canceled.

The department will be pleased to receive any information you may be able to give it in connection with the contemplated revision of the polar charts.

Sincerely, yours, JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

After further correspondence relative to Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560, Secretary Daniels wrote me under date of September 17, 1915, a letter from which I quote:

SEPTEMBER 17, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. HELGESEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 1st instant.

In further reference to the removal of Crocker Land from Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560, I have to state that the plate of that chart has been taken in hand, with the purpose of removing Crocker Land and also for the removal of Peary Channel, which the expedition of Mylius Erichsen found not to exist, together with any other features which further search of records may show should need to be amended.

Sincerely, yours, JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

The above correspondence shows that the Navy Department has repudiated the Peary "discoveries," as already mentioned by me.

The Coast and Geodetic Survey in 1911 published a volume entitled "Arctic Tides," which mentions the Peary Channel and Crocker Land. My resolution led to correspondence with the Coast and Geodetic Survey, which department, after due and careful investigation, has issued a "corrective slip," which is inserted in every copy of the publication, which "corrective slip" reads as follows:

CORRECTIVE NOTE TO ARCTIC TIDES.

Recent explorations have shown that Peary Channel, mentioned upon page 95 and shown upon the chart of cotidal lines as separating the extreme northern portion of Greenland from Greenland proper, does not exist; also that Crocker Land, mentioned upon pages 92 and 95, if existent, does not lie in the position indicated upon this chart.

And now the Coast and Geodetic Survey has officially repudiated all possibility of determination or verification of the fictitious line of soundings claimed to have been made by Peary on his expedition whereby he asserts that he reached the North Pole, and by such official repudiation the Coast and Geodetic Survey has officially destroyed Peary's last and only basis for his claim to the attainment of the North Pole.

I again quote from the letter of December 18, 1915, written by the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey to me:

This bureau has never at any time received any data from any member of the Peary expedition of 1908–1909 which would enable a determination or verification of the geographical position of the soundings referred to in the profile of soundings furnished by Mr. Peary as a result of his 1908–1909 expedition to be made.

The geographical positions of these soundings therefore can not be verified by the survey, and each and every one of them can be accepted only as submitted.

E. LESTER JONES,
Superintendent Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Can such a repudiative decision made by the scientists of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, that department of our Government under whose orders Mr. Peary served on his last expedition—a repudiative decision reached only after careful study and thorough consideration of all the available data—be termed a perversion of history? Rather would it be a perversion of history, a perversion of geography, a perversion of science, were these fictitious results of false claims of discovery and achievement allowed to remain unchallenged on our Government maps and charts.

That this action of the Navy Department and of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, resultant of my resolution of February 25, 1915, has been accepted as conclusive by the largest firm of map and atlas publishers in this country is evidenced by the following letter received by me from Rand, McNally & Co., of New York, Chicago, and London, England:

CHICAGO, December 13, 1915.

Mr. H. T. HELGESEN.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 5th is received, and we are pleased to inform you that our new series of maps—the Goode map—will, we believe, meet your requirements in the line of accuracy in every detail.

The map of the world in this series, which recently came from the press, does not show the fictitious "Crocker Land," nor the fictitious "Peary Channel." We believe that as far as authenticity is concerned these maps far surpass any series of maps on the market to-day.

Appreciating the kindly spirit of your information, and assuring you that we are glad at all times to receive data for the purposes of maintaining accuracy in our maps, we are,

Very truly, yours,

RAND, MCNALLY & CO.

We have therefore the word of this leading firm of atlas and map publishers that the maps which omit "Crocker Land" and the "Peary Channel" are the most authentic of any maps on the market at this time.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I shall refer to another matter relative to the correction and reissuance of our Government maps and charts of the Arctic regions—a matter of justice. I refer to the names placed on various geographic features of the regions within the Arctic Circle, names placed thereon by the original discoverers, which names have been largely and unjustly removed and superseded by more recent explorers. I refer especially, Mr. Chairman, to those portions of northern Greenland and Grant Land which were explored and charted by an expedition under the leadership of an honorable and honored officer of the United States Army, Maj. Gen. (then Lieut.) A. W. Greely, in command of the Lady Franklin Bay expedition. The members of this expedition, working under difficulties and hardships unknown and inconceivable to explorers of this generation, explored and mapped these regions with such accuracy and fidelity to detail that, although frequently confirmed, their data as presented has never been questioned or denied by those who have followed them. Neither Gen. Greely nor the members of his expedition have ever asked or received Government favors. Gen. Greely earned his title by faithful service; it is not an empty honor bestowed on him for claimed achievements, never performed. Throughout this and other countries he is recognized and honored for what he has done, yet the names this faithful officer of the United States Army placed on our Government maps by right of priority of discovery have been omitted from our latest Government maps.

In 1876 the English explorer, Aldrich, of the expedition under command of Sir George Nares, unfurled the English flag at the northern point of Grant Land, while Sir George Nares, believing that the American explorer, Hall, had first seen that point—although Hall had not reached it—named the point Cape Columbia as a compliment to America and American explorers. In return courtesy, seven years later, Gen. Greely placed the name of "Nares Land" on the land south of Nordenskiold Inlet, in North Greenland.

Other portions of the northern part of Greenland have been known for many years as Hall Land, Hazen Land, and Washington Land; but while these names still appear in very small type on Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560, the name of Peary Land, in glaringly large letters, is spread blatantly across these other names of honored statesmen and explorers. This, I contend, Mr. Chairman, is an injustice which should not be tolerated.

Many other names placed on the map by Gen. Greely are omitted from Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560. These names, Mr. Chairman, should not be lost from our Government maps and charts nor should they be replaced by the names given by later explorers.

The Lady Franklin Bay expedition was a Government expedition, and the Government officially accepted and printed Gen. Greely's report of the expedition, as is shown by a resolution which passed the House of Representatives—the Senate concurring—on June 17, 1886, that caused to be printed two volumes, being a report of the proceedings of the international polar expedition to Lady Franklin Bay, by First Lieut. (now Maj. Gen.) A. W. Greely. These two volumes contain maps and charts showing the various discoveries made by the Lady Franklin Bay expedition.

I have recently received a letter from Gen. Greely, which I shall quote:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 11, 1915.

To the Hon. H. T. HELGESEN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your letter of December 6, referring to your resolution of February 25, 1915, it is needless to say that every right-thinking explorer scrupulously recognizes the work of his predecessors, so that your wish to replace on future maps issued by the United States the original names given to new discoveries is right and proper. In addition, the displacing of an original set of names by others is most strongly condemned by all geographers, both as unfair and also as leading to confusion and misunderstanding.

The following original discoveries were named by me in honor of the enlisted men of the Lady Franklin Bay expedition, who participated therein. The greater number of the men paid for their accomplished duty by lingering deaths. The following names were approved by the Secretaries of War and of Navy, and were entered on the official Government map published in the official report (H. R. 49C: 1S. Mis. Doc., 393):

Capes Brainard, Frederick; Mounts Biederbick, Connell, and Whistler; and Brainard Island. For Lieut Lockwood, who made the world's record for the farthest north, were named Cape Lockwood and Lockwood Island. For President Garfield were named Garfield Coast and Garfield Mountains. For Vice President Arthur, Mount Arthur and Arthur Land. For George Washington, Cape Washington. For E. K. Kane, Cape Kane. For the distinguished Austrian-Hungarian explorer, Weyprecht Inlet. For Admiral Sir George Nares, R. N., Nares Land—as an acknowledgement of the farthest point that could possibly be seen by his men. Schley Land for Capt. Schley, whose energy and courage rescued the survivors of my expedition. Hazen Land for Gen. Hazen, Chief Signal Officer, under whom the expedition served. Hunt Fiord, for the Secretary of the Navy. Fort Conger, Conger Inlet, and Conger Mountains for Senator Conger, whose influence largely brought about the dispatch of the expedition.

Mount Grant (named for Gen. Grant), and Black Horn Cliffs were, I think, named by my predecessors, but I scrupulously retained every name given by any of my predecessors.

Trusting that the information given covers the ground to your satisfaction,

I am, yours,

A. W. GREELY,
Major General, Retired.
Commander of the Lady Franklin Bay International Polar Station.

As just stated, it was in grateful remembrance of the timely rescue of the Greely survivors, effected by the Government relief expedition under the late Admiral Winfield Scott Schley (then Capt. Schley) that Gen. Greely named one of the lands which he had discovered Schley Land. This name, with others, was jointly approved by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, and was placed on United States Navy chart H. O. 963, edition of 1885, by the Hydrographer of the Navy; but it is now omitted from H. O. chart 2560 by a later Hydrographer.

In a letter dated December 29, 1915, Gen. Greely said:

Hon. H. T. HELGESEN.

DEAR SIR: Surely the men of the Lady Franklin Bay expedition have a right to express their regret that the Hydrographer of the Navy should erase from the charts of the Navy a discovery paid for by lives of the men of the Army, and should indirectly relegate, in a measure, to obscurity the services of a distinguished officer of the Navy, whose expedition in its inception and in its results engaged the attention of the civilized world.

A. W. GREELY,
Major General, United States Army, Retired.

Under date of June 4, 1915, I wrote Secretary of the Navy Daniels, asking him the following question:

Who had the audacity to remove the name of a renowned admiral of the United States Navy (Admiral Schley) from the charts of the Hydrographic Office, when that name was placed on a newly discovered land by its discoverer, Gen. Greely, an honored officer of the United States Army?

To this question I received no reply. I therefore wrote Secretary Daniels on November 29, 1915, requesting a reply to the above specific question. Apparently the Secretary of the Navy and the Hydrographer of the Navy Department did not wish to place themselves on record in writing on this matter, but under date of December 15, 1915, I received a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, which read, in part, as follows:

DECEMBER 15, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. HELGESEN: In connection with prior correspondence on the subject of Hydrographic charts Nos. 2142 and 2560, the department would state that, should you care to visit the Hydrographic Office at any time for the purpose of examination of its charts or for affording any assistance in furthering the work thereon, you will receive every consideration.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

On December 23, 1915, I called at the Hydrographic Office and verbally repeated my question to the Hydrographer, Capt. Thomas Washington: "Why was the name of 'Schley Land' omitted from Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560?" Capt. Washington informed me verbally that the authority and precedent for such action was the fact that the geographic board of Canada had officially removed the name of "Schley Land" as a subdivision of Ellesmere Island, and as the Canadian board was generally accepted as authority for geographic place names in Canadian territory the Hydrographic Office of the United States Navy Department had taken like action. Capt. Thomas Washington also informed me verbally that the geographic board of Canada had officially decided to remove all the names of subdivisions from Ellesmere Island, leaving only the comprehensive name of "Ellesmere Island" to apply to the territory thus designated. This information Capt. Thomas Washington gave me verbally, acting in his official position as Hydrographer of the United States Navy Department, in answer to a question asked by me in my official position as a Congressman of the United States.

Thereupon I wrote a letter, dated December 27, 1915, to the minister of the interior, Hon. W. J. Roche, Ottawa, Canada, in which I said:

I shall appreciate your courtesy if you will inform me if the geographic board of Canada has decided to remove the name of "Schley Land" from that subdivision of Ellesmere Island or if its omission from your map of "Franklin, 1911," was merely an inadvertence.

H. T. HELGESEN.

I am now in receipt of the following letter from Hon. W. J. Roche, minister of the interior, Canada:

OTTAWA, ONTARIO, January 4, 1916.

Hon. H. T. HELGESEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reference to yours of the 29th ultimo, regarding the omission of the name of "Schley Land" on our map of Franklin and in regard to which you ask if the geographic board of Canada had decided to remove this name from that subdivision of Ellesmere Island or if its omission was merely an inadvertence, I am informed by the chairman of the geographic board that no order has been issued by that board for the removal of the name of "Schley Land" or of any other subdivision of Ellesmere Island; these names have not been passed upon by the board. Mr. White states that the map of Franklin accompanying his Place Names in Northern Canada was transferred from the plate of a geological survey map and that the name of "Schley Land" was inadvertently omitted therefrom by the geological survey draftsmen.

Yours, faithfully,
W. J. ROCHE,
Minister of the Interior, Canada.

The minister of the interior, Canada, therefore makes the unqualified statement, in direct contradiction to Capt. Thomas Washington, that the name of Schley Land never has been removed by the geographic board of Canada.

Therefore after a period of seven months I have received a reply to my question to the Secretary of Navy; not from Secretary of the Navy Daniels, not from Capt. Thomas Washington, Hydrographer, but officially from the minister of the interior, Canada, who assures me officially that no such action as stated to me by Capt. Thomas Washington, Hydrographer, was ever taken by the geographic board of Canada.

It is an unpleasant surprise to me that a public official, Capt. Thomas Washington, Hydrographer, of the United States Navy Department, should deliberately misinform a Congressman on a matter of public interest connected with his department, as Capt. Washington has done, and thus expose himself to ridicule and censure.

If a true American official, in charge of the Hydrographic Office, had learned that the name of an honored American admiral had been removed from a land discovered by an American Army officer, he would never have quoted Canadian authority on the subject; certain it is he would not have done so when no Canadian authority exists for such action; on the contrary, he would make every possible effort to replace that American name not only on our own maps but on the maps of Canada as well.

Mr. Chairman, I have reviewed this subject somewhat at length, in order that it may be a matter of record and history that the action requested in my resolution of February 25, 1915, has been taken by the scientists and heads of the interested departments of our Government, with the exception only of the replacing of "Schley Land" on our maps and charts; and now that I have proved conclusively that there is not even Canadian authority for the omission of that name, we hope that this name also will be replaced on the maps of this Government in the near future.

Hydrographic Office chart No. 2142, which I asserted should be canceled, has been canceled and withdrawn from circulation. Hydrographic Office chart No. 2560, which I insisted should be corrected, is now being corrected in line with the suggestions made by me. And, Mr. Chairman, these cancellations and corrections have not been made as the result of snap judgment or hasty or ill-considered action, but only after careful study of the facts and data which I presented.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I shall state that the Government, through the Hydrographic Office (Navy Department), should at once publish a new and accurate chart of the Arctic regions, in order that the authenticated discoveries of an American Government expedition, under the leadership of an honored officer and veteran of our Army, Maj. Gen. A. W. Greely, may be perpetuated; and that the map makers and scientists of the world may know that the fictitious "discoveries" of Robert E. Peary, heretofore shown on our maps, have been repudiated and canceled by the sworn officers and scientists of our Navy Department and of our Coast and Geodetic Survey, with the end in view that scientific truth shall prevail and that history shall not be perverted. [Applause.]

If I have any time left I yield it back.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, as a representative in part of the city of New York I want to extend my thanks to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], who the other day showed sympathetic interest in the harbor of New York and an intelligent comprehension of the fact that our harbor is not a local but a national proposition. Nevertheless I do not think his statement that our harbor has been discriminated against can be permitted to stand. There would be a certain advantage to the Representatives from New York in being able to pose on the floor of the House as martyrs representing a martyred community; but the facts would not bear us out.

In 1868, when this country was just emerging from the great expense of the Civil War, it nevertheless authorized the expenditure of over $8,000,000 to improve the East River and the harbor of New York and to deepen the East River to the depth of 26 feet, a project of statesmanlike farsightedness, and, in fact, far ahead of the exact needs of that moment. Our harbor was so good that outside of that authorization we needed nothing else until the time came for the 40-foot Ambrose Channel. Then this Congress gave us that. Then we needed the development along the Bay Ridge side to the extent of 40 feet, and Congress gave us that.

Ten years ago, in the Fifty-ninth Congress, my then colleague, whose successor I now am, Col. Joseph A. Goulden, introduced in this House a proposition for a survey of the East River, and the House passed it. In the first session of the next Congress he introduced a proposition for another survey, this later one covering the entire East River, and the House passed that. Under that the War Department proceeded to make a most exhaustive survey of the needs of East River. That was reported about 1911. It went to the board of review.

As recommended by the district engineer it called for the expenditure of $34,000,000. Our city, through our dock commissioner, did what I imagine is rather unusual. They said that while they recognized the generosity of the district engineer, we could get along with less than he had recommended, and they recommended that in one place where he had proposed a 35-foot channel the depth be reduced to 20 feet. Of course, that was done by the board of review. Another matter, which was entirely a tidal matter, was cut out by the board of review, and in the Sixty-third Congress there was recommended to this House the authorization of $13,500,000 for a new project for the East River. At the very first session after that recommendation came into Congress the Committee on Rivers and Harbors reported it favorably and this House passed it, so that in the last 48 years the city of New York has had no legitimate complaint against the Congress of the United States in connection with the improvement of its harbor. But it will have a legitimate complaint if the project is not now adopted, because we have reached a stage in New York City where we have absolutely no frontage on channels that we can utilize for the necessary development of our harbor. Everybody knows that there is an embargo against export freight, and one of the reasons for that is that ships coming into the harbor of New York to-day can not find wharves at which to berth. It is not the fault of the city of New York. In the last year we have constructed on the North River, where there is access to them, piers and wharves which have an area of over 45 acres, and a length, counting the going in and coming out on the two sides of each wharf, of over 7 miles. We are now docking ocean liners on Fifty-sixth Street on the North River, something like 6 miles north of the Battery, where the docking commences, and we are utilizing the space. Therefore, if this Congress does not give the relief that the Sixty-third Congress recommended, for the first time in the history of Congress justice will be denied to the chief port of this country, for that is what we are. We are not a local proposition. The port of New York to-day is the largest port not only in the United States, not only in this hemisphere, but the largest port in the world. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time assigned for general debate has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That deposits of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium owned by the United States, including those in national forests, the Grand Canyon national monument, and the Mount Olympus national monument, but excluding those in national parks, military or other reservations, shall be subject to disposition in the form and manner provided by this act to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and in the case of coal, oil, or gas, to municipalities.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "other" and insert the word "naval."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that amendment be withdrawn and the one I propose be agreed to in its stead.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to withdraw the committee amendment and substitute another, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the words "military or other reservations" and insert the following: "And any lands withdrawn and reserved for military or naval uses or purposes."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, the only purpose of this amendment is to make clear that lands withdrawn for oil lease in naval reserves shall not be included in the general operation of the bill. The committee reporting the bill inserted the word "naval," but the question arose as to whether the word "naval" will include naval oil reservations.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin to withdraw the committee amendment?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 3, page 1, by striking out the words "deposits of" and inserting the words "lands containing"; and, on line 4, after the word "sodium," insert the words "and deposits of said mineral."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 3, strike out the words "deposit of" and insert the words "lands containing," and, after the word "sodium," in line 4, insert "and deposits of said mineral."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the bill as it stands provides for the leasing of deposits of coal, oil, phosphates, potassium, sodium, and so forth. The word "deposit" is used, and probably because on the lands for which limited patents have been granted the United States is the owner of deposits reserved, but this bill not only leases deposits, but it leases lands and makes an acreage charge for the same. So it seems to me that we should provide for leasing the land containing these minerals as well as the deposits.

I assume that the Secretary of the Interior would construe the language of the section as giving him authority to lease the land, but it would be a somewhat strained construction, and it seems to me there would be a possibility that a lessee might decline to pay the per acreage charge for his land and insist that the bill did not authorize the Secretary to lease the land. That is the real important provision of the bill—the leasing of land containing these mineral deposits. If it were not for the reservation contained in the limited patents that have been issued, it would not be necessary to use the word "deposits" at all. I think the amendment should be adopted, because without it there would be considerable question whether the bill authorizes the Secretary to actually lease the land.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the section under consideration has been submitted to the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey and to the Secretary of the Interior. They have all made a report on it. The thought of the committee was that, inasmuch as it became necessary later to dispose of the surface, so it might be used for agriculture and deposits used for mineral development, we were pursuing the right course, as we did in the Alaska coal fields. We provide later on for the use of the surface for coal machinery, and so forth.

Mr. MONDELL. What the gentleman says is true, but it is a fact that we do actually lease the land. The bill contemplates the leasing of land, and there will be many leases where all the surface goes with the lease. Let me call attention to another matter which has occurred to me since the discussion began. The second section provides for the sale of coal lands under the present coal-land laws. These coal-land laws provide for the disposition of lands and all they contain; not only the coal, but any other mineral; and if the first section of your bill does not contain a provision under which the lands may be disposed of, your next section is not operative to the full extent that it is intended it should be.

Mr. FERRIS. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that on page 24 the bill makes provision for such deposits and for any part of the land which is necessary to carry on the work? On page 21, section 20, we reserve acres for camp sites or any other work necessary. While I do not say that the gentleman is not right, the fact that the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines and the Secretary of the Interior have passed upon it would seem to be sufficient.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but those gentlemen, who have not had much to do with drafting land legislation, might be mistaken. So far as the general rule of leasing is concerned, it is also true that we will lease the land and all it contains, make an acreage charge, and in certain cases only does the bill provide that a part of the surface may be retained.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment may not be agreed to at this time. I shall talk with the gentleman about it and consult some members of the committee, and if the gentleman is right we can return to it later. I am of opinion that the amendment would meet with some opposition even in the West, where I know they want to utilize the surface for agriculture, and our thought was to lease the minerals and leave the surface undisturbed.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, my amendment would not in any wise interfere with the taking of a limited right, but it would make it clear that we are authorizing the Secretary to lease the lands as well as merely the deposits. The bill contemplates that once a lease is made thereafter no limited right may be acquired; if there is to be any reservation of the surface you provide that reservation shall be in advance of the lease. Let me make this suggestion to the gentleman. I do not know that that is so important that it would nullify a part of the intent of the bill if it were left out, and yet I think it is important. If the committee has no objection, I should be very glad to have the matter go over.

Mr. FERRIS. We can return to it if we find we are in error about it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Wyoming that the only legislative thing done in the first section is to define who shall be qualified to take a lease. All the rest of the matter in that section is descriptive. The question the gentleman raises with reference to lands and deposits on lands is specifically covered when we come to treat of different deposits; and I will say to the gentleman that the language of the bill as originally introduced last year did contain the word "lands" as he now seeks to have it amended, and it was because of objection from Western States that it was feared that that might be construed as general authority to lease lands, and therefore might in some way modify our surface land laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If the gentleman will allow me, I think he is scarcely correct when he says that this first section is descriptive. The first section is the all-important section of the bill; without this first section there would be no authority in the Secretary of the Interior or anyone else to lease any of these lands. It is the section which provides that certain of these lands and deposits may be disposed of as thereafter provided. There is no authority to do that now.

Mr. LENROOT. I call the gentleman's attention to section 3, relating to coal, where the Secretary is authorized upon competition, and so forth (dropping to line 25), to grant leases of the lands or the deposits therein through advertisement or competitive bids, and that is complete in itself.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, that is all the more reason why the first section should be made harmonious with the third section and with the second section. It is true that the third section when it comes to treat the matter of coal does refer to land. The second section does refer to lands, not in the language of the section but by reference to the statute. The first section, which is the one which lays down the new rule, which provides the new procedure, should be in harmony with what follows in the bill and what is contemplated by it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The second paragraph does nothing more than to preserve the present law with reference to coal.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; and that law provides for the sale of lands, not the surface, not the deposits, but all that the land contains, and fee title is conveyed. The land is sold with the coal and any other mineral which it may contain. The title is a complete fee and there is no proposition of deposits, so that when you in the first section treat of deposits, and then in the second section attempt to or do, as a matter of fact, revive and retain the present coal-land law, which treats of lands and not deposits, your first section does not harmonize with the balance of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming withdraws the pro forma amendment, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

COAL.

SEC. 2. That classified coal lands or deposits of coal belonging to the United States, exclusive of those in Alaska, may, unless an offering, an application for offering, or an application for lease is pending hereunder, be acquired in accordance with the provisions of sections 2347 to 2352, inclusive, of the United States Revised Statutes, and acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, or such lands or deposits may be leased, as hereinafter provided.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not want to unnecessarily detain the committee, but this section so clearly indicates the necessity for the amendment that I offered to the first section that I want to emphasize the matter. As matters now stand, coal lands may be acquired at classified prices under what we call the coal-land law. The purchaser secures a fee title. This section says that classified coal lands may be disposed of, but the first section is the section which authorizes this retention of the coal-land law and the enactment of the detailed provisions which follow relative to the leasing of land. It may be there are those somewhere in the West who are so much opposed to the thought or idea of leasing that they dislike to have the word "lands" and the word "leasing" brought into conjunction, but we are proposing to lease lands.

That is what we are proposing to do here. We are proposing to sell land, and the only deposits we lease are the deposits contained in the lands which have been entered under a limited title, reserving the mineral to the United States. Therefore, if this bill is to be made harmonious, there should be an amendment to the first section such as I have suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] withdraws his pro forma amendment, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to, and upon the petition of any applicant qualified under this act shall, divide any of the coal lands or the deposits of coal, classified and unclassified, owned by the United States outside of the Territory of Alaska, into leasing blocks or tracts of 40 acres each, or multiples thereof, and in such form as, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, will permit the most economical mining of the coal in such blocks, but in no case exceeding 2,560 acres in any one leasing block or tract; and thereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall, in his discretion, from time to time, upon the request of any applicant qualified under this act or on his own motion, offer such lands or deposits of coal for leasing, and, upon a royalty fixed by him in advance, shall award leases thereof through advertisement, by competitive bidding, or, in case of lignite or low-grade coals, such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, to any person above the age of 21 years who is a citizen of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation or municipality organized under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory thereof: Provided, That no railroad or other common carrier shall be permitted to take or acquire through lease or permit under this act any coal lands or deposits of coal in excess of such area or quantity as may be required and used solely for its own use, and such limitation of use shall be expressed in all leases or permits issued to railroads or common carriers hereunder. That such a railroad or comomn carrier may be permitted to take under the foregoing provisions not to exceed one lease hereunder upon and for each 200 miles of its line in actual operation. The term "railroad" or "common carrier" as used in this act shall include any company or corporation owning or operating a railroad, whether under a contract, agreement, or lease, and any company or corporation subsidiary or auxiliary thereto, whether directly or indirectly connected with such railroad or common carrier.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 2, in line 12, insert, after the word "any," the word "qualified," and after the word "applicant" strike out of lines 12 and 13 the words "qualified under this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 22, after the word "any," insert the word "qualified," and strike out, in lines 22 and 23, the words "qualified under this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, after the word "any," in line 3, strike out the following: "person above the age of twenty-one years who is a citizen of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation or municipality organized under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory thereof," and insert in lieu thereof the words, "qualified applicant."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, after the word "carrier," in line 23, insert:

"But shall not include spurs, switches, or branch lines operated by any lessee and necessary to connect the mine with the line or lines of any railroad or other common carrier.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

This section contains, it seems to me, three very objectionable features, and yet I shall offer no amendment to it. In order to amend the section and have the amendment harmonious with the balance of the bill the amendment would have to be of considerable length and contain a number of propositions. I did offer such an amendment last year, and, of course, the chairman was able to place me at a disadvantage by saying the amendment was so long and contained so many propositions that no member of the committee could understand them all, and therefore no one would vote for them. That was sound logic. It is impossible to amend features of this bill that I think ought to be amended without full consent of the gentleman in charge, because any considerable change would require an amendment of very considerable length and involve a number of propositions, and while some members of the committee might agree to one proposition they would not agree to the others. So, what I am saying about this section I am saying for the benefit of the gentlemen when they shall appear in conference, assuming that elsewhere there may be some changes made, which is likely to happen.

The first of the objections to this section is fundamental. It is an objection to all legislation of this kind because of the fact that it grants no rights to any American citizen. It gives no one any assurance that under any circumstances may he be certain of being able to secure a lease. We simply give the Secretary of the Interior authority to do certain things, and we leave it entirely in his discretion whether he shall do them or not. That is a very radical departure from our past legislation, all of which has been in the nature of the grant of certain rights or privileges or opportunities. No right, privilege, or opportunity is granted in this bill from cover to cover, except one that I shall refer to later on that should not be granted, except as it may please the Secretary of the Interior to grant them. That is the first objection.

The second objection is one that I called attention to last year in connection with the discussion of the Alaskan bill. Now, we are starting out to lease public coal lands. There are 19,000,000 classified acres of them, and will eventually be twice as great an area if all are classified. In one place in my State there is a single coal field that is about 30 miles wide and nearly 100 miles long. It will be a great many years, it will be generations, it will be hundreds of years, before all of this land is used. Some of it probably never will be mined. In providing for the leasing of these areas we should provide merely that the Secretary of the Interior may lease to applicants, or that applicants may secure leases, within the prescribed limits as to compactness and acreage. That would be a very simple proposition. It is the sort of provision that would naturally occur to anyone drafting a leasing bill, but it is not the sort of a provision that would occur to a bureau chief, because that sort of provision would not give the bureau chief and his bureau much to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. That kind of a provision would not give the bureau chief or bureau much of anything to do in connection with the granting of the lease. The individual would go out on the public domain, find a tract of land he desired to lease, apply for it, and the Secretary would determine whether or not it were in properly compact form; and all the conditions being complied with, the lease would be granted and the bureau would not come in at all. What has been done in this bill is not to provide that the Secretary may lease or that applicants may acquire leases, but that the Secretary of the Interior shall divide up into leasing blocks all of the public lands of the United States containing coal. If we really expect to do that, we can not hope to lease an acre of this land within the next 10 years.

Let us take the situation in Alaska. There are only a couple of fields there which people desire to lease. They are small. This provision contained in the Alaskan bill is not a particularly onerous or trying one, because the acreage and the area is small; and yet in response to a recent inquiry made of the Secretary of the Interior I was informed that they could not receive applications because the land had not been divided into leasing blocks. We passed the bill on the assumption that the people wanted to lease immediately, and that we must open the coal fields of Alaska immediately. But I have been informed that no applications for lease could be considered, because the department had not even started on the work of dividing these coal lands up into leasing blocks.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me at that point?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman is aware of the fact that until the railroad gets to these coal fields there is no possibility of offering any of them?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, the gentleman who is now speaking developed a coal mine many years ago, 160 miles from the nearest railway, and had the mine opened, the entries driven, the chambers developed, and the mine ready for production when the railroad reached us, and that work required something like two years before the railroad came. I object to this because it is so unnecessary. No man would ever have thought of it or dreamed of it, except a bureau chief who wants work for his bureau.

If you had a lot of land to lease and were willing to lease it, providing the lessee would conform to certain requirements as to compactness and certain limitations as to area, would you not say to him, "Go out and let us know what you would like to lease"? Or would you say, "We are going to survey this and lay it out and determine just how much you should want and how much you should have. While it is true you may want four sections, yet we will divide some of it into 40-acre tracts"?

The fact is that no one can pick out a coal-mine location for some one else. There are so many questions to be considered, questions of the thickness and depth and situation of the veins, questions as to the best point of attack, questions as to the location of tracts, where the entries must be driven for economical mining, and so on. That costs money, lots of money. In some cases a hundred thousand dollars has been spent before the parties knew just where they could advantageously attack a coal vein.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the gentleman's shaft of criticism, it is leveled purely against the leasing system, as suggested by this bill, and not that the provisions here as to leasing will conflict in any way with the old system, which is carried on and continued by this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. All of which proves to what little purpose, apparently, I have discussed this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more, because I do not want my position to be misunderstood.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], if he had listened at all to the discussion here in times past, should know that I have accepted the leasing idea as to coal and oil long since; that I have introduced coal-leasing bills for a number of years. I believe that whether we like it or not we shall come to leasing of coal and oil lands. I do believe there are real benefits to be had from leasing. If the gentleman had done me the honor to listen yesterday to my remarks, he would know that real benefits are to be secured by public control and leasing. If I had my way, I would have the leasing in the hands of the States; but I realize that that can not be accomplished. I believe that you can obtain benefits in the way of safety, and in the elimination of waste, and in the larger returns which the community receives as its mineral wealth is exhausted, providing you have the right kind of law. The only trouble with this bill is that it is not the right kind of leasing law.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not the Mondell law.

Mr. MONDELL. I have no interest in this matter except to make the bill workable. I do not know any reason why we should invite the departments to spend millions of dollars in developing these areas into square or oblong or rectangular blocks, blocks that will not in one case out of a thousand be the blocks that any lessee will eventually take, because when the lessee comes to take his leasehold he must take it in such a way that he can use it to advantage. The gentleman understands that. The lessee must reach the vein economically and so that he can handle it in an economical way; he must have trackage facilities; he must attack the vein from the right direction. As to all these things no one can pick and determine for him. Do you want to incur the expense of doing the prospecting work? Why should the public stand all that expense, which the miner or the lessee prefers to pay, because he realizes no one can do it for him? I can not see any reason for it. It is simply inviting a vast public expenditure and inviting long delays before leases can be made, and will result in unsatisfactory conditions after it is all done.

Now, so much for that. There is another provision in the bill in this section relative to leases that I do not like. There is a great deal of a difference of opinion as to the basis upon which you should fix the royalties. The royalties are fixed in the bill on a competitive basis. I think that is a very great mistake. If I were going to draw the bill I would have Congress fix the royalties or provide at least a minimum and a maximum; I would have Congress say something about it. But I would, however, very much prefer to leave the question of royalty to the Secretary of the Interior rather than have a provision like this, under which, after a man has gone to all the expense of prospecting and deciding and determining the location, dip, trend, and character of the vein, his lease is put up to the highest bidder and some fellow who has not spent a dollar, who has had no interest in the matter up to that time, may, by bidding a bonus over and above the royalty fixed by the Secretary, take away from him that which he has spent his time and money on.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 12, after the word "use," insert the words "which quantity shall be determined by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, all legislation necessarily should be as specific as possible. This section provides—

That no railroad or other common carrier shall be permitted to take or acquire through lease or permit under this act any coal lands or deposits of coal in excess of such area or quantity as may be required and used solely for its own use.

Now, what does that term "use" apply to? It says:

And such limitation of use shall be expressed in all leases or permits issued to railroads or common carriers hereunder.

Then follows the provision—

That such a railroad or common carrier may be permitted to take under the foregoing provisions not to exceed one lease hereunder upon and for each 200 miles of its line in actual operation. The term "railroad" or "common carrier" as used in this act shall include any company or corporation owning or operating a railroad, whether under a contract, agreement, or lease, and any company or corporation subsidiary or auxiliary thereto, whether directly or indirectly connected with such railroad or common carrier.

Now, at some time somebody has got to determine what that term "area or quantity" means. I suppose the genial and clever gentleman from Oklahoma will say this is taken care of in some other part of this bill, but I can not find it taken care of.

A railroad comes in and asks for a certain quantity of land for its use. Now, for what purpose and use? To build a track upon or to mine coal for the purpose of running its locomotives and trains? If you do not place some limitation in this law, some court or somebody at some time has got to place a limitation as to what is necessary for its use. Is it not far better to place that limitation in the hands of some one in this bill than to leave it open to doubt for some one to conjure over or, finally, for some court in some far distant part of this country to determine?

The great trouble with legislation, as a rule, is that it is not definite enough, and it leaves grave opportunities for questions to be raised, especially by large corporations who have large sums of money to spend in litigation, and they can finally fight these matters through to a position where they can get a decision in their favor. Now, I believe in placing this arbitrary power of determining the area or quantity of land that any railroad may have in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. If it is taken care of in some other part of the bill, I would like to know it. I can not find it. Perhaps the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] can point to some section. I have been unable to find it and therefore have proposed this amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I know the gentleman from Ohio has offered his amendment for the best purposes, and I know that the thing he speaks of should be done; but it is also my opinion that it is done, and if the gentleman will turn to page 27 of the bill——

Mr. EMERSON. I did not see it there.

Mr. FERRIS. It says—

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe necessary and proper rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act.

Now let me read the paragraph where the gentleman offered his amendment on page 3:

And such limitation of use shall be expressed in all leases or permits issued to railroads or common carriers hereunder.

Now, here is a general section which gives the Secretary full power to work out all details of all sorts, and then here is the specific language in the paragraph which the gentleman seeks to amend, which says that the thing he desires shall be put in the lease, and the Secretary is given the authority to write the lease and does execute the lease. I think that gives him the power.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. EMERSON. But the Secretary of the Interior is acting in an official capacity, and the courts have ruled that if he is unfair, litigants may appeal, and people who have been wronged may appeal to the courts for mandamus against him.

Mr. STAFFORD. The courts have decided just the opposite, so far as the decisions that have gone up from the Post Office Department are concerned.

Mr. EMERSON. That may be true as to the Post Office Department, but it is not true as to this.

Mr. FERRIS. All through this bill we give the Secretary of the Interior specific authority. I am quite sure we give him special and general authority to cover this.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on this.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes, three minutes of which shall go to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and two minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes, three minutes to be assigned to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and two minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, if the provision referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] was a grant to the railroads by the terms of the act to take such amount of coal from the public lands as was necessary for their own use, then the point made by him would be well taken, that in that case the quantity ought to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior; but I want to call attention to the fact that whatever they get, they get under a lease issued by the Secretary of the Interior, and therefore the Secretary, in issuing the lease itself, determines the quantity which, in his judgment, is necessary for the use of the company. Then, moreover, the limitation of use must be expressed in the lease itself.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, personally I do not like the provision in the bill which authorizes a railroad company to secure a coal lease. I am one of those who believe that railroad companies should attend to the business of transportation, and that business alone, and that if they need coal they should buy it; but the provision is in the bill. I want to call the attention of the Chairman and members of the committee to this fact, or rather, I want to propound a query. A railroad company secures a lease under this act. There is a provision in section 22 of the bill under which—

No corporation shall hold any interest as a stockholder of another corporation in more than one such lease; and no person shall take or hold any interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof which, together with the area embraced in any direct holding of a lease under this act, or which, together with any other interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof, exceeds in the aggregate an amount equivalent to the maximum number of acres allowed to any one lessee under this act.

Query: Railroad companies have a great many stockholders. If a railroad company has a lease under this act, can any stockholder in the company acquire a lease, and if so, how and under what conditions, and how much? May I hope for an answer?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That any person, association, or corporation holding a lease of coal lands or coal deposits under this act may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, upon a finding by him that it will be for the advantage of the lessee and the United States, secure a modification of his or its original lease by including additional coal lands or coal deposits contiguous to those embraced in such lease, but in no event shall the total area embraced in such modified lease exceed in the aggregate 2,560 acres.

That upon satisfactory showing by any lessee to the Secretary of the Interior that all of the workable deposits of coal within a tract covered by his or its lease will be exhausted, worked out, or removed within three years thereafter, the Secretary of the Interior may, within his discretion, lease to such lessee an additional tract of land or coal deposits, which, including the coal area remaining in the original lease, shall not exceed 2,560 acres, through the same procedure and under the same conditions as in case of an original lease.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 4, line 20, strike out the word "original" and insert the word "existing."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, there is an unimportant amendment in line 7, on page 4, which I think has not been acted upon. It is to strike out the words "a modification" and insert the word "modifications."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 7, after the word "secure," strike out "a modification" and insert "modifications."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 7. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the coal in the lands covered by his lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed in advance of offering the same, and which shall be not less than 2 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the coal from the mine, and an annual rental, payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter, on the lands or coal deposits covered by such lease, at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to offering the same, which shall be not less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, not less than 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and not less than $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition of continued operation of the mine or mines, except when such operation shall be interrupted by strikes, the elements, or casualties not attributable to the lessee, and upon the further condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of the lease such readjustment of terms and conditions may be made as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, if in his judgment the public interest will be subserved thereby, in lieu of the provision herein contained requiring continuous operation of the mine or mines, provide in the lease for the payment of an annual advance royalty upon a minimum number of tons of coal, which in no case shall aggregate less than the amount of rentals herein provided for.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 6, after the word "of," at the beginning of the line, insert the words "diligent development and."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to what strikes me as an omission in this section. These leases, or many of them, are to be under competitive bidding; the Secretary fixes the royalty which must be paid, and then there is to be competitive bidding. I suppose that competition might be in the offering of additional royalty or the offering of a bonus. One objection to that sort of thing is that it gives the fellow with the longest pole the chance to get all the persimmons. The man who has the ready cash for a bonus can get a lease away from a poor man who has not the bonus price. One of the arguments to persuade people that Federal leases will not be as bad as they have feared was that the poor man could open a coal mine under a lease when he could not afford to buy the land; but if he has to compete with a man who is ready to pay a bonus, then he would be no better off than he would if he had to buy the land.

But that is not what I started in to discuss. The bill provides for the bonus or additions to the royalty. But this section very clearly states what the lessee shall pay, and having set out specifically what he shall pay, nothing more can be required of him. Section 7 says:

That for the privilege of mining or extracting the coal in the lands covered by his lease—

And I want the chairman to give me his attention, because he does not want this to get away from him; he does not want to make provision for bonuses and then let the fellow with the bank roll defeat the poor man and afterwards find that he can not collect the bonus from the lessee.

The section says:

The lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed in advance of offering the same.

And then, a little farther down, it says:

And an annual rental, payable at the date of such lease.

And so forth.

There is thus set forth clearly in this section what the lessee is to pay, and having set forth what he is to pay he can be required to pay no more, under a proper construction of the statute.

It is true that when the lease is advertised the Secretary will expect a bonus, a bonus in cash or in additional royalty over and above the royalty which the Secretary has fixed. But in this section which determines what the lessee shall pay it is made very clear that he can not be called upon to pay anything but the royalty that the Secretary fixes in advance and his annual rental on the land. In the proper place there should be a provision that the successful bidder should also pay "such bonus or additional royalty as may have been offered by the bidder at the time of the competition." Something of that sort, it seems to me, ought to be in the bill or you will find that you can not collect these bonuses. I do not believe in the competitive bidding on leases, but if we are to have them let us provide for the payment of the bonus bid.

I want to call attention to another provision in the bill to compliment the committee. I want to emphasize the compliment, because I can not repeat it frequently in the discussion of the bill. [Laughter.] One of the difficulties in getting anyone to approve public leasing is due to the fact that at the beginning those who favored it were inclined to be so unreasonable in their requirements that it frightened everybody out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wyoming have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. One of the trying questions was the length of the lease. A good many people were of the opinion that leases should be very brief. They got the idea that the public should in a brief period be able to recapture, or, if not recapture, make new and different terms. That was all a mistake. There are perhaps only a few people that have my view of it, that the whole recapture idea is a mistake and will be a burden to the consumer. But in this case the committee has entirely got away from the short lease and recapture business and concluded that the proper term of a coal lease is forever and amen, for they fix an indeterminate period, which means a period that will run on forever if the lessee does the right thing.

They provide, however, that at the expiration of certain periods there may be, and shall be, a readjustment. That, in my opinion, is the form of lease that should be made, and as to that feature of the bill I am heartily in accord with the committee. I am wondering why, having been so wise with regard to the period of a coal lease, the committee turns right about face, and when they came to an oil lease made it for 20 years when, as a matter of fact, the oil operator would in many cases be subjected to greater loss at the expiration of his brief lease than would the coal operator; and if it is proper to do this, which is in the interest of the consumer of coal, in my opinion, then why should we chop off a power lease at the end of 50 years and recapture the property? It does not seem to me that the committee has been entirely consistent. While I approve this feature of the bill, I can not approve the provisions which follow, and a little later I want to discuss the provisions with regard to oil. It seems to me this very proper provision of an indeterminate lease is the same sort of provision which we should make with regard to oil leases.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I really think the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is more intelligent than he seems to be in his discussion of this question. He asks why we have an indeterminate lease in the case of coal. He asks why we have not an indeterminate lease in the case of water power. He wants to know why we have a determinate lease in the case of oil. I am sure the gentleman when he reflects must realize the purpose of those distinctions. In the first place, in the case of coal, a very large body of coal may take a very long time to exhaust. The gentleman says that he has had some experience in oil. If he has he knows that at the end of a certain period the production of an oil well decreases—is very much less than it was at the time it was first drilled and discovery made; and, therefore, in the interest of the operator, in the interest of fairness, at the end of a long period there should be opportunity to readjust the rentals and royalties, because an oil well producing 10 barrels of oil a day ought not to pay as large a royalty proportionately as an oil well producing a thousand barrels of oil a day. Then, as to water power, the gentleman ought to realize that in dealing with these resources they are entirely of a different class than dealing with water power. We are exhausting these resources in the leasing of them. A lease of oil or coal is really not properly a lease. It is an actual disposition of the very thing itself, a disposition of the coal, a disposition of the oil; but in the case of water power the same amount is there at the end of 20 years that there was in the beginning, but conditions may then have so changed that there ought to be a readjustment of the terms and conditions of the lease. In the one case we are exhausting the thing we are disposing of, or leasing, and in the other case it is not exhausted at all.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am sure that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is more intelligent than one might judge from his discussion. I am sure he is. He says that we should have an indeterminate lease on coal and not on oil, because a coal mine lasts longer than an oil well. It may last 20 or 30 or 40 or 50 years, whereas an oil well may not last so long, therefore the coal lease should be for a long period, he says, forgetting, evidently, that he does not approve a long or indeterminate lease on it, but we should not have an indeterminate water power, which lasts forever. There may be some logic in that sort of argument, but I do not gather it. The only interest we have as legislators, or should have—and I am sure the only interest we have—is to give the people the very best benefits from the use and development of these resources. We want the largest developments, and we want the people to secure the products at the lowest price, and we will do that most effectively as we least disturb the tenure, because the moment you disturb the tenure you give an excuse for piling up charges to pay for the losses incident to the disturbance of the tenure. Therefore this is a very excellent provision. An oil well, it is true, does not ordinarily last as long as a coal mine, but that is no reason why the lease should not also be indeterminate. It may last longer, but in any case there is no reason why the royalty should not be readjusted at frequent intervals.

If it be deemed wise to readjust the royalty at more frequent intervals in the case of oil than in the case of coal, I should not quarrel with that kind of a proposition. I think it might be wise, but there is not, in my opinion, any reason why there should be a limitation in the lease in the case of oil and no limitation in the period of lease in the case of coal. The basic facts are these: We want large development, we want cheap service, and in my opinion we shall secure them most effectively as we allow these enterprises, always under public control, to run along in the even tenor of their way, without sudden changes in the conditions that surround them that may cause great losses which will be borne not by the operators but by the consumer, for finally it all comes back to the man who buys the current, the man who buys the oil, the man who buys the coal. He is eventually the burden bearer, and therefore we make a very great mistake if we imagine we can lay burdens or put obstacles in the way of development that will not eventually be placed on his shoulder.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That in order to provide for the supply of strictly local and domestic needs for fuel, the Secretary of the Interior may, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe in advance, issue to any applicant qualified to obtain a lease under section 3 of this act a limited license or permit granting the right to prospect for, mine, and dispose of coal belonging to the United States on specified tracts, not to exceed 10 acres in any one coal field, for a period of not exceeding 10 years, on such conditions, not inconsistent with this act, as in his opinion will safeguard the public interest, without payment of royalty for the coal mined or for the land occupied: Provided, That not more than one such limited license or permit shall be issued to any single applicant hereunder: And provided further, That in the case of municipal corporations the Secretary of the Interior may issue such limited license or permit, for not to exceed 160 acres, upon condition that such municipal corporations will mine the coal therein under proper conditions and dispose of the same without profit: And provided further, That the acquisition or holding of a lease under the preceding sections of this act shall be no bar to the acquisition of such tract or operation of such mine under said limited license.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman from Wyoming wish to be heard on this section? I was going to ask unanimous consent not to read the part that was stricken out.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to be heard on this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As a matter of fact, I do not want to be heard on this section. I think the section is all right, but I do want to refer to a matter that has temporarily escaped me.

This legislation with regard to coal contains no provision for preliminary prospecting. The oil sections of the bill provide for a prospecting permit. The coal sections of the bill do not. I think it is a very great mistake not to make such provision. The gentlemen want to have their legislation harmonious. They will remember they had a provision for an exclusive prospecting period on water-power sites, a provision which, in my opinion, was altogether unnecessary and might in some cases lead to great injury and hardship, because all there is to do on a water site is to survey, and half a dozen surveying parties, if they are friendly and decent, can survey at the same time the same territory. I have frequently seen it done. But no two men can amicably or profitably prospect the same ground for minerals with a view of opening a mine.

It will not charge the committee, or any member of the committee with having drafted this bill, but whoever drafted it evidently had in mind a developed coal field. Let us imagine such a coal field as there is down in the district represented by our honored friend, the chairman, where the vein lies under comparatively level ground at a uniform depth below the surface and is practically the same in character wherever found. A shaft can be sent down almost anywhere, and the place to open the mines is the point along the line of the railroad, already built, where you can get a sidetrack. That is all there is to it. And if that were the situation everywhere it would not be necessary to have a prospecting permit.

If I may be allowed to refer to a little personal experience, I will say that years ago I spent over two years of very hard work and a great deal of other people's money and a little of my own trying to find a certain place in a coal vein where the coal was thick enough and good enough and the conditions were such as to make it possible to successfully open a mine. That period of prospecting was a long, arduous, and expensive one, and my experience was a common one in the development of coal fields. If we are to lease these lands, we certainly ought to give the prospective lessee an opportunity to go on the land, to prospect the ground, to determine the proper point in which to attack the vein, and to determine the areas which he needs for his development. And I think two years would be brief enough. We provide for that under a water-power bill, where it is not necessary. We provide for it under the oil section of this bill, but we make no provisions here, and nobody has told us why.

Mr. FERRIS. The committee has transposed phosphates and oil in the bill. We just took up the phosphate provision bodily and transposed it. I ask unanimous consent to omit the reading of the phosphate provision entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment commencing on line 20, page 7, and extending to and ending on line 7, page 10, be omitted and the amendment be adopted. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OIL AND GAS.

SEC. 14. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any applicant qualified under this act a prospecting permit, which shall give the exclusive right, for a period not exceeding two years, to prospect for oil or gas upon not to exceed 640 acres of lands wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are located within 10 miles from any producing oil or gas well, and upon not to exceed 2,560 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are situated over 10 miles from any producing oil or gas well, upon condition that the permittee shall begin drilling operations within six months from the date of the permit, and shall, within one year from and after the date of permit, drill for oil or gas to an aggregate depth of not less than 500 feet, and shall, within two years from date of the permit, drill for oil or gas to an aggregate depth of not less than 2,000 feet. Whether the lands sought in any such application and permit are surveyed or unsurveyed the applicant shall, prior to filing his application for permit, locate such lands in a reasonably compact form and according to the legal subdivisions of the public land surveys, if the land be surveyed; and in an approximately square or rectangular tract if the land be an unsurveyed tract, the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width, and if he shall cause to be erected upon the land for which a permit is sought, a monument not less than 4 feet high, at some conspicuous place thereon, and shall post a notice in writing on or near said monument, stating that an application for permit will be made within 30 days after date of said notice, the name of the applicant, the date of the notice, and such a general description of the land to be covered by such permit by reference to courses and distances from such monument and such other natural objects and permanent monuments as will identify the land, stating the amount thereof in acres, he shall during the period of 30 days following such marking and posting, be entitled to a preference right over others to a permit for the land so identified. The applicant shall, within 90 days after receiving a permit, mark each of the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with permanent monuments, so that the boundaries can be readily traced, and shall post in a conspicuous place upon the lands a notice that such permit has been granted and a description of the lands covered thereby: Provided, That in the Territory of Alaska prospecting permits may be granted for periods not exceeding four years, actual drilling operations shall begin within two years from date of permit, and oil and gas wells shall be drilled to a depth of not less than 500 feet within three years from date of the permit and to an aggregate depth of not less than 2,000 feet within four years from date of permit: And provided further, That in said Territory the applicant shall have a preference right over others to a permit for land identified by temporary monuments and notice posted on or near the same, for six months following such marking and posting, and upon receiving a permit he shall mark the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with permanent monuments within one year after receiving such permit.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 12, line 1, after the word "traced," insert the words "on the ground."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

We have reached the section of the bill relating to oil and gas and the provision relative to a prospecting permit, to which I referred a moment ago. The provision for a prospecting permit is a most excellent one. The committee, however, has laid down an arbitrary rule as to the size of the prospecting permit which it seems to me is not wise or reasonable.

The committee evidently proceeds on the assumption that land within 10 miles of a producing well is in the nature of developed oil territory, and that the land beyond is new, virgin, wild-cat territory. Well, that is rather a violent assumption. No hard-and-fast rule can be laid down. Land within half a mile of a producing well may be the most unlikely of all the land for miles around, from a productive standpoint. It may be in an entirely different geological horizon. Faults may occur that radically change conditions. A well located near the base of an anticlinal may be the outside limit of successful or profitable production. The provision fixing a certain acreage here and a certain acreage there in these prospecting leases, depending on distance from a producing well, is purely arbitrary and not based on any rule of reason.

But what I want to call attention to is something that follows this. I want to discuss it briefly now, and I shall want to discuss it more fully on the next section. This is a leasing bill, so taken and accepted, and so "denominated in the bond"; and yet, so far as oil is concerned, it is a law under which we propose to give away, without money and without price, 25 per cent of all the oil lands of the country.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] held me up to scorn—as I assume he supposed—when the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] was addressing the House, when he said that I proposed to give to those developing power public lands at the rate of $1.25 to $20 an acre. Of course, my theory is that a piece of public land that is not worth over $1.25 an acre ought not to be sold for more than $1.25 an acre. If some one will take such land and develop water power on it, he will do a good thing for the community.

Mr. FERRIS. He will turn around and put a water power on that he gets for $1.25 and give it a valuation of $15,000,000 and base his price to be charged to the consumer upon that; and that is what they are doing out there. That is what we wanted to prevent here.

Mr. MONDELL. The Secretary, under the power bill, will in certain cases fix the rates. In most cases it is controlled by the States. He is not supposed to fix rates that will be confiscatory. Of course, if a power company can take land that is worth $1.25 and assume that it is worth $15,000,000 and fix a rate based on $15,000,000 and get the Secretary or a State public-service commission to fix or approve rates based on such a valuation, injustice is done; but we can not assume anything of the kind will be allowed. The gentleman would have us believe that after all we were going to be gobbled up by these corporations; that the communities and public-service commissions will neither protect themselves nor the public. What will you do?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman is aware of the fact that whatever the value of the water power is, the right-of-way value can not be considered as the value of the property itself, as it would be if it were in private ownership.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to have a little more time.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wyoming may have five minutes more, and that at the expiration of that time debate on this paragraph close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. EMERSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee to explain in a minute or two why he gives so much time to Alaska? He gives four years. On page 12, line 4, the bill reads:

Provided, That in the Territory of Alaska prospecting permits may be granted for a period not exceeding four years.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] will yield to me just a moment, I think I can explain it.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well.

Mr. FERRIS. In the conditions of Alaska, some parts of Alaska, they can work all the year round, particularly along the coast, but elsewhere they can work only in the summer, so that in hauling machinery in there, with their poor facilities and lack of railroads, much more time is required. Representatives of the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines came before us and explained that there should be a little more latitude given up there so that they could get material in.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming will proceed.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] reminds us that the fear expressed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], his colleague on the committee, is unfounded; that we are not going to allow rates to be fixed on a fictitious valuation of water-power sites any more. Would a public-service commission in a State approve a rate based on such fictitious value?

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman permit me to answer?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. In the gentleman's bill he proposed a grant of these sites, and that grant being made, no public-service commission of any State could do otherwise than give to that corporation, in fixing the rate, the value in the market of that grant, while under our proposition it is expressly provided that they shall take nothing for the value of it.

Mr. MONDELL. All of which is the gentleman's opinion, but none of which is true. [Laughter.]

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield once more?

Mr. MONDELL. If I can have another minute. I want to talk about this next section. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Perhaps the gentleman does not know that in the West public-service commissions to-day are doing the very thing that he says is not true.

Mr. MONDELL. They must have some very weak sisters of public-service commissions. That is not the situation in my State. The value of such a site, in addition to what it costs, is the value of the improvements and betterments. That would be a fair basis of rates anywhere.

Mr. FERRIS. Some States not only have weak public-service corporations, but some States do not have any at all.

Mr. MONDELL. There is only one State in that situation.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, no; there are several.

Mr. MONDELL. I repeat what I have said here before, that I do not agree with the gentleman that if there is a State in the Union that will not protect itself you can protect it successfully from Washington. I am paying more for my electric light right here in Washington than I pay in the little berg in Wyoming in which I live; and if Federal control is such a good thing why on earth do we not get to work and reduce the rates here in this city where coal is so cheap and where there is enormous water power undeveloped right at our doors?

In the minute I have remaining I want to call the attention to the next section of this bill, under which, speaking of giving things away, the gentlemen of the committee propose to grant in fee simple oil lands that may be worth anywhere from $1,000,000 to $20,000,000; 640-acre tracts of land are given away. You remember the old jingle:

This is the day they give babies away
With a half a pound of tea.

This is the day when we give away 640 acres, right on the dome of the best oil fields in the West, to any fellow who wants to come along and take it. That is the provision of your bill. When it comes to giving things away, subsidizing corporations, handing out the public domain, here is a lovely provision, the like of which no one ever dreamed of until this bill was submitted. I will venture this assertion: That if any gentleman from the West had brought in a bill containing such a provision as is the next section he would have lost every shred of standing that he ever had or hoped to have in the House and would have been pilloried here and elsewhere the country over as the most unprincipled and conscienceless looter of the public domain that ever came down the trail. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Wyoming——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this section has been closed.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma may have five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. No; go ahead. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma objects. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 15. That upon establishing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of oil or gas have been discovered within the limits of the land embraced in any permit, the permittee shall be entitled to a patent for one-fourth of the land embraced in the prospecting permit, such area to be selected by the permittee in compact form and according to the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, if the land be surveyed, or to be surveyed at his expense in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of placer mining claims if located upon unsurveyed lands: Provided, That all merchantable timber upon land patented hereunder shall be reserved to the United States to be cared for, used, or disposed of in accordance with applicable laws and regulations, and such reservation shall be expressed in each patent issued hereunder: Provided further, That each permittee who desires to secure a patent under the terms of this section shall, within 90 days from and after discovery of valuable deposits of oil or gas in the land embraced in his permit, file in the land office of the district in which the land is located, his application for patent for the tract selected, in default of which he shall be required to thereafter pay royalty for the oil or gas produced therefrom during the remainder of the term covered by his permit, as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and the tract and deposits of oil or gas therein shall thereafter be subject to lease as prescribed in section 16 hereof.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 12, line 19, strike out the figures "15" and insert the figures "10."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I understand that there is to be considerable debate on this section, and I suggest to the chairman of the committee that it go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. FERRIS. That is what I intended to do. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CULLOP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 406) to authorize the exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HOWELL, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for three days on account of illness.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The letter of the Secretary of the Navy with reference to estimates was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and it should have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

There was no objection.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. HELVERING, be allowed to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas be allowed to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is not my intention to take any length of time in discussing the proposition, but I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the rural-credit bill which will be introduced in the House will not, in my opinion, fill the needs of the people in the district where I live, and therefore I introduced a bill a few days ago. To-day my purpose in rising is to have printed in the RECORD an explanation of that bill. It is somewhat lengthy, and I will not take the time to read it, but will ask unanimous consent to print it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of rural credits. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RURAL CREDITS—THE NEED OF A SYSTEM WHICH WILL BRING RELIEF WITHOUT UNDUE DELAY.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to introduce a bill dealing with rural credits. All political parties were on record as favoring legislation which would bring relief to those who are engaged in agriculture, and it was my hope and belief that the responsible committee would report a measure which would be practical and which would bring relief needed at the lowest possible cost.

Disillusionment came with the introduction of the bill favored by the commission in the Sixty-third Congress. That bill was not scientific, and it held out no certain promise of relief. It was founded on the theory that each community could and would capitalize a land bank. It provided no machinery by which the bonds of these community banks could find a market, and, therefore, in all probability they could and would sell only to the people of the community in which the bank was located. People in other communities could not well judge of the security behind such bonds; and to invest in them, with such lack of knowledge, would be a gamble pure and simple.

I pointed out that error in public addresses as to the bill introduced in the last Congress, and it is gratifying to learn that its author has come around to the same point of view. At least, he now favors the linking of the community units with regional banks, and by so doing gives greater assurance of the marketing of the bonds. However, I do wish to call attention to the statement of the gentleman from Indiana incorporated in Document No. 679 of the Sixty-third Congress. In that statement he opposed the centralization of a land-bank system and defended the plan of individual banks. He said:

> As a result it (the commission) became convinced that the system outlined in the bill which it had formulated possessed advantages which a central bank would not possess and encouraged competitive banking to an extent that would not be possible under a bill providing for a central institution.

In answer to the above I felt compelled to say:

Not one argument advanced removes the objection to small units or disproves the advantage of a system linked closely together and at all times under Federal control.

The arguments in favor of the Federal Reserve Banking System and its assured success furnish the evidence as to the need of the regional reserve system as applied to land banks.

Furthermore, the attempt to install township units, privately managed and conducted for private gain, would militate against the sale of the bonds. Land bonds would have only a local value, for there would be so many of them and at such varying prices that there would be no stability in value to attract either the investor who is looking for a safe investment for himself or for the placing of trust funds. The ability to market a bond at a low rate of interest is linked with the known safety of the security. Under the bill favored by the commission there would not and could not be such stability. Under the measure which I advocate the security would be equal to that of any Government bond, and would in time of stress have a greater value, for the reason that it would not only have the guaranty of the Government, but would have behind it assured assets which could not be destroyed.

And while the guaranty of the Government is an essential in removing suspicion and in breaking down the prejudice of the unenlightened, it does not necessarily follow that such guaranty will entail any expense upon the Government. The security behind the bond is more than ample to protect the Government, and when the time comes that we can secure the adoption by the States of better methods of registration of titles, transfers, and, if possible, the elimination of exemption clauses, these bonds will be the best known form of investment in the country at the rate of interest permitted.

And the bill now presented by the gentleman from Indiana is an admission that he has seen his error and now favors the centralization of the land-bank system. He was wrong in 1914, and I believe that he is wrong in 1916; and it is in the hope that I can centralize attention on the errors and secure certain relief for those engaged in agriculture that I have introduced a rural-credits bill, and now issue this statement.

My opposition to the measure recommended by the commission is based on the belief that any benefits to accrue from it are problematic. Somewhere, at some time, and in some way it holds out hope, but the success of the measure would depend wholly upon the readiness of local capital to invest in unit banks and upon the readiness of capital in general to invest in regional banks. In each case its success would depend upon the assurance that capital invested would earn a profit. If it did, it would be at the expense of the borrower; and if it did not, the system would surely fail.

A very clever writer once described the inhabitants of the earth, animal and human, as being infested with fleas. The larger fleas provided sustenance to smaller fleas, and so on ad infinitum. This thought is forcibly impressed upon me when I read the measure brought forward by the commission. The efforts of humanity have been largely directed to the elimination of some of the fleas which trouble us, but he would reverse that policy and provide for the establishment of an entirely new class of interest-earning fleas to prey upon the landowners. He would have local bank units taking toll in each community, and he would have another set of interest absorbers higher up whose duty it would be to see that the regional banks were profitable—all at the expense of the landowners.

While the American people are partial to independent banks, yet we all know that the incentive to establish such banks lies in the opportunty to earn unusual profits. Remove that incentive and the number of banks would not be sufficient for the ordinary needs of business. The desire to make these enormous profits was well shown by Comptroller Williams in his recently published statement as to the usurious rates charged, not in isolated sections but all over the country. If the land banks were in position to earn large profits they would fall short of giving the maximum amount of relief to the landowners—and that should be the primary object of any legislation enacted. If they did not earn such profit they would not attract capital; if they did earn large profits, then the farmers would have to carry that extra load.

True, it might be that the spirit of cooperation would induce communities to found such banks, such as has often been done as to community stores and elevators, without regard to profit. The commission which is responsible for the Moss bill is on record as pointing out the difference between conditions in the United States and those in Germany. These conditions can not be changed in generations and they afford the best argument why a purely cooperative system is foredoomed to failure. Not one of the men who favor cooperative banks have been able to explain away these condition. The European farmers, living on the same land for generations, from forebears down to the present holders; men of the same common blood and living in close proximity to each other know each others limitations and possibilities and furnish the soil upon which cooperation thrives. In America, where few men have more than a slight knowledge of their neighbors, where the spirit of individuality is fostered, and where suspicion is more often found than confidence, each man wants to work out his own destiny and does not favor the cooperation which would lift up his neighbor while it may benefit himself.

We have to deal with conditions and not theories, and the commission has pointed out the very reason why cooperation would be but an experiment and one in which we could not pin faith of success.

Here I wish to insert the exact language used by the commission in its report. It is pertinent and applies to the bill introduced by the committee, as well as to any bill which is based on cooperation. The commission said:

> In considering the conditions in Germany as applying to the conditions in the United States, the essential points of difference between the two countries should always be borne in mind. In size the German Empire is about equal to the area of Texas, after cutting off from Texas an area as large as the State of Alabama. In population the German Empire contains about 68,000,000 people, or more than two-thirds of the population of the whole United States. In intensive farming the Germans are ahead of our own farming population, and the average production in Germany has increased greatly, while our average yield per acre has increased but slowly. In Germany the population in a given district is largely homogeneous and the individual is, so to speak, attached to the soil, the same farms continuing in the same families for generations. In this country such a condition is seldom found. In Germany, on account of the limited supply of land and the large population, and on account of the known productivity of each piece of land, the value of that land is easily ascertained and varies within very slight limits. In this country the variations in value are very great. In Germany the average farm is about 20 acres; in this country the average farm is about 138 acres. In Germany the credit and resources of the individual in a community are known to practically every other individual in that community. In this country no such actual information is obtainable. In Germany the small farmer, his wife, and children all do manual work on the farm; in this country such a condition is rare. In Germany the people have been trained to a supervision and control of their operation by strict Government regulations, which would not be favored in this country.

I trust that the preceding statement will be weighed. It was true when written and it is true to-day, and it points out clearly why we can not expect to make a cooperative system work in this country.

If the system proposed by the committee protects the borrower and still attracts capital, it follows that a system in which there is no private incentive to gain, and which has a Government guaranty, would afford far greater protection. Compare the two systems and the answer is self-evident.

If Government aid is unwise, why establish a Government bureau under the bill advocated by the commission? We need Government aid and direct Government control to make any system provide the benefits needed at the earliest possible moment. The needs of business—that is, commercial business—have been cared for in part since the passage of the national-bank act, and are wholly provided for by the Federal reserve act. That being the case, why should the business of farming, the greatest of all, be asked to wait for many years before relief can be granted? The need is now, and in the interest of the farmers now living, and not wholly for those who will come in the years far ahead. The increase in the number of tenant farmers must be stopped if there is to be any real advantage to the farmers of America. The bill favored by the commission may or may not stop this increase. The bill which I have introduced would stop it with certainty. Why, then, should we hesitate in making choice between the problematic and the certainty, the more especially when the certainty would not, in all probability, entail any financial loss upon the Government or be a drain upon all of the people of the country? There is no class legislation in the system proposed by me any more than there was in the national banking act or in the Federal reserve act; and as we have legislated for the banker, merchant, and manufacturer, they should be the first to favor legislating for the farmer, on whose prosperity their own must inevitably rest.

Laying aside the doubt as to the probability of the banks provided for in the bill recommended by the commission being financed, I wish to pay attention to the slight possibility of any real relief coming to the farmers in case they are financed.

At a meeting of the Southern Conference for Education at Chattanooga, Tenn., the last week in April, it was shown that while the average farm profits in the United States are 5 per cent, the farmer pays from 8 to 16 per cent for the money he borrows, and that in the aggregate the farmers pay $200,000,000 more per year in interest on their debts than the entire commercial world.

I trust that you will weigh that statement and fully appreciate its significance. To those who pay 8 to 16 per cent in interest the passage of the bill proposed by the commission would apparently bring relief. But that relief has no basis in truth. As long as the farms of the country earn only 5 per cent, the payment of 6 per cent for mortgage loans means ultimate disaster. A higher interest rate would only accelerate the coming of ruin, and any rate in excess of 5 per cent would mean industrial death, either from lingering illness at a rate of 6 per cent or a quick demise brought about by an interest rate of 8 to 16 per cent.

That time has passed when a mortgage debt on land is looked upon as evidence of disaster. The up-to-date farmer borrows so that he may increase the earning power of his investment, and that is fully shown in the statement of mortgage debt given. The farming States whose prosperity is acknowledged, such as Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois, and Indiana, are shown in the table given as carrying the heaviest burden of debt.

On the other hand, look at conditions in the South, where interest rates are high. Alabama, with nearly 54,000 more tenants than owners operating their lands, has a mortgage debt of only $10,350,577. Does that spell prosperity or adversity? Look at the figures in the following table for Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, North and South Carolina, Florida, and Georgia and you are forced to the conclusion which I have long since reached. The interest rate is keeping the landowners of the South in a state of economic slavery, and the landowner, North and South, will never reach his full growth until you remove the interest eaters from off of his back.

I desire here to insert a table showing the mortgage debt of each State according to the census of 1910, also the number of farms operated by owners and by tenants, and I particularly desire to call the attention of the Representatives from the South to the significance of that table.

Mortgage debt by States—Number of tenants and of farms operated by owners.

Having reached the conclusion that an interest rate of 6 per cent will not afford permanent relief, we are confronted with these problems:

Can we secure a lower rate?

Can we do so and safeguard the loaner?

Can we do so without loss to the Government?

Can we do so without inflating the currency?

In answer I would ask that the questioner study carefully the measure introduced by me and find out wherein it fails to meet objections or is economically weak.

It does not contemplate the imposition of any new or untried theory. We can only be guided by the lamp of experience, and I wish to call your attention to a few facts which are pertinent in this connection.

The official report of New Zealand, issued November 30, 1912, shows that from the time the Government began to make loans to settlers in 1895 up to March 31, 1912, loans had been made to 32,783 settlers to the amount of over $60,000,000 and only 33 of the mortgages had been foreclosed. Of the loans made, 17,897 were still outstanding and 14,886, 45 per cent of all loans made, had been repaid to the Government.

Turning to American experience we find that Idaho had $1,500,000 outstanding in farm loans in 1912 and had been making such loans for 20 years. In all of that time there have not been over a half dozen foreclosures and the State has not sustained the loss of one cent.

From 1907 to June 1, 1912, North Dakota has made 983 loans at 5 per cent to the amount of $1,646,462.85, and the officer reporting says:

> There has been one mortgage foreclosure and the land was sold afterwards on contract at a profit to the State. The State has never lost a cent by such investments.

Oklahoma has been loaning to the farmers since 1907 and in 1912 had about $4,000,000 so loaned. Up to that time no foreclosures had been made, and the only change contemplated was one to lengthen the term of loans from 5 to 10 years.

In summing up from the experience of the world, Hon. B. B. Hare, of the United States Department of Agriculture, says:

> I will only say that the theory of issuing State bonds or the establishment of a State land-mortgage bank by which the bonds are to be issued to supply the needs of the farmers or tenants is amply justified by the experience and practice of the New Zealand, Australia, Canadian, Norwegian, and Philippine Governments, and the feasibility of granting such loans under either plan is thoroughly justified by the experience of eight of the American States.

Here we have fact and not theory. If the experiences related have been so successful, and they are not questioned, how much more certain of success would be the plan outlined in the measure introduced by me, where the bonds have an added value by reason of the privileges granted, by the soundness of the guaranty and the strength of the assets behind them, and where the expense of operation would be held down to a minimum and the debtor have the lightest possible load to carry.

In 1880 the percentage of tenant farmers in the United States was 25.6.

In 1890 the percentage increased to 28.4.

In 1900 it was 35.3.

And in 1910 it was 37.

Showing a steady gain and holding out no hope of encouragement.

In 1890 the number of farms mortgaged was 875,052. In 1900 it was 1,093,164, and in 1910 it reached the number of 1,312,034.

The amount of the mortgage debt reported in 1910 was $1,721,172,851, but this report covers only the farms operated by owners and does not include those operated by tenants.

I will not tire you with unnecessary statistics. I have quoted only enough to show you the present conditions as nearly as possible. I will now analyze the measure I have introduced and you can judge if it will bring the relief needed.

The first 13 sections of this act deal with the necessary machinery for the conduct of the business. In short, they provide for a national land-bank comptroller, at a salary of $5,000 per year; a deputy comptroller, at a salary of $3,500 per year; not more than 12 national land-bank managers, each to receive $3,500 per year; a deputy land-bank manager in each district, to receive, $2,500 per annum. Also the necessary clerical force.

Section 16 provides that loans can be made only for the following purposes:

First. To pay off existing indebtedness.

Second. To improve farm property owned by the applicant.

Third. To pay part of the purchase money for land, and the mortgage may in such case cover the land so purchased.

Fourth. To purchase live stock and grain or farm implements.

Section 17 limits all loans to first mortgages, provides that no loan shall be made in excess of 50 per cent of the appraised value of the land and that no loan shall be made in excess of $10,000, preference being given to those wishing to borrow $5,000 or less.

Section 18 provides for the calling in of a loan when the terms of same have not been complied with.

Section 19 covers the appraisement of the lands and the conveying of mortgages under the terms of the act.

Section 20 provides for the establishment of rules and regulations for the registration of land titles, conveyance of lands, and the waiving of exemptions in executing mortgages. In case any group of States comprising a national land-bank district shall incorporate these rules and regulations into law the interest rate in such district shall be 4 per cent, and the comptroller is given power to form such districts whenever a sufficient number of States, contiguous in territory, have so legislated.

Section 21 provides that all postmasters shall, when called upon, make report as to the manner in which the borrower is living up to the terms of his loan and conserving the security of the same. Such reports to be made without charge, except that said postmasters shall be given the amount of actual expenses incurred.

Section 23 provides that the comptroller shall from time to time, as needed, issue bonds to each of the national land banks. These bonds to be secured by mortgages or deeds of trust made to the comptroller as trustee for the United States.

Section 24 provides that said bonds shall carry an interest rate of 3½ per cent per annum. They are to be secured by all of the mortgage security of the bank which issues them and are to be free from taxation, National, State, county, or municipal.

Section 25 provides that all loans are to be made in bonds, or the national land-bank manager may dispose of same in open market, giving to the borrower the full amount received for such bonds.

Section 26 gives to the borrowers the option of paying off the loan after one year has elapsed, and gives the option of paying same in cash or in bonds issued in the same year in which the loan was made.

Section 27 gives to the comptroller the power to call in bonds at par at such time as he deems advisable.

Section 28 makes provision for the retirement of bonds from time to time as interest and amortization payments accumulate.

Section 29 limits the interest rate on mortgages to 4½ per cent, except as provided for in section 20.

Section 31 provides that loans can be made for any period between 5 and 40 years. All loans made for a period in excess of 10 years to be based on the amortization plan.

Section 32 gives to the land-bank manager and comptroller the power to extend the period for the payment of principal and interest for a period of not more than one year in case of crop failure or other causes beyond the control of the mortgagor.

Section 33 provides for the collection of loans and for foreclosure when such action is necessary.

Section 34 makes it incumbent upon land-bank managers to issue monthly statements as to the condition of the banks and to give full publicity to same.

Section 36 makes the land-bank bonds eligible:

First. As security for the deposit of postal savings funds.

Second. As a legal investment for time deposits of national banking associations.

Third. As a legal investment for trust funds and estates under the charge of the courts of the United States.

Fourth. As a security for loans from national banks under the provisions of section 24 of the Federal reserve act.

Section 37 makes provision for loans upon farm buildings and improvements up to 20 per cent of their valuation, provided that same are insured and such insurance assigned to the comptroller as trustee for the United States.

Section 39 provides for the use of the joint earnings of all banks for the purpose of paying the expenses of all. All sums in excess of the amount needed for expense to be returned to the borrowers in land-bank districts which have earned a profit.

Section 41 stipulates that the United States shall guarantee the payment of all principal and interest of loans procured under this act.

The preceding covers all salient points of the measure proposed. It does not inflate the currency, and while the security behind the loans is equal to the best provided for in the bill recommended by the commission this measure gives far greater security to the investor in the bonds.

But the greatest advantage offered by the proposed measure is that it would at once bring relief to the farmers and not hold out to them possible advantages in the years to come. We are dealing with conditions, and if we are not to have a tremendous increase in tenant farmers in the United States we must at once make provision to finance the needs of agriculture.

The question will naturally arise: Can such a measure be put in operation without loss to the Government? I am convinced that it can, and I would like to call your attention to one possible district land bank, covering four States:

State.	Farmed by owners.	By tenants.	Mortgage debt.
Iowa	134,929	82,115	$204,242,722.00
Kansas	112,443	65,398	70,819,706.00
Missouri	194,286	82,958	112,565,406.00
Nebraska	80,237	49,441	62,373,472.00
Total amount mortgage debt in 4 States			450,001,306.00
1 per cent on above			4,500,013.06

At one-fourth of 1 per cent the amount of mortgage debt would more than pay the expense of 12 regional land banks and the necessary Washington machinery.

And as interest rates range from 6 per cent upward, a rate of 4½ per cent would mean an approximate saving to landowners of $11,250,000 annually in these four States alone.

It can not be pointed out how any possible land bank can be operated at a loss, and far from the Government being called upon to make its guaranty good at a financial loss there is every reason to believe that the system would from the outset show a healthy financial gain and a return of excess profits to the borrowers.

If the security provided for in the bill suggested by the commission is good, then the security provided for in the measure I offer is better. If it is not good, then it invites disaster, and we should not offer to the farmers of the country a half-way measure. We have promised them relief and it is for us to give it to them in generous measure and not ask them to be content with the drippings which may fall from the table of the interest-seeking Dives.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House for 45 minutes next Tuesday morning after the reading of the Journal and the transaction of routine business on the subject of preparedness and international peace.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that next Tuesday after the reading of the Journal and the clearing up of the business on the Speaker's table he may be allowed to address the House for 45 minutes on preparedness and kindred subjects. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, it is probable that next week there will be an appropriation bill, an urgent deficiency bill, that will demand the urgent attention of the House; and perhaps even then, under the consideration of that bill, there will be time for general debate, when the gentleman can get in, but at this time I do not think it is advisable to give that permission so far in advance.

The SPEAKER. Of course, all of these speeches that are made under unanimous consent are subject to the limitations not to interfere with appropriation bills or privileged matters.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it is not to interfere with privileged bills, I will not insist upon the objection.

Mr. LONDON. I so understand my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bill was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining:

S. 52. An act to provide for a commission to codify and suggest amendments to the general mining laws.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 14, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination, plan, and estimate of cost of improvement of South Fork of Edisto River, S. C., to a point opposite the city of Springfield (H. Doc. No. 559); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Shallotte River, N. C., with a view to the extension of the improvement to the town of Shallotte (H. Doc. No. 560); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a suggestion of an amendment to be incorporated in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, referring to estimate for "Contingent and miscellaneous expense, Naval Observatory, 1917" (H. Doc. No. 561); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Building submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for fuel, lights, repairs, etc., State, War, and Navy Department Building, Navy Department Annex, fiscal year ending June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 562); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of judgments rendered against the Government by the district courts of the United States (H. Doc. No. 563); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting communications from the Assistant Attorney General submitting lists of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian depredation cases (H. Doc. No. 564); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.
